The one body is not a sect. The very word sect implies more than one. No sect of believers in Christ is old enough to be the one body. No sect is large enough or comprehensive enough to be the one body. The Holy Spirit never created a sect and no one was ever baptized into a sect by the Spirit. "For by one Spirit we were all baptized into one body." This was written to a group of saints who were fractured by schism and separated by the sectarian spirit. They could not even eat the Lord's Supper. The Holy Spirit put them into one body. They separated themselves into parties. They were members of one body separated by schisms and rent by prejudices. The apostle did not deny that they were members of one body. He simply condemned their partisan alignments which made it so difficult for the unity of the Spirit to shine through.

Just as the one body is not a sect, so it is not a coalition of sects. All modern sects are post-apostolic. The one body preceded them so it could not have been composed of them. If all modern sects came together in a federation, that federation would not be the one body. It would simply be one society of many sects. Sects serve no purpose except to divide. They are demonstrations of a work of the flesh. We should not be laboring for their union but for their death. They are fungus-growths and parasites. They should be chloroformed, not combined. They claim to exalt Jesus but they exalt opinions and seek to parcel Jesus out. They confine consecration to creeds, and insist that everyone survey the wondrous cross through their theological knot-holes. Let creeds be cast to the moles and bats, and let the sects which have crystallized around them wither and die. The one body is the work of the Holy Spirit, sects are the fruit of the party spirit!

The body of Christ is not a conglomerate of congregations, all of which are stereotypes and often sterile reproductions of one another. Congregations in apostolic days were not all alike. Their unity was in Christ. Jesus was their pattern. The seven congregations in Asia Minor were all different from one another. If they had not been, one letter would have sufficed for the lot. They were different in problems if not otherwise.

Some of them were pretty scroungy but they were all God had in a pagan culture, and although the light shone dimly Jesus did not snuff it out. These congregations did not constitute the body of Christ in Asia, because the one body is not composed of congregations. There were members of the body in every one of them and these were to walk with Jesus in white. You might as well try to unite all of the sects with a written creed as to try and unite all of the congregations with an unwritten one.

God's temple is composed of stones. The only kind of house he has on earth is a rock house. It is built on a rock which he laid as a sure foundation. It is built out of rocks he has called to life with him. They are living stones. But the stones will differ from one part of the earth to another. God has to use the rocks that are at hand. A rock house in the Ozarks is likely to be made out of field stones. There are plenty of them. One in Indiana is likely to be made of Bedford limestone. But they are both stone houses.

The living stones God employs in Africa will differ from those he uses in Asia or Australia. Their culture will be different. Some of the living stones in Africa may get up and stomp around and clap their hands while they praise God, while in Texas they may sit in the corner of the pews and doze while the preacher cranks away at “the five items of worship.” But whether they wake or sleep, whether they jump or tiptoe, if they are living stones, they are builded together as a habitation of God for the Spirit!

Even in the United States the congregations that are made up of “lively stones” are not all alike. Some are more lively than others. I know, because I visit them all. I go to some places where a lot of the stones have university degrees and sing the Hallelujah Chorus from Handel’s Messiah, or “O Sacred Head” from Bach’s Passion According to Matthew. I also go where some folks, like myself, had a hard time getting through high school, and they sing “An Empty Mansion” from Joyful Songs, or “Farther Along” from Starlit Crown by the Stamps-Baxter Music Company. But I love them all, whether they are Johann Sebastian Bach or Albert Brumley types. They are my brothers and sisters. I’m thrilled they love my Father even if they are not all alike! I do not head for the door if some of them close their eyes and lift up holy hands while they are singing. They all sing what is meaningful to them whether its meaningful to anyone else or not.

The body of Christ is not composed of movements in history, although it is affected by them, because it exists in the time-space spectrum in which historical movements operate. We are a pretty good example of what happens when you confuse a movement with the body of which Jesus is the head. Most of us are heirs of one of about sixteen restoration movements. A lot of them started about the same time, and all of them splintered and shivered into fragments. Many of them divided over the very same problems and at the same time in history. Some of them did not get to first base and others exploded on the way to second. When they came down they thought it was home plate and made the mistake of thinking they had arrived and everyone else had departed.

The body never died and it did not have to be restored. Good Presbyterians like Thomas and Alexander Campbell, Barton Warren Stone and Walter Scott, thought there must be a better way to please God than by splitting a splinter off every time someone came up with a new theological slant, so they inaugurated “a project to unite the Christians in all of the sects.” They failed to unite all of the Christians, because of what Alexander Campbell called “creed parties” in the sects. But we came along and argued that what they had done was to restore the church, and there were no Christians left in the sects to unite. Those who were Christians came with us, and those who did not come with us were not Christians. Thus, the restoration movement was transformed into “the Lord’s church” by our semantics. We fooled ourselves into believing that. We did not fool the Lord. I doubt that we fooled the Baptists when the “Reformers” pulled out of the Mahoning Association, after having previously left the Redstone Baptist Association because of rejection of the plea!

The one body is not the restoration movement and the restoration movement is not the one body. The body is bigger than any movement. It is greater than all of them put together. God knows how great it is, but no one on earth does. You can number the Disciples of Christ party, the Christian Church party and the Church of Christ party. You can compare figures and even gleefully juggle them in a kind of suppressed hostile rivalry, but you can no more count the redeemed on earth while they are scattered than you can in heaven when they are all together. John said, “After these things I looked, and behold, a great crowd! And no one was able to count it— out of every nation and of all tribes and peoples and tongues!”

It doesn't bother me that I cannot count that high. I do not need to know who they all are. The Lord knoweth them that are his! Once I knew all who were saved. It wasn't a big job back in those days. The kingdom of heaven wasn't very large. It centered mainly in the midwestern part of the United States. That was because that section of the world was fortunate enough to have us in it. I even helped put out a directory of “faithful churches.” It was one of about a dozen such directories and there were no duplications in them. Ours was always being “gummed up” by congregations being persuaded to “leave the faith” and “apostatize,” which meant going over with some of the others. Of course, we captured our share and messed their directories up also. Being faithful had nothing to do with really pleasing Jesus. It was parroting the party line!

What a relief it is now to be free from all of that and to belong only to Jesus. What a privilege it is to be allowed to stand or fall to your own master and to let everyone else do the same. I grew up in a factional world where preachers of the word were constantly being called to referee congregational dog-fights, or coming from far and near to examine, catechize or tighten the screws upon someone who had learned better and was changing his mind. I was a part of such inquisitions and I am ashamed of it. I know now that the party always skims off the brains from the top. Only the thinkers are driven out! The bland conformists who either do not reason, or play politics and keep their mouths closed, stay in and become the party greats! Actually, it has come to the point in a lot of places where the best recommendation you can have is that the local congregation has excluded you!

Jesus did not die to purchase a party to oppose support of the Herald of Truth. He did not die to purchase one to promote it either. He did not shed his blood for an instrument party or a non-instrument party, for an “organic” faction or an “inorganic” faction. Jesus did not suffer and bleed for a Sunday School faction or an anti-Sunday School faction. All parties which are exclusivistic are cooked up by men. They are brewed from unwritten creeds and simmered in opinions. All of them put together would not constitute the one body. That body has many parts, but no parties. And I am no longer interested in any party, promotion, schism or sect. I am interested in Jesus and I am willing to share that interest and my life (which is his) with anyone who exalts his lordship!

THE BODY CONSTITUENCY

The one body is composed of individuals. “Now you are the body of Christ, and individually members of it” (1 Cor. 12:27). The parts are persons. Every saved person on this whole earth is in the one body. There is not one redeemed saint outside of it. God has set them all in the body as it pleased Him. He has tempered the body together. It is not a human organization but a divine organism.

The body is God at work in the world, in space and time, as he was at work in Christ. As the living word became flesh then, so now the revealed word becomes our flesh, and God is now in us reconciling the world unto himself. We are his reconciling agents, his earthen vessels, filled with his fullness, and serving the divine purpose for the divine end. I am an organ of God. My fleshly body is an arm of God, or a leg of God, or a tongue for God.

Every child of God in the world, every son and daughter of the Lord Almighty, is in the one body, and is my brother or sister. I am one with all of them. But I am only one with them through Him. Our unity is in Christ. Even though others who are in Him do not recognize their oneness with me, I recognize it with them. I did not arrange it. I simply accept it. When God received them I received them. If he took them in with their hostility toward me I will take them the same way. It is not necessary that they recognize me. It is only necessary that they accept him. If they do that we stand together in him whether we stand together on things or not.

I am not so concerned with what they have in their minds as I am concerned with who they have in their hearts. The Holy Spirit can dwell in some pretty ignorant people. If He cannot it will be “Katy, bar the door” for a lot of us, and we will be standing outside in our ignorance looking in, instead of standing inside in our ignorance looking out. None of us know too much, and if we brag about what we do know, we prove it! “Knowledge puffs up, but love builds up. But if anyone thinks he knows anything, he has not known anything as he ought to know it” (1 Cor. 8:1, 2).

The apostle adds to that, “But if anyone loves God, he is known by him.” Praise the Lord! The one body is not composed of those who have scored a passing grade on a theological comprehension test. It is not made up of those who have attained a certain intellectual status. It is not how much you know but who you know. “And this is life everlasting, that they should know you, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom you have sent.” Everlasting life is a personal relationship. It is not a memory feat. You can be a member of the body and not know one letter of the alphabet from another. You can be a member of it and not be able to write your own name. Cheer up! If you know him like I know him your name will be written down in glory where the Lamb keeps his book of life.

I refuse to allow any sectarian wall to debar me from any of my brethren. Such walls are not real. God did not construct a one of them. They are monuments to human pride and arrogance. They stand because of vain traditions which love the praise of men more than the praise of God. They are all artificial. They are all superficial. But they are not there for one who ignores them. There are no sectarian walls except in human hearts and my heart has been purged from the party spirit by the crimson stream flowing from Immanuel's veins.

God does not want great lawyers, but grace-filled lovers. "The law came by Moses but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." If I follow Jesus my task is not to lay down the law but to take grace and truth to men. My only principle of action is the Spirit of life. To take that spirit to men I must leave my comfortable little heaven and make myself vulnerable. I must go where I would rather not go because that is where he leads. I must drink of a cup which I would rather have pass away, because that is what he did. I cannot wait until men see things as I do or agree with me. On that basis he would never have left heaven and come to earth. I must go among my brethren, all of them, for if I refuse to do that I will be guilty of the works of the flesh, and the fruit of the Spirit will wither and die. I want my watchword to be, "Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and tumult and evil-speaking be put away from you, along with all evil-hearted feelings, and be kind to one another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God forgave you in Christ."

I think that when one changes his view of the one body as I have changed mine, he ought to be frank, open and explicit. He should be willing to bear the brunt of attack which will be directed toward him. He should steel himself inwardly for false accusation and expect his motives to be maligned. Satan does not easily surrender one who has been steeped in the party spirit. Freedom is never cheap and liberty has its price. But I want to be understood. I have no desire to equivocate, no intention of concealing my views.

There is one body! It is composed of every sincere immersed believer on earth. Every person who believes with all of his heart that Jesus is the Messiah, and God's Son, and is immersed because of that faith, has been baptized into Christ.

His sins are forgiven and he receives the Holy Spirit as God's gift. Every such person is a member of the one body by an act of God. If he suffers I suffer with him. If he rejoices I rejoice with him. The one body is not circumscribed by the limits of the non-instrument Church of Christ. It is not restricted to any one of its two dozen parties, nor to all of them put together. The body of Christ does not appear in the list of religious organizations in the United States Census Bureau report. It will never appear there!

I believe in the restoration principle and ideal. I am convinced that renewal must come as it has come in other periods of history. It can only come through recovery of the apostolic proclamation, purpose and power. The position held by the twelve apostles was unique. They still hold it. They have no successors to their office. They were envoys of the King and their writings are authoritative in my life. God set them in the church first. The foundation they laid is the one upon which I shall continue to build. I have neither time nor respect for any theory which sets aside the new covenant scriptures as the basis for my whole life. But I know the difference between the restoration movement started by good men and the one body created by the living God.

For me the revelation of God is complete. I hold no brief for modern prophetic utterances, whether given by Joseph Smith or my own brethren. The new covenant scriptures are perfect for their purpose and their purpose is to make us perfect — unto every good work. They are not a written code of legal requirements, but a collection of love letters for believers. They do not so much represent the will of God imposed as the heart of God exposed. They are not an indication of the Father cracking a whip but extending His hand to help in time of need. Reading the apostolic letters I am able to think God's thoughts after him. I can draw nigh to him so that he can draw nigh to me. And he never fails to do so!

Yes, there is one body, and there is only one! God is its creator, Jesus is its head, the Holy Spirit is its life, and all who are sanctified and justified are its members, its organs in the world. Jerusalem which is above is free and she is the mother of us all. We are children of promise and not of a slavewoman. We are all the sons of God through faith in Christ Jesus, for as many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. As many! Every person on this earth who was baptized into Christ Jesus has put him on! The extent of the body is determined by the number of those who have put on Christ Jesus by being baptized into him. I am convinced there are multiplied thousands of them of whom I have never heard. But I will see them in the grand reunion, the great festival of the home-going! What a gathering from every nation, clime and tongue!

The saints have put on the new man that is being renewed in knowledge according to the image of him who created that new man. They are the elect of God and they are complete in the fullness of him who is the head of all rule and authority. I am one of that number, a sinner saved by grace which is so startling that I have not begun to understand it. I want to be found in him, not knowing my own righteousness, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness of God which is by faith. I want to know him and the power of his resurrection.

It still seems almost unbelievable that He stooped down and took me up in the everlasting arms along with all the rest of you who have set to your seal that God is true. But I thank him and praise him, that unworthy as I was, he came looking for me and did not stop calling until I answered and he found me. There is room in the body for all of us who love him. It is the kingdom of heaven, the kingdom of God, the community of the reconciled ones, and may all of us who are in it be reconciled to one another as we have to Him. Let us be drawn closer by the atoning blood which flowed for all!

The Ultimate Design

Mission Messenger (July 1974)

Volume 36

[Abstract]

A few years ago I was summoned to a hospital to see a brother who had been involved in a highway accident. He had fallen asleep at the wheel and “totaled” his car. I stood by his bedside praying with the family that the concussion he had sustained would not prove fatal. After what seemed an interminable wait, he opened his eyes and stared at the unfamiliar surroundings. Then he asked the first question sparked by returning consciousness, “What am I doing here?”

That is the question of multiplied thousands in our world today. They are caught up in the wreckage of a social structure which has undergone three major conflicts in this unfinished century. They have read of the holocaust at Dachau and Buchenwald where malign forces sought to practice genocide and six million lives were snuffed out in a frightful experiment designated “the ultimate solution.” They know of the massacre at My Lai and are aware of the suffering endured by prisoners in “tiger cages.” They have seen a reversal of what men call evolution and an enthronement of devolution.

They also know that with the cracking of the atom and the release of nuclear energy, science brought the material universe to the place where hope and despair are balanced on the sharp cutting edge of the knife of destiny. Two days before Albert Einstein died, there was read in Caxton Hall, London, the Manifesto drawn up by Bertrand Russell and himself. In it they appealed “as human beings, to human beings; remember your humanity and forget the rest. If you do so, the way lies open to a new Paradise; if you cannot, there lies before you the risk of everlasting death.” It was tragic to know of these two humanists appealing to humanity to create a Paradise when it was humanity that created the hell of which they warned.

It is quite obvious that science does not have the answer to the question the world is asking. The scientist is no longer a god. He is hardly a hero. His feet of clay are not qualified to support the image conjured up for him at the outset of the century. He is now more likely to be thought of as a kind of watered-down Frankenstein or a mad engineer vainly pressing buttons to try and direct technology which Alvin Toffler, in his book Future Shock, describes as “that great, growling engine of change.”

In Technopolis, Nigel Calder writes, “The apparent inability of the human species to make discriminating use of science induces a sense of helplessness. The impression is that we are passengers in a runaway train . . . there seems to be no one driving in the cab.” Ralph Lapp says, “No one— not even the most brilliant scientist alive today— really knows where science is taking us. We are aboard a train which is gathering speed, running down a track on which there are an unknown number of switches leading to unknown destinations. No single scientist is in the engine cab and there may be demons at the switch. Most of society is in the caboose looking backward.”

In a time of cosmic upheaval, what is the reaction of modern men and women? I have always been intrigued by the news reports from the Cyrenaican front during the North African battle in World War II. The Axis and Allied forces were shelling each other in the desert so close to Alexandria that the sound of the guns and the “whump” of the shells could be heard. But inside the city the night life went on unabated. Men and women were drinking and dancing, gambling and fornicating, as if they were phantoms prancing on the periphery of perdition. Their fatalistic philosophy had made them giddy. “Let us eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we may die.”

The same heady wine seems to intoxicate Hugh Hefner and the human moths drawn to the bright light of Playboy Magazine. Hefner is a hedonist, one who believes that pleasure is the sole good in life and that moral duty is fulfilled in the gratification of pleasure-seeking instincts and dispositions. The hedonist is not opposed to religion. Gratification is his religion. How deeply this fatal venom has been injected into the bloodstream of our social corpus can be understood only as you listen to brilliant young people argue heatedly on the campus that “If it makes you feel good do it, because it is good!” Or, “What does not make someone else unhappy cannot be evil for you!”

The modern world nurtured on the “spiked pap” that God is dead, that the supernatural is non-existent and there is no message from above or from outside, has no answer to the question, “What am I doing here?” The scientist has no answer! The humanist has no answer! The hedonist has no answer! In a fragmented, twisted, distorted cosmos severed from its creator, there is no sense of direction. The hand of the compass does not point. It merely whirls. Gilbert K. Chesterton pointed out that the opposite to belief in God is not belief in nothing, but belief in anything!

To dismiss God is not to straighten out your thinking, but to corkscrew your mind. It is but to scramble your brain. It is not to become free but to become fickle. I know why I am here! I do not have one wavering doubt about it. It is not to make money, accumulate treasure, bask in beauty, or pursue pleasure, although none of these are sinful except as they banish God from the throne room of my heart and usurp His dominion over my life and being. They may even be good so long as they are windows through which I can see His blessings and not curtains which shut out the sunlight.

What am I doing here? Ask what I should be doing here. Why was I created? Why do I dwell in a clay tenement, or inhabit a frail tent? How shall I order this wonderful span of time called life, so the night of death will not simply fall upon a desert waste where are found only the newly-made graves of faith and hope? The answer is simple but sublime, easy to evolve but eternally involved.

Let all nature tune its ear to hear! Let no alien sound interfere with the announcement! Let the birds of the air cease their cheerful song. Let the wheels of industry halt their humming. Let angels pause in flight and men bend their earthly frames in homage. The supreme purpose of man in the intricate universe, the design of his very origin and ultimate in his attainment is to glorify God, the creator and redeemer. He who glorifies God justifies his existence, he who does not forfeits his right to eternal life with rational beings. He is dead even while he lives.

To glorify is to magnify, to praise or to exalt! It is the work of the whole man to glorify God, and not of the spiritual remote from the natural. “Run from fornication. Every other sin a man can commit is outside his body, but a fornicator sins against his own body. Do you not realize that your body is a shrine of the indwelling Spirit who is God’s gift to you? You do not belong to yourselves; you were bought with a price. That is why you should glorify God with your body and spirit. They are His.”

Sex employed as God ordains it glorifies God. A purchased slave of God does not abstain from pre-marital or extra-marital sex because he is afraid of contracting a venereal disease, or because she is afraid of becoming pregnant, but because abuse and misuse dishonors God. Marriage is honorable in all. It is whoremongers and adulterers whom God will judge.

We have lifted the glory of God out of the world of reality and floated it off into a world of fantasy until we equate it with stereotyped performances at stated intervals in places we have tried to consecrate with humanly-devised dedication ceremonies. We think of glorifying God as achieving the divine purpose in comfortable pews lined up like in a theater, as we sing age-old hymns which have come to us as a heritage from simpler yesterdays. We glorify God on Sunday but feel the tug of the world at other times when stained glass windows do not filter God's sun in vari-colored flecks upon the backs of our hands.

But none of this is part of God's plan or purpose! Every word we speak and every deed we do is worship when done under the Lordship of Jesus. We do not go to church. We are the church and it is the church which does the going. We do not attend worship, it attends us, every day and hour. It is within us, the bowing down and prostration of the spirit before God. There are no "acts of worship" for the Christian, for the simple reason that there are no acts that are not worship. We glorify God not only when gathered with the saints whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life, but when scattered to our tasks. One of the greatest truths we can learn is that Jesus came to remove the barrier between the secular and the sacred.

We glorify him in our bodies. The husband and wife who love one another deeply and honor their commitment to each other achieve more than sexual gratification in their conjugal embrace. They glorify God and their love is sanctified by the word of God. The woman who devotes herself to her family, wiping noses, changing diapers, washing dishes and sweeping floors, glorifies God. It is not necessary to leave home with a stack of dirty dishes in the sink to go out and "witness for Christ." Sometimes the best witness you could give that Jesus is real in your life would be to wash the dishes, clean up the mess in the closets and sweep under the beds.

Neglect of daily responsibility is not compensated by formal expression of praise on the first day of the week. It is not partaking of the Lord's Supper which makes our life acceptable to God, it is our life which makes partaking of the Lord's Supper acceptable to God. More important than a "calling night" once per week is a "calling life" every day. "Whatever you are doing, whether you speak or act, do everything in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through him." The litany of the lawnmower or the vacuum cleaner may be as sweet in the ears of God as singing in the choir, if it is accompanied by a thankful heart.

Our motive should be to praise God and not to receive praise. Only the deed done without expectation of remembrance, remuneration or repayment has any real value. It was this Jesus had in mind when he said, "Be careful not to make a show of your religion before men; if you do, no reward awaits you in your Father's house in heaven" (Matthew 6:1). He said, "Like a lamp you must shed light among men, so that, when they see the good you do, they may glorify your Father who is in heaven." Good works bring help to the needy and praise to the God of all mercy.

We should strive to glorify God by the way we die as well as by the way we live. Paul said, "I eagerly hope that I shall have no cause to be ashamed, but shall speak so boldly and openly that Christ will be magnified through my life, or through my death" (Philippians 1:20). That is my own hope. I say that in all humility and weakness. I do not want to be ashamed and I do not want to shame him. Praise his wonderful name! I hope to glorify him in life, for I have been raised to life through him. My life lies hidden with him in God. He is my everything, he is my all. When he is manifested I want to be manifested with him in glory.

It is easy for us to be turned aside from the thought of glorifying him through death. We no longer appear before Roman tribunals and refuse to declare that Caesar is lord. We are not called upon to salute his statue and burn the pinch of incense which recognized him as one of the pantheon of deities.

Paul had his head severed from his body by the swift stroke of the sword of the royal headsman and executioner. He could fill up in his body what was lacking of the sufferings of Christ. But death does not seem very heroic to us.

When William Tyndale was sentenced to be strangled and burned he went to the stake without flinching. His last words were, "Lord, open the eyes of the king of England!" He glorified God in his death!

When Hugh Latimer, the Protestant martyr, was condemned to be burned at the stake with Nicholas Ridley, he turned to his companion and said, "Be of good cheer, Master Ridley, for today they shall kindle a fire in Britain which shall never be put out." His burning flesh was incense in the nostrils of heaven. He glorified God through his death.

When Robert Ferrar was burned in the market place at Caermarthen, on March 30, 1555, he watched his own hands burn off and held up the blackened stumps. When Richard Jones, a knight's son, lamented at such suffering Ferrar said to him, "If you see me even stir in the pain of burning, then give no credit to the doctrine I have taught." He continued to pray audibly while the flames seared his flesh and tissues, until Richard Gravell, who could stand the sight no longer, struck him on the head with his staff and his body went down to be consumed to ashes in the flames. He glorified God in his death!

But how can one do that today in a sterile hospital in the intensive care division where a member of the family can come in only five minutes of each hour? Is not all dignity removed from dying when one is unconscious and forced to exist by machinery fastened to his frame and needles sticking in his veins? When one's lungs cease to function and are made to expand and contract like a rubber balloon by the rhythmic pulsation of a machine, is he really alive, or is he a mere extension of a cleverly-contrived apparatus? Does his life exhibit the image of God or the invention of a laboratory? When his heart muscle lies flabby and is only energized by electrical impulse is he living, or is he like a light bulb or an egg beater? Will he stop when you pull the plug from the wall socket?

Death under these conditions seems everything else but heroic, and yet I know of no alternative. Medical science being what it is and the moral status of society being what it is, we will no doubt continue to phase out departure and prolong farewells, until parting becomes not the “sweet sorrow” of the poet, but the agonizing, emotion-draining, bone-tiring experience of those who have to remain in the hospital lounge until a trained professional comes out to inform them that the spirit has wrenched itself free from the clay envelope.

But I have found a solution for myself. It may not be meaningful for you, but it certainly is for me. I think most people fear death because it is a new experience. They have never gone through it before, so it is strange and a little frightening, as new experiences always are in anticipation. They do not know how to die, but the reason they do not know how to die is because they do not know how to live. The way to learn how to die is to learn how to live. If you live in the Lord you can die in the Lord. The blessings you had with the Lord in life you will then have in death. John actually heard a voice from heaven saying, “Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord.”

I have concluded that if I allow Him to live in me, which really means to love all men through me, for that is what life is all about, I can magnify and glorify him by my death. The other day I was reading about Jesus and Peter, especially when Jesus said to him, “And further, I tell you this very truth: ‘when you were young you fastened your belt about you and walked where you chose; but when you are old you will stretch out your arms, and a stranger will bind you fast, and carry you where you have no wish to go!’ He said this to indicate the manner of death by which Peter was to glorify God. Then he added, ‘Follow me.’”

Of course, I will not be able to glorify God by being crucified head downward like Peter was. That is not my “manner of death.” But I have a deep feeling that if Peter had not heeded the added instruction to “Follow me,” it would not have made any difference how he died. It would not have glorified God. On the other hand if I do follow Jesus, it does not make any difference what manner of death I have, it will glorify God. I am quite convinced that when I am old I may stretch out my arms and a strange ambulance attendant will bind me fast and carry me where I have no wish to go. When that happens I trust that I will be rational and commit myself into the hands of Jesus as I prepare to die as I have sought to do while I am able to buckle my belt about me and walk where I choose. I have eternal life now in Jesus. I shall have eternal life then with Jesus!

It is Jesus who makes life glorious and it is Jesus who makes death glorious. He puts life here in the proper perspective and makes life over there a blessing.

Even the problem of suffering which seems so out of place in a universe created by God has no particular concern in my heart. If God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, and I am convinced that He was, I shall expect to share what He experienced here in order to experience what he shares over there. Fellowship is the sharing of a common life, and to be in fellowship with Jesus is to share everything with Him. Listen to this, “When we cry, Abba, Father, that is the Spirit himself bearing witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs, heirs of God, heirs along with Christ; if only we share his suffering in order to share his glory too. For I judge that the sufferings of this present time are not worth considering in comparison with the glory that is to be revealed to us.”

The wonderful thing about what I am saying is that you do not have to wait until after you die to share the life of God. By being faithful to the task that comes to hand you can experience glory here and now. I think the best illustration of this I have ever read was in the book It Will Be Daybreak Soon, written by one of my favorite authors of yesterday, Archibald Rutledge. I am going to conclude with this excerpt from his pen.

On a day memorable to me, I boarded a tiny tugboat I used often on a southern river and saw that we had a new Negro engineer. He sat in the doorway of the engine room reading the Bible; he was fat, and black, but immaculate and in his eyes was the splendor of ancient wisdom and peace with the world. I noticed that the characteristic odors that had always emanated from the engine room were no longer there. And the engine! It gleamed and shone; from beneath its seat all the bilge-water was gone. Instead of grime and filth and stench I found beauty and order. When I asked the engineer how in the world he had managed to clean up the old room and the old engine, he answered in words that would go far toward solving life's main problems for many people.

“Cap’n,” he said, nodding fondly in the direction of the engine, “it’s just this way: I got a glory.”

Making that engine the best on the river was his glory in life, and having a glory he had everything. The only way out of suffering that I know is to find a glory, and to give to it the strength we might otherwise spend in despair.

I’ve got a glory, too!

One Spirit

Mission Messenger (August 1974)

Volume 36

[Abstract]

As I look back upon it, from this ever-increasing distance, I do not think the church of my boyhood ever thought a great deal about the Holy Spirit. He was not the subject of our conversation except in a negative sort of way. We were not so much opposed to the Spirit as we were ignorant of his nature and work. That is not all about which we were ignorant. In our pitiable little mining village there were a lot of people who could not read. Many of them were my relatives. Like other illiterate folk they were very superstitious. Life was inhibited and made miserable by fears of the unknown and unseen.

They believed in ghosts, haunts, signs and portents. Almost anything that happened was a sign of “bad luck” and a lot of good people carried a “buckeye” to ward off rheumatism, and a rabbit’s foot to bring good fortune. That always impressed me as being foolish because the rabbit had four feet and they did not bring him luck. All of this did not interfere with our religion. It enhanced it. Those who read the Bible every day also consulted the signs of the zodiac in the Lydia E. Pinkham Almanac with the same fervor.

The essential thing was to get the unknown into a position where you could handle it. You had to control it or it would control you. If you could find just the right charm or dig up the proper amulet you could ward off malign influences or even control those which were beneficent. We shut the Spirit up in a book. We could then carry it in an overcoat pocket or place it on the shelf by the Seth Thomas clock. As long as the Spirit was bound in black leather and stamped in gold he was fairly harmless.

We were caught up in the proof-text fallacy. We reasoned that since God's revelation was perfect we could find a passage somewhere to cover every contingency. It took a considerable amount of hammering and whittling and arranging to make some of them fit, but I do not recall a single failure. We were enslaved by what a good Texas brother calls "pattern theology" which means in its final analysis, searching the scriptures until you find something that will justify what you think, or what you are doing!

Our text for putting the Spirit in his place was John 6:63, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." That took care of it. The Spirit was words. The more passages you could quote the more Spirit you had. No one ever questioned this explanation. We never really examined the context. The verse contained the word spirit. Another verse said there was one Spirit so that was that. We were never guilty of taking things out of context like Methodists and Baptists.

Taking things out of context was a vicious circle trodden by sectarians like a blind mule at a sorghum mill. You were a Methodist because you took things out of context, and you took things out of context because you were a Methodist. The only people in the village who did not take things out of context were those who went to "The Church of Christ" which met in the former saloon building they had remodeled. Some of them did not know what "context" meant, but whatever it was, you did not take things out of it if you were loyal.

It took a long time before I outgrew our error about the passage and realized that Jesus was contrasting the bread of life which he dispensed, with the manna which Moses provided through God's power in the wilderness. "Your fathers ate manna in the wilderness, but still they died . . . he that believeth in me has everlasting life . . . the words I speak unto you are spiritual words, producing life."

One reason we were skittish about the Holy Spirit and shied away when he was mentioned was the way our neighbors carried on who claimed to be guided directly by his influence. There were not too many of these "holy rollers" as we always kindly and generously referred to them, but they made up in noise what they lacked in numbers and education. Most everyone went to bed at the decent hour of half-past seven in the autumn, but the Pentecostals did not really get wound up and on a high lonesome until the unearthly hour of 9:00 p.m., and when they got under the power they carried on until midnight and you could hear them a mile away if the wind was in the right direction.

One night they undertook to cast a demon out of a fifteen-year-old girl, a pitiable slatternly creature who had been "playing around" with some of the men in the group. Apparently the demon was one of the tough kind. After surrounding her and praying for almost an hour at the top of their voices, the group decided to beat the devil out of her. She almost died before the neighbors summoned the village constable who was delayed because he couldn't find his pipe in the dark. The Ku Klux Klan set a bunch of switches against the front door of one of the leaders and burned a makeshift cross in his front yard. That cooled "the Spirit" off for a few months and the noise subsided until everyone caught up on his sleep.

It was my respect for the revelation of God which finally prevailed to lead me into a closer walk with Jesus through the Spirit. There were too many scriptures which would not fit into the expository crate we had constructed and nailed together out of traditional slats. I began to develop a kind of honesty which the factional spirit always quenches and the fear of man destroys. We always had two mental cans into which we sorted the things said of the Spirit. One bore the label "For the apostles." The other was tagged "For us." Anything we did not understand or which was emphasized by "the sectarians" went in the can "For the apostles." Whatever was left over went into the can "For us."

The apostles' can was full of things. It was hard to cram them all in. Our can was almost empty and you had to turn it upside down and beat on the bottom to get a little blessing to fall out. It was as if the Spirit had dumped all he had on the apostles and didn't keep much back for anyone else. Of course, I still believe that the Spirit bestowed much upon the envoys of Jesus by reason of their special function as ambassadors. But I also know he has ample blessings for me. In fact "my can runneth over."

There are a lot of things about the Spirit I do not know, but I'm finding more every time I study the Word. I'm a fairly practical down-to-earth sort of person and I do not soar off into space and blame the Spirit for it. I'm not "too hep" on closing my eyes and holding up my hands and shaking my head, and I do not have dreams, or hear voices, or get the weak trembles and goose pimples. I think the Spirit helps me in every phase of life to act more rationally, and keep my cool a little better. Best of all he makes it possible for me to really love my enemies, and even the brethren, without having to sham it!

The Holy Spirit dwells in me. My body is his temple. I am not my own. I have been bought with a price. The Spirit was one of God's birthday gifts to me when I was born from above. He has lived in me ever since although I have grieved him a lot of times. But he did not become aggravated and pack up and leave and slam the door shut! He patiently waited and endured my tantrums and ignorance until I could at least partially grow up!

I have not yet received the inheritance which is in my Father's will, even though it has my name-tag affixed to it. He sought me and bought me and adopted me. I've got the promise that with the redemption of the purchased possession— my body — from the grave I will know the ultimate Joy. But while I am waiting to go through the Shadow the Holy Spirit dwells in me, marking me out as his. He is a seal of ownership. He is also the guarantee that when I have met the last enemy at some disputed barricade, and overcome him through the power that raised Jesus from the garden tomb, I will stand in the presence of the glorious Light, the Lamb of God.

The great blessing now is the utter loss of any sense of loneliness. Jesus said when he got ready for the upward trip, "I will not leave you orphans." He promised he would ask the Father and he would send another Helper. The word means "One to stand beside another." He did not forget and the Father honored his request. It does not make any difference how dark the night becomes, I am not alone. When storms rage, and the wind howls and rain hurls in gusts against the windows, I am not alone. Jesus said the other helper would be with us and in us! That's closer than any earthly friend can ever come!

I never walk alone! I've got someone to laugh with me and someone to cry with me! I've got someone who understands what I would like to tell others but cannot, or dare not tell them! He is my real helper when I get too weak down inside to couch my deep longings into words, when I run the scale of human vocabulary and learn that man has not yet developed a language that is great enough and deep enough to capture and confine every emotion and wrap it up in a neat linguistic package and hand it to God. There are groanings which cannot be uttered.

There's no use trying to convince me by subtle argument that Jesus did not mean what he promised and that all he gave me was a book. If that were true I would still be an orphan. An orphan with a book is still an orphan. An orphan needs someone. He needs someone who understands and someone who cares. The Spirit prompted men who knew Jesus to write love letters to those whom they cherished. Those letters which were originally scattered were finally collected, argued about, fussed over and compiled in a book. I love it! I read it with an absorbing passion. It is my guide. I shall never forsake it!

But it is precisely because I believe what it says that I am sure the Spirit lives in me, dwells in me, abides with me, and strengthens me with might in the inner man. The book is the book of the Spirit. It is a gift from God, just as the Spirit is a gift from God. I believe what the book of the Spirit says about the Spirit, and I intend to go on believing it until I meet my glorious Lord!

I am not going to get into a big dither about how the Spirit works. A lot of good brethren get so uptight and argumentative and develop such an attitude toward those who disagree with them that the Spirit couldn't work in them or through them. I am just going to let him have his way with me as the song says. I do not intend to let anyone else try to live my life for me. I do not intend to get hooked on little exercises they have worked out to prime the Spirit like a rusty pump. The Spirit and I are friends, close friends! I suspect that is why I sometimes hurt him and grieve him. And that's why I'm so sorry and could kick myself when I do. I don't like to hurt any of my friends or disappoint them. But it is your best friends you usually hurt the most.

The Spirit and I walk together all of the time. He is as interested in how I mow the lawn or drive my Ford as he is in how I sing when the saints come together. He wants me to love Nell and my children and grandchildren. He may want me to help with the dishes when I have eaten a hearty meal at home, and show my appreciation in that fashion rather than heading for the living room couch to sleep off the effects while others clean up the mess I have made. I lost a lot of men right there!

I am sure the Spirit is interested in this article and is helping me to write it. I do not mean he is sitting on my shoulder whispering words in my ear. But he is very close to me and I sense his presence in all I do or say that is to the glory of the Father and the exaltation of Jesus who sits at the right hand of God. You will have to forgive me if I do not jump up and click my heels together, and clap hands and do a spiritual jig. I do not think it is necessary to fall on the floor and roll my eyeballs around and kick with my heels. Instead, the Spirit encourages me to be calm, patient and consistent. It isn't easy for either him or myself. I know he is thrilled there's only one me, and I know I am happy there is only one Spirit. That one Spirit is the Spirit of oneness, and we will never have the spirit of love until we have the love of the Spirit!

One Hope

Mission Messenger (August 1974)

Volume 36

[Abstract]

Eternity is the divine treasure house, and hope is the window, by means of which mortals are permitted to see, as through a glass darkly, the things which God is preparing. — William Mountford.

It was Thomas Carlyle who wrote, “Man is based on hope. He has no other possession than hope.” In the Tate Gallery in London hangs the painting by Frederic Watts, simply called Hope. It portrays a wistfully beautiful young woman sitting on a globe. There is one lone star in the sky but the girl cannot see it because she is blindfolded. In her hand she holds a harp on which all of the strings are broken but one. She is gently plucking that string. Her head is inclined to hear its sound. Hope never surrenders even though blinded by circumstances until it cannot see a star. So long as there is one string left on the lute, hope refuses to believe there will be no more music.

Hope is joyous anticipation. It is desire and expectation compounded in exact proportions. It is as if an angelic cookbook said, “Take one cup of desire and mix well with one cup of expectation.” If one does not desire a thing he will certainly not hope for it. If he has not even the remotest expectation of receiving it he cannot hope for it. There is more to hope than merely wanting something.

I think the one hope is hope in the ultimate degree. It is the majestic and transcendent hope. It is the hope which allows you to be free from panic because you know there is a way out of the labyrinth, a secret door which will open when you are trapped by circumstances and there is no way to turn, no way to escape or evade. If I am correct, the one hope is victory over death at the very moment it looks like death is the victor. It is using death which appears to be the key that locks you in as the key that lets you out. It is knowing you cannot lose the final struggle!

I suspect I was afraid of death for a long time. It was what you might call a mortal fear. Death was treacherous. It was sneaky, creeping up on you when you did not expect it. Once it got in its fell blow there was a finality about it. The ties of the flesh were rudely severed. The relationships of earth were rudely broken up, remaining only in the hazy realm of memory. But that was before the real significance of His death and resurrection blasted away my fears.

Once it seemed to me that no one could get out of this mess alive. Now I know that I am not going to get out of it dead. The hope of life has led me into a life of hope. I no more have to be frightened by death than I need to be afraid of a shadow across the highway or a curtain on the stage. I'm going through death exactly as I drive through a shady valley. And I am coming back out into the sunlight. If death was the end of life, I would not be living at all. I would only be dying!

I like the way the writer of Hebrews puts it. His purpose was to encourage his readers to have the faith and patience exhibited by ancient worthies who inherited the promises. He points out that hope is grounded in the immutability, the absolute unchangeableness, of two things— God's promise and God's oath! The promise would have been enough, but men had developed a tradition of confirming their pledges and vows by taking an oath in something greater than themselves. God had no one greater than himself so he took an oath in his own being and nature. "As I live, saith the Lord."

“That by two immutable things in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us, which hope we have as an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil, whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made a high priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec” (6:18-20).

The cadence of these majestic phrases resounds in my heart like the tramp of marching feet of an unconquerable army. Of course I cannot see through the veil, but I know Jesus has gone through it for me. He is there and my hope is there with him. I cannot see the anchor nor the Rock in which it is fastened firm and steadfast. But I can feel the tug and strain on the cable of faith. I have fled to Jesus for refuge, and I mean fled! Nothing is going to shake me loose from my mooring. Nothing! I have not one tiny doubt in my heart about the conquest of death. I do not have any fear of my coming victory either.

I like the way Paul started his first letter to Timothy. “Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the commandment of God our Savior, and the Lord Jesus Christ, our hope.” My hope is Jesus. He is also my peace. He is my sanctification and redemption. He is my wisdom and power. Jesus is not simply the answer to life. He is the life. He is also the way and the truth. My hope is a living one!

This is the way Peter, the one-time fisherman, put it. “Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy, has begotten us again to a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.” That’s terrific! God’s mercy, so free and abundant, would not leave us hopeless, hapless and helpless. We have been begotten anew to a living hope. The resurrection of Jesus put it all together.

There is absolutely no sense to the universe if you eliminate the resurrection. Without it evil triumphs over good, wrong gains the victory over right, and death becomes stronger than life. Take away the resurrection and redemption is a farce, while reconciliation becomes an empty dream, a fantasy rather than a fact. By the resurrection of Jesus Christ. That is the foundation of faith, the basis of belief and the condition of confidence. And I am staking my life on it, not as a gamble but as an investment.

I know all about the skeptical accusation that this is mere wishful thinking and mental image projection. So far as I am concerned you can tell that to the birds! My hope is the result of faith which is based upon the facts of history. The testimony to these facts is not only credible but it is so valid and rational that if I rejected it I could not believe in anything which happened before I was born or which I did not personally see.

The facts which undergird my hope grow upon you the more carefully you examine them. Take for instance the case of Frank Morison, a brilliant jurist in Great Britain. As a university student he reached the conclusion that the history of Jesus rested upon very insecure foundations. He was deeply affected by German Rationalism and by the so-called scientific dictum that “miracles do not happen.” He decided to write a book about the last seven days of Jesus and strip the story of his life “of its overgrowth of primitive beliefs and dogmatic suppositions.”

He ended up writing Who Moved the Stone? In his preface he calls the book “essentially a confession, the inner story of a man who originally set out to write one kind of book and found himself compelled by the sheer force of circumstances to write quite another.” He tells why in a statement which ought to affect every honest skeptic. “It is not that the facts themselves altered, for they are recorded imperishably in the monuments and in the pages of human history. But the interpretation to be put upon the facts underwent a change. Somehow the perspective shifted — not suddenly, as in a flash of insight or inspiration, but slowly, almost imperceptibly, by the stubbornness of the facts themselves.”

The stubbornness of the facts! And these facts are stubborn. They are tenacious and persevering. They changed the course of the world when announced by simple fishermen, slaves and social outcasts. They flooded the earth with shimmering rays of hope when it was sick and sorry, tired and jaded, and choking to death upon its own idolatry. And they will change the world again if we will proclaim them joyously, gloriously and resolutely. If we will get over our infatuation with opinions and our intoxication on creeds, and proclaim the resurrection, hope will return and darkness will once again flee away.

There is one hope, and it is unitive not divisive. It is the common hope of all who trust in Jesus. It is the golden thread woven into the unity of the Spirit on the loom of everlasting life. I am not sure whether I captured that hope or whether it captured me, but it has flooded every nook and cranny of my soul with its penetrating rays. It has caused me to lift up my eyes to the hills from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord.

I am no longer hopeless. Now I am hopeful in the true meaning of the word, full of the happy anticipation of what is yet to be. My life is not ending. It is getting ready to begin. I want to share the gladness of this with every person on this whole wide earth. Jesus was resurrected! Jesus is real! Jesus is reigning! Jesus is returning! And the fingers of my heart are reaching out to Him to clasp on the realization of the glorious promises which sustain me now in expectation as they will then by their consummation.

My hope will not be extinguished by the chill wind of death blowing across my fevered brow, nor by the cold created by the shadow when I walk toward the Jordan and feel “the fog in my throat and the mist in my face.” I shall recall the words of Shelley in his Ode to the West-wind, “If Winter comes, can Spring be far behind?” When a Christian dies, he does not leave home — he goes home!

One Lord

Mission Messenger (August 1974)

Volume 36

[Abstract]

Jesus is the centerpiece of the human race and the leader of all human progress. I am well within the mark when I say that all the armies that ever marched, all the navies that were ever built, all the parliaments that have ever sat, and all the kings that have ever ruled, put together, have not affected the life of man upon this earth like this one solitary personality.— S. A. Stuber in Treasury of the Christian Faith.

One of the most thrilling chapters in the compilation we call the New Testament is Revelation 19. Every verse pulsates and throbs with dynamic action. But no part is more majestic than the review of the celestial horse guard of glory. John was permitted to witness the parade of the white horses and even his verbal description is enough to make goose pimples rise on your flesh. From the moment he writes, “And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse,” the Bible lover knows he is in for a great experience.

Riding at the head of the heavenly cavalry was one whose eyes penetrated the universe like a flame-thrower. Balanced on his head were diadems indicative of cosmic conquest. His flowing cloak was dyed red with the blood in which it had been dipped. His words issued from his mouth, scintillating and piercing, like a sharp sword. Those words cut to the heart of the false pride and political ambition out of which the nations of the earth spring. Those nations were to be governed by a power so firm and unrelenting it was best described by an iron scepter.

The conquering hero of heaven would judge and make war in righteousness. Universal justice and equity would prevail. The evil and iniquitous were to be cast into the winepress of the world, the winepress of fierceness and the wrath of Almighty God. The face of God is against them that do evil. Sin cannot stand in the presence of one who is ultimately good, who is The Good as well as The God of all creation. It will be consumed in a flash like a moth flying headlong into livid flame.

The leader was called Faithful and True, symbolic of fidelity and integrity like pure gold, purged by the refiner's fire of all dross and weakness. In the final analysis faith and truth are not mere characteristics of men, or even of angels. The ultimate faith is a person. And the ultimate truth is a person. Let aspiring philosophers, mentally masticating their meaty morsels of thought, learnedly announce there is no absolute truth. I know better. Absolute truth and absolute faith are found in a person. I know who he is. And because I know I have eternal life, the life of God. And I have it now!

His name is called The Word of God. He is called Faithful and True, but his name is called The Word of God. Absolute faith and absolute truth are identified with the living Word. The living Word is not something said by God but the one who says it. And that which is said or written, although it is the word of God and the word from God, can never equal or exhaust the living Word. No biography can ever capture a person. No painting can ever portray a person. A biography and painting can present a likeness, one with the pen and the other with the brush, but there is as much difference between a portrait and a person as there is between an architect's drawing and a building teeming with living workers. There is a greater difference because both the drawing and the structure are human. The living Word is divine.

Read it again! His name is called the Word of God! God is theos. Word is logos. His name is called theos-logos, the theology of heaven. Theology is a person. He is the man on the white horse “and the armies of heaven followed him.” That is why I am no longer concerned with the distillate of men’s minds, caught and bottled and labeled and put in rows on seminary shelves. It is silly to talk about the theology of God, the theology of the Spirit, or the theology of salvation. It is sillier yet to listen to the professional jargon couched in such terms as the pneumatic theology, eschatological theology, or soteriological theology. In reality there are no such things!

Not satisfied with fragmenting man and compartmentalizing him until he can no longer meet the demands of the culture in which he exists, we must now put theology on the dissecting table and use the scalpel and saw until faith and truth are no longer integrated. When the “rationalists” get through kicking around their views and ideas in a modernistic seminary classroom they are so confused they could not tell anyone how to be saved if they thought there was such a thing as salvation, and in their muddled, mixed-up minds a lot of them think there is not!

Well, I think there is! And I know theology. My theology is Christ Jesus! Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God! Anyone who believes that with all his heart and mind, his being and intellect, believes all that is essential to be inducted into that glorious dimension of peace and power called eternal life. His name is called Theology! The naked aborigine in the Amazonian jungle who trusts with childlike simplicity in Jesus Christ as the very source of life is a far more profound “theologian” in the sight of God than the immaculately-attired professor who grinds away at the dry powdery grist of “systematic theology” while often casting doubts upon the reality of revelation.

Theology is not a course I have studied. Theology is my elder brother. Theology was made flesh and brought his own tent with him and lived among us. Theology died for my sins and rose again for my justification. And his biography, written by four of his good friends who were his companions during his Earth-visit, even though penned under the guidance of the Spirit that is divine, does not exhaust his being or personality. They could not even record all that he did in a little more than three years on this planet. They said that if they had written it all down the world would probably not have contained the books. Think of what he has done since before the world began, and of what he is still doing!

The reporter of the heavenly scene did not stop until he wrote, "On his robe and on his leg was written, King of kings and Lord of lords." Faithful, True, The Word of God, King of kings, Lord of lords. There is one Lord and he is Lord of all. That is what Peter said in Acts 10:36. I believe it. I accept it unconditionally and without reservation. You need not sweeten it up or decorate it. Never mind the contingencies. I will take it like it is. God raised him up and made him both Lord and Christ. I believe it assuredly.

Jesus Christ is Lord! That is the confession every tongue must make. It will be on the tongues of angels, of men and of demons. Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of the Father. I have already confessed it. I have pledged my allegiance to him. I am sure that Peter meant he was Lord of all men, Jews and Greeks, bond and free, rich and poor. But he is also Lord of all things. And I know that Lord means ruler or master. It has to do with authority and power. It refers to one who governs or controls.

That is what I want Jesus to do. I want him to be lord of my whole life. If I try to be lord of my own life, that will make two lords, and there is but one Lord. I want him to be Lord of every facet of my existence and of all that I do. I want him to be Lord of my lawnmower and leaf rake. I want him to govern my ground and my garden. I want him to control my car and my cash. I don't ever want to just go and sing a few songs to him one day per week and then dismiss him for the rest of my time. I do not want to make a flunky or celestial errand boy out of him when I want something or need something. He is Lord of all and I intend to allow him to be.

“Take my life, and let it be, consecrated Lord to thee!” Not just part of it. Not just a remnant of it. All of it. When I read the Bible, I want to see Jesus at work in time and space. When I read the newspaper I want to see him at work in history. When I read the star-spangled canopy of the heavens at night I want to see Jesus at work sustaining the universe. All things were created by the power of God’s word, all things are maintained by the word of God’s power.

Jesus is Lord of light, life and love. He is the companion of my walk, the coordinator of my work and the center of my worship. It is said that upon a steep and forbidding precipice in the Alps there is a marble cross. On its outstretched arms are engraved the words “Jesus Only.” The daughter of a prominent family slipped from the steep slope and plunged to her death in a yawning crevice opening up beneath the place. Her parents, stricken with uncontrollable grief tried everything to assuage their sorrow. They traveled to distant places seeking comfort in new scenes. It was all to no effect. Then they decided to cast themselves wholly on the Lord and they found inner calm and peace. They erected the white cross with the inscription “Jesus Only.” I have a cross with those words erected in my heart as I write this.

The purpose of the apostle in this context is to direct our minds to the unity of the Spirit and to define the context or composition of that unity. At the heart of it is the fact that there is one Lord. He is the magnetic center toward which all of us are drawn. Unity is not understanding everything alike. There are varied views in Christ Jesus. There always have been and always will be. Unity is not agreement upon opinions and interpretations. It never has been and never can be. It is not esteeming days alike. It is not having the same view as to eating of meats.

The unity of the Spirit is togetherness in Christ. We are one in him and not one in opinion. We will still be searching the written word long after we have become one in the living word. Faith can embrace the Lord of life while the intellect grapples with problems of understanding. Eternal life is not knowing all about the Bible, but knowing God and Jesus Christ whom he has sent. Salvation is being made whole in Him and being one with all others in that wholeness. Isn't that great?

One Faith

Mission Messenger (September 1974)

Volume 36

[Abstract]

I believe that each one of us must eventually face the real issue, which is quite simply: do I believe after adult examination of the evidence that Jesus Christ was what he claimed to be, or am I prepared to assert quite definitely that he was wrong in his major claims, and that, though much of his teaching is beautiful, he himself was a self-deceived fanatic?— J. B. Phillips in “God Our Contemporary.”

The life in Christ is a life of crisis. It is so by its very nature. The Christian has enlisted as a soldier, and a man in God's army should not expect to be free from conflict. Sometimes the areas of conflict are without, but because we are in the flesh they are sometimes within. The primitive saints were called “The Gamblers” by the pagans, because they risked everything including earthly life itself. Crises are good. They add zest to living but they also inspire confidence when they are met victoriously.

In spite of all this I should like to avoid what I am going to write today. It is not that I have a doubt about its validity, for I have none. It is rather that I would prefer not to disturb some of my friends. But I cannot evade the task I have set for myself and be honest before God. So I shall write my sincere convictions and say, as I have often said before, that if you cannot concur I shall love you just the same. I cannot forget how perturbed I would have been a few years ago if someone I respected would have written these things.

What is the one faith which is intended to secure the unity of the Spirit, to be maintained in the bond of peace? Let me first tell you what it is not! As shocking as it will be to my many dear friends in the Roman Catholic tradition, it is not Catholicism. Modern Catholicism is that synthesis called Thomism, worked out by Thomas Aquinas as an amalgamation of Aristotelianism, Judaism and Christianity. This is not the one faith. It can never be that faith.

The one faith is not Lutheranism. It is not Calvinism or Methodism. It is not an “ism” at all, and for that reason, it is not Church of Christism. This is a grievous expression to the sensitive ears of my brethren. They deny there is such a thing but their denials are born of wishful thinking. They are pipe dreams. Church of Christism is that bundle of views, explanations, and traditions which have been moulded into a set of beliefs, to which all must subscribe in order to be received into and recognized as communicants in “The Church of Christ.” It is the unwritten creed of “The Church of Christ.” It is the exclusivistic set of teachings alleged to be the exact meaning of divine revelation. It is the criterion by which loyalty to the party is measured.

Church of Christism is not the one faith. It can never keep the unity of the Spirit. Its real basis is not the indwelling Spirit at all, but a compilation of judgments, decisions and verdicts handed down by men as precedents. It is as one of our widely advertised books blatantly admits, “The Voice of the Pioneers.” The gradually accumulating unwritten creed must be acknowledged as valid and official even in violation of personal integrity. One who no longer accepts that creed is a heretic, an apostate, a liberal.

Church of Christism can never preserve the bond of peace.

The best proof of this is the divided state of the Church of Christ. It is fragmented and splintered into more factions than any other contemporary movement. Its adherents engage in debates and carnal strivings with one another more than do those in any other religious group in our generation. They assail each other via the communications media, and there are more than two dozen parties, each of which claims to be the one holy, catholic and apostolic church of God upon earth. It is absurd to expect Church of Christism to keep the bond of peace. The members cannot even call upon their brethren to pray to God.

Let me go a step further. The one faith is not composed of twenty-seven books. It is not that magnificent compilation of biography, letters, history and prophecy, which we mistakenly call the new testament, or new covenant. Let me be quite clear. These documents contain the revelation of the divine mind. They were composed by men under the direction and motivation of the Holy Spirit. They contain God's will for my life. I love, respect and cherish every word of them. I intend to be guided and governed by their disclosures. I read them hungrily and avidly. I study them diligently and fervently.

But the one faith was here and embraced by the called-out ones long before one word of the new covenant scriptures ever flowed from the reed pen of an apostle. Of course, we read about that faith in the scriptures since both that faith and the scriptures came from God. We also read about the one body and one hope in the scriptures, but the body and the hope are not the scriptures.

Certainly the letter addressed to the saints in Ephesus and to all the faithful in Christ Jesus is not identical with the one faith. The apostle wrote that letter to identify that faith as one of the essentials to the unity of the Spirit. They already had it and were exhorted to keep it. The one faith was in possession of the Ephesians before they ever received the letter. It was not their understanding of the letter which produced in them the one faith, but it was a need for understanding the one faith which produced the letter. The one faith would have been there if the apostle had never written. That faith existed in many hearts which never saw an apostolic letter and did not know there would ever be a collection of such letters.

Few other errors have worked the mischief that has resulted from confusing the faith with the letters of instruction, admonition and exhortation to the people of God who had embraced the one faith. It was that which made them the people of God. Because of this error there has grown up that curious postulate which makes a specific degree of knowledge of doctrinal deductions essential for acceptance into “the fellowship.” All sorts of creeds, both written and unwritten, have thus been devised, and are now expounded as if creed-making was the will of God for preachers and elders.

Almost every point of scriptural instruction has been debated and elevated as the center around which a new faction has crystallized. Issues have separated brethren from one another, which have no relationship, either pro or con, to our unity in Christ. The one faith is not and never can be conformity to a legalistic formula which gives kingdom caste or status to twentieth century “Gnostics” who boast of a superior knowledge, or whose power of deductive reasoning lifts them above their more humble fellows.

It is not heavenly, but diabolical, to take the one faith which was intended to draw men together and interpret it in such a manner as to drive them apart if they refuse to be intellectual robots. That faith was intended to bring out the best that is in men. As it is often interpreted it brings out the worst. It substitutes coldness for charity, callousness for concern, and cavilling for candor. It becomes a religion of the hot head and the cold heart, rather than of the cool head and warm heart. It makes men carry a chip on the shoulder instead of a real burden for the lost.

When I seek to define the one faith I bow before the eternal throne and confess my inadequacy. The thoughts which flood my soul seem woefully lacking for the task. The words which flow from my pen inhibit rather than enhance. Yet I must testify to my conviction in spite of my ineptitude and incompetence.

The one faith is acceptance of the reality of the divine crashing of the prison gates of sin by the One from outside. It is the human response to the heavenly strategy for setting the captives free. It is unqualified trust in the fullest implications of the statement, "But as it is, he has appeared once and for all at the climax of history to abolish sin by the sacrifice of himself." It is accepting with joy the fact of delivery.

Trust is not just an element of faith. Faith is elemental trust. It is positive trust that in death and by death, Jesus opened up a new and living way through the curtain of his own flesh. He opened it for us. We can make our approach to the God of the universe, the Lord of the cosmos, in sincerity of heart and in full assurance of faith. Our guilty hearts have been sprinkled clean. Our bodies have been washed with pure water. Our faith is a firm confidence. It is an unswerving conviction.

The faith is pinpointed in history. The record specifically says "Before faith came" and "After faith came" (Gal. 3:23, 25). Man had faith before this. The father of the faithful lived long before this. A great list of men of faith is given in Hebrews 11. The writer did not exhaust the list. He said time was too short to detail the faith of others. But there is a difference between men of faith coming to God and the faith of God coming to men.

"Before this faith came we were close prisoners in the custody of law." We were shut up and fenced in. We were kept in confinement. All we could do was pace the length of our cellblock. The sign at each end read, "This far and no farther shalt thou go." All we had for comfort was a promise of God. It was a promise that the seed of Abraham would come. Blessing would attend his coming. It would free us from the curse of the law. The promise of God alone sustained mankind. It was a star of hope in the darkness of a night of sin.

There was no life in law. “If a law had been given which had power to bestow life, then indeed righteousness would have come from keeping the law.” If righteousness comes by law, then Christ died for nothing. Paul wrote that and he should know. No one can be justified on the basis of keeping law. One who expects to make it by perfect performance of precepts pronounces his own doom. He signs his own death warrant. He builds his own scaffold.

The law was a custodian to bring us to Christ in whom we are justified by faith. Now that faith has come we are no longer under a custodian. Most of our brethren do not really accept that statement. But we must make our decision. It is either justification on the basis of faith in Jesus or upon the basis of law. You cannot have both. I have made my choice. I am no longer under law but under grace. My brothers are not “brothers-in-law” but brothers in love. What a difference!

Law says, “Do this and you will live!” Grace says, “You live, so do this.” Don’t be silly. They are not the same. There is all the difference there is between the world since He came, and the world before He came. In the first, you start with law and try to achieve life. You are whipped before you begin. You have lost the race before you hear the starter’s gun. If God could have given a law, a written code, which could bestow life it was an act of monstrous iniquity to send Jesus to die.

Since faith came we start with life, not with law. He that hath the Son hath life. You even start with eternal life, the life of God. As John wrote, “This letter is to assure you that you have eternal life. It is addressed to those who give their allegiance to the Son of God.” That’s wonderful! Forget all the silly twaddle about people in Jesus not keeping his commands. One who gives his allegiance to Jesus, and who has the life of God throbbing inside of him, is going to do always those things that please Jesus. He will not have to have a heavenly motorcycle policeman — an elder or preacher— riding around issuing him a ticket.

Let's get right down to the nitty-gritty of the matter. When you have skimmed off all the theological wranglings and interpretations, and strained out all of the gnats, the opinions and deductions of men, the one faith is Jesus. He is the center of it. He is also the circumference of it. And that goes for the gospel as well. Jesus is the gospel personified. The faith for which we are to contend is the faith of the gospel (Phil. 1:27). The gospel is good news and faith is trust But the good news is news of what God has done for us in Jesus. Our faith is the response to the news in absolute surrender and unreserved trust.

The gospel consists of seven facts about a person. Those facts are the life, death, burial, resurrection, ascension, coronation and glorification of Jesus. Three of these are saving facts. These seven constitute the one faith. They are summed up in the grandest proposition of the ages, that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah of the prophets and the Son of God. When these facts are announced and the human heart accepts them in joyous acclamation, that heart lays hold upon the one faith. It is this one faith which, through its implementation or expression in one inductive act brings us into the glory of a relationship which will culminate in a relationship of glory.

The gospel is not the collation of apostolic writings forming the new covenant scriptures. The gospel is the glad news about a person, while the apostolic letters are composed of commendations, exhortations, warnings and criticism, sent to those who have accepted that person as Lord. The gospel is to be proclaimed to every person in the world. The apostolic letters are written to those in Christ. Certainly those who are in the one faith will read, study and obey the injunctions of the scriptures, not as a source of life, but because they have life. One does not eat bread to obtain life but to maintain it.

When Jesus was upon earth there were those who thought that eternal life was contained in the scriptures. They thought it was something to dig out rather than something to be handed out as a gift. But Jesus said, "You search the scriptures because you think that in them you have eternal life, but they are they which testify of me. And you will not come unto me that you may have life." Jesus did not condemn searching the scriptures. He revered them and frequently quoted them. He recognized their authority. But he knew that life was a relationship with him. It is a gift of the Son and not a result of research. The faith is not Jesus pointing us to a book, but a book pointing us to Jesus.

Life comes not from giving assent to what the Book says, although that is very important. It comes from believing into Him who is the object of the testimony and of our faith. He is the pioneer and perfecter, the author and finisher, of our faith. The record is not written to give us eternal life but to tell us we have it. The life is in the Son.

But does not man live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God? Of course he does. Jesus said so when tempted to command stones to be transformed into bread to allay the pangs of hunger. One lives by eating bread but bread is not the source of life. The word sustains the same relationship to the spirit as does bread to the body. Neither of them gives life. One is begotten by a person, not by a bagel. He eats bread to sustain life and he studies the revealed word for the same reason. If life came from a book there was no use of Jesus dying that we might have life. God could simply have sent us a book.

It is the gospel by which one is begotten. This is the primal message. It is the incorruptible seed, the proclamation of heaven, the kerygma. It is the word of God about the living Word of God, who is the Word of life, the eternal life which was with the Father and was manifest in the flesh. When one is begotten and born into the family of God he must feed upon the word. If he does not do so he will starve and die. One who comes into him who is the truth obligates himself to accept all of the truth as he learns it but he has life and is as much a child of God from the day he is born as he will ever be.

While on this theme I should like to clear up a general misunderstanding of Romans 10:17, “So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.”

I once quoted this as if Paul referred to the whole of the new covenant scriptures, the completed textual canon. I freely used it in debate to challenge brethren who supported colleges and other institutions to point to such things in the word of God or admit they were accepted without faith. I then lifted another passage completely out of context and concluded that because these were not mentioned they were sin. “Whatsoever is not of faith is sin.” I was wrong in my understanding of both.

A careful study has convinced me that Romans 10:17 is talking about the gospel proclamation. It is true that all of the scriptures are a word from God and are the word of God. It is also true that they should be believed and accepted. But Paul is writing of the good news of Jesus. It is difficult for those of us who have a copy of the collected epistles bound under one leather cover to realize that Paul did not. There is no indication he even knew that some of his writings would be collected later on and compiled. We tend to read back into what he wrote our own experience, knowledge and understanding based upon a perfected revelation which has undergone nineteen centuries of research and investigation. We forget that the Romans to whom this was written had neither a copy of the scriptures, nor a Cruden’s Concordance or Clarke’s Commentary.

The theme of Romans 10 is that Christ ended the law as a means of attempting to arrive at justification. This brought to an end a futile struggle, for “by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified.” Righteousness is now by faith in Christ Jesus. It requires no one to ascend into heaven or descend into the abyss to make Jesus available. We do not need to see him. The word of faith, that is, the announcement of justification by faith is near. It is as near as our hearts and our ears. It requires no remote journey. Men have been commissioned to bring it. Their sound has gone throughout the Roman Empire. Their words have gone out to all the world.

“How welcome are the feet of the messengers of good news.” These were the words of the evangelical prophet. Paul borrows them for this great occasion. “But not all have responded to the good news” (New English Bible). “But they did not all hearken to the glad tidings” (W. E. Vine). The King James Version reads, “So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.” With a completed Bible in their hands, my brethren have concluded that the faith which justifies is a correct understanding and interpretation of the new covenant scriptures. And a correct interpretation is the authorized and orthodox one projected by the particular party. Paul certainly had no such idea. The new covenant scriptures were not yet written.

The faith which justifies is faith in the proclamation about Jesus. The message is the gospel. The New English Version reads, “We conclude that faith is awakened by the message, and the message that awakens it comes through the word of Christ.” W. E. Vine renders it, “So belief cometh of hearing, and hearing by the word of Christ.” He aptly adds, “The phrase ‘the word of Christ,’ which is supported by the majority of MSS., signifies ‘the word concerning Christ.’”

The one faith has nothing to do with being either right or wrong about instrumental music in the public praise of God; the millennial question; the charismatic movement; classes or colleges. People in the one faith are on all sides of these issues and many others. These may or may not affect their final destiny depending upon how they treat their brethren because of them. None of them are as important to God as they are to us.

The one faith is the human response from the depth of an anguished heart to the greatest news ever announced on this planet. “Jesus has come and calleth for thee!” Jesus has come! This earth will never be the same again. This is the visited planet, and the one faith is acknowledgment of that supreme fact! It is the ground of hope.

One Baptism

Mission Messenger (September 1974)

Volume 36

[Abstract]

But the grandeur, sublimity and beauty of the foundation of hope, and of ecclesiastical or social union, established by the author and founder of Christianity, consisted in this,— that the belief of one fact, and that upon the best evidence in the world, is all that is requisite, as far as faith goes to salvation. The belief of this one fact, and submission to one institution expressive of it, is all that is required of Heaven to admission into the church.— Alexander Campbell in “The Christian System,” page 130.

The above quotation occurs in a discussion entitled “Fundamental Fact.” I am deeply indebted to it for enlightenment which I cherish. It has helped me to envision the magnificence of the divine purpose and plan. It struck the shackles of sectarianism from my boastful heart at a time when I was enslaved under the mistaken view that I was free. It helped me to receive God’s children as he receives us all, without questioning the content of the mental baggage which they bring with them on their journey from the realm of darkness into the kingdom of God’s dear Son.

At the risk of proving to be a little boresome I want to allow Alexander Campbell to elucidate what he meant by the above.

“The one fact is expressed in a single proposition— that Jesus the Nazarene is the Messiah. The evidence upon which it is to be believed is the testimony of twelve men, confirmed by prophecy, miracles, and spiritual gifts. The one institution is baptism into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Every such person is a disciple in the fullest sense of the word, the moment he has believed this one fact, upon the above evidence, and has submitted to the above-mentioned institution; and whether he believes the five points condemned, or the five points approved, by the Synod of Dort, is not so much as to be asked of him; whether he holds any of the views of the Calvinists or Arminians, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists or Quakers, is never once to be asked of such persons, in order to admission into the Christian community called the church.”

Whew! Isn't that something! People who hold views of the Presbyterians, Episcopalians, and Methodists, are to be accepted, and immersed upon the basis of their simple faith in Christ, regardless of what they believe about these other things. Even those who hold odd views of the Baptists! If Alexander Campbell were to return from the dead he would not be allowed to preach in a half dozen congregations in Texas. He would be hailed as a liberal and brethren in San Francisco would bomb Pepperdine College with broadsides if they called upon him to pray in chapel. As good old Brother J. D. Tant used to say, “Brethren we have drifted!” If I recall correctly Brother Tant had drifted also!

There is one baptism. On this matter there can be no question. If you accept the apostolic letters as authentic and authoritative, as I do, that matter is settled. And so far as I am concerned that one baptism is immersion in water of a penitent believer in my Lord. I feel quite certain that is the way the expression would have been understood by the Ephesians. It is the way I understand it, and I see no reason to change my mind.

It really doesn't make much difference whether anyone else agrees with my view or not. Truth is not determined by a majority vote. It is the truth if no one casts a ballot for it. But it makes me feel a little better if scholars, of whom I do not have the honor to be one, occupy the same position as myself. In this instance quite a number of them do.

William Barclay, who admits to being a fairly liberal Presbyterian, not only recognized baptism as the initiatory act into the fellowship but calls it “the gateway to the Christian church.” In his book Turning to God he specifically states that baptism was not by sprinkling, but by immersion, and says it was the means whereby the forgiveness of sins was personally appropriated and the power of the Holy Spirit entered into the convert.

In modern religious circles one who holds as I do, that allegiance to the King is pledged and personal faith is validated by immersion in water, is regarded as kind of an oddity. This does not upset me. I am not bugged by it at all. Snide remarks and derogatory statements about baptism do not move me. My faith is firm in the right of Jesus to order my life and just as firm that no one else has the right to do so. I never ask what is the popular position. I could not care less about that. All that interests me is the will of God. I am concerned only with what the Holy Spirit teaches.

On that ground there is not too much controversy. Jesus began his personal ministry by being baptized in a river. He ended it by telling the apostles to baptize every person who believed the news they were to broadcast about him. You cannot proclaim the life of Jesus without telling about baptism. When a former deacon of a prominent congregation was invited to share the vehicle of a pious government official, he began with a scriptural prophecy and “proclaimed unto him Jesus.” Nothing is said about him mentioning baptism, but the foreign politician asked, as they were passing a body of water, “What is to hinder me from being baptized?”

There was never any question among the primitive saints as to what constituted the one baptism. There was no unimmersed person among them and it was inconceivable that anyone would oppose something ordained by the Lord and commanded by his holy envoys. It was only when men ran the faith through their theological meat-grinders, shredding, shaping and moulding it by speculation and rationalization that they evolved all of the finely-honed arguments to pamper the sophisticated and confound the simple. They messed up what God straightened out!

I want to be numbered among the childlike disciples of the master, and while erudite men argue about all of the ramifications of a command I shall just go on and obey it. I would rather do what my Lord tells me to do than to spend my time discussing all of the angles. You might run out of life in which to do it. I could no more obey Jesus without being immersed in water on the basis of my faith in the Lord Jesus than I could fly to heaven without wings. Others must make their own decisions, but that is mine. Anyone who tries to “con” me into weakening my position on what Jesus has said is barking up the wrong tree.

I do not think that “the baptism of the Holy Spirit” or in the Holy Spirit is the one baptism. It never was. I am quite aware that in one Spirit, and under the influence and mediation of the Spirit we are all baptized into one body, but that baptism is immersion into Christ Jesus who is the head of the body. The baptism which brings us into the relationship of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, was to be administered by men, and men cannot administer the baptism of the Holy Spirit. That is the prerogative of Christ. I know all that because the Holy Spirit left the record which says it, and I believe what the Spirit has recorded.

The Holy Spirit operates upon the heart of one who is an alien to the rule of heaven, in and through the good news, the gospel message concerning our Lord. The gospel is the glad tidings of what God has accomplished for us through the Word who was made flesh, and who brought grace and truth. When the full impact of this is brought to bear upon the honest heart, regardless of how seared or scarred by sin it may be, an aroused conscience becomes unbearable until the requirements of the Spirit are met.

I do not hold that “the baptism of the Holy Spirit” is available today, not because God’s power is in any sense lessened, but because his purpose in respect to it has long since been served. That purpose was never to endow men to speak in tongues, dialects or languages which they had not studied or with which they were not conversant. That they were empowered to do so upon one occasion to enable them to address foreigners in their native tongues, and upon another occasion to convince skeptical members of the kingdom of heaven that they were equally worthy of citizenship had nothing to do with the divine purpose of “the baptism of the Holy Spirit.” These demonstrations were secondary to the purpose of the baptism, and were to accomplish another design. That they were given in conjunction with “the baptism of the Holy Spirit” has little to do with it, since many others received the gift of tongues who were not baptized in the Holy Spirit.

The baptism of the Holy Spirit was a one-time experience for the formation of the spiritual body of Christ as a new creation, just as immersion is a one-time experience for each individual who becomes a new creation. After the spiritual body was formed, the baptism of the Holy Spirit was never again mentioned. It is not once referred to in any epistle addressed to the saints of God. It is conceivable that many who had letters from the apostles never even heard of it. The idea that those who come into the new divine-human relationship when immersed into Christ are subsequently baptized in the Holy Spirit is as foreign to the new covenant scriptures as purgatory or extreme unction. Not only is no mention made of such a thing but there is not even a hint of it when the sacred scriptures are read without presupposition.

I am always glad when someone who has been nibbling around the edges of the faith is convicted of the sin of an unfilled spiritual life, and gets on serious terms with his Maker. I am thrilled when such men and women get down on their knees and agonize about their apathy and uselessness. I want them to “zero in” on the throne of mercy. And I am not surprised when, in the throes of genuine confession and commitment, they experience traumatic phenomena they have never known before. I would be surprised if they did not! I am not even upset when they get on “a high” and go into “a spiritual orbit” and testify to things that happened to them which have never happened to me, and probably never will. But they are mistaken when they equate that with “the baptism of the Holy Spirit” of which the Spirit spoke through the writers of the word.

Not even that mistake upsets me like it does a lot of my brethren. If you are not free to make mistakes you are not free at all. And I am not about to make a bigger mistake and hound brethren out who credit a change in their very life-style to the baptism of the Spirit. I am glad they changed. I have changed. I am glad they are happy. I am happier than most of them! I know a lot of other brethren who ought to change and be joyful. I will not serve the best interests of the King of glory by making a test of one’s loyalty to Jesus or relationship with the Father out of an experience to which he testifies. I will not do so by allowing one to test my faith by his own experience either. “Hast thou faith? keep it to thyself.” How about doing the same with your experience? My creed is Christ, not a personal experience with him. No one will ever sell me on another creed. I mean no one! I belong to Jesus and I shall continue to do so!

Since I am wound up I might as well tell you what I think about the baptism of the Holy Spirit. If you cannot buy my view, and most of you will not, praise the Lord anyhow. You need not agree with me to be loved and revered. I simply think there were two occasions of the baptism of the Holy Spirit, because these two fulfilled God's purpose for that baptism. I do not recall seeing the term used upon any other occasion.

The secret of God's will was according to his good pleasure which he purposed in himself. That will was that when the fullness of times was worked out, he would unite in Christ, everything in heaven and on earth. Mankind was divided into two great groups. On one side of a yawning prejudicial gulf were the Gentiles in the flesh. They were uncircumcised, separate from Christ, strangers to the community of Israel, outside of God's covenants and the promise that goes with them. Their world was a world without hope and without God.

On the opposite side were the Jews. One of their own described them in these words. "They are the people of Israel, theirs is the right of sonship and the glory, the bonds and the giving of the law, and the worship and the promises; theirs are the fathers and of their race is Christ in his human nature" (Romans 9:4, 5). These were the ones who were near. The others were afar off.

Between these two, like an impregnable barrier, stood the wall of hostility, bolstered by the law with its rules and regulations. The incredible task which God set for Jesus was to break down the wall and annul the written code, the very action of which was to promote and preserve segregation, to keep those who were under it aloof and separate from the others. Jesus offered his person as the peace. From the two frighteningly divergent strains he created a single new humanity in himself. "This was his purpose, to reconcile the two in a single body to God through the cross, on which he killed the enmity."

Fifty days after the cross the situation was unchanged. Hearts were still filled with bigotry and hate. The atonement had been made. It was time for the Spirit to be poured out as confirmation that Jesus had been elevated to the right hand of God, and was sovereign in authority. “Therefore, being lifted up by the right hand of God, and having received from the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he has poured out this that you see and hear.”

On Pentecost the Holy Spirit did not fall upon all of the Jews. A select number received the baptism of the Holy Spirit and they announced the good news to all who were present. Those who believed the message were told to reform and be immersed upon the firm conviction that Jesus was now both Lord and Christ. Those who did this were to be granted forgiveness of their sins and receive the Holy Spirit as a gift.

Many of the Jews mistakenly thought the kingdom of heaven was but a fulfillment of Jewish dreams. They concluded that one could only be accepted among the called-out as a proselyte and must be circumcised. They had not yet learned that the truth of the gospel, that is, the foundation, core or kernel of the good news was justification by faith. It did not come by works of the law. So the “circumcision party” was very strong among the believers.

At this juncture, Jesus administered the baptism of the Holy Spirit unto the Gentiles, the uncircumcised ones. The time had come to demonstrate that those who were afar off were to join with those who were near. The family of Cornelius was chosen to receive the baptism as indicative that the Gentiles were to be admitted on the same terms as God accepted the Jews. Simon Peter, a kosher Jew, who had never in his life entered into a Gentile home or eaten with an uncircumcised person, was selected to take the gospel to them.

Even before the emissaries arrived to request him to come, God had to ready him for the task by giving him a mystifying vision while he was hungry. He was ordered to go with the Gentiles without a question. But with all of this, he still took six other Jews with him as witnesses. The reluctance with which he came into the Gentile home is evidenced by his words.

But as Peter began to speak the Holy Spirit fell on the uncircumcision to the utter amazement of the Jews who were present. When it dawned upon Peter that these were to be accepted of God he commanded them to be baptized in water as a pledge of their allegiance unto Christ. Word of the event seeped back to Jerusalem where “the apostles and brethren that were in Judea heard that the Gentiles had also received the word of God.” When the “circumcision party” in the congregation called Peter “on the carpet,” he rehearsed to them the matter from the beginning. He informed them that “the Holy Spirit fell on them as on us at the beginning.”

This announcement silenced the objectors in the congregation. The Jewish brethren gave praise to God saying, “This means that God has granted life-giving repentance to the Gentiles also.” The gospel was God’s dynamic to save all who believed its message. It had now been proclaimed to the Jew first and also to the Greek. Upon both occasions the baptism of the Holy Spirit validated the event. Jew and Greek were now drawn together by the proclamation of the cross. They were no more twain, but one body. A new humanity consisting of both had been produced. The baptism of the Holy Spirit is never again mentioned.

Any Jew who trusts in the Lord Jesus can now be saved. Any non-Jew who trusts in Jesus can also be saved. There is required no further divine demonstration of acceptance. The eternal purpose of the ages is a reality. Any person can share in that reality of oneness with Christ. We have been raised up together. We have been made to sit together. All that God has prepared for His children is now our heritage. Every child of God receives the Spirit at the time he is born into the family. The Spirit lives in him as in a temple and provides for him all that the Father has designed for us while we are in the flesh.

There is no such thing as a child of God who does not have the Spirit of God. It is true that there are many unconcerned, indifferent, worldly-minded children of God who stumble along through life until a crisis is faced, and then they must face up to the real choice of whether they shall truly follow Jesus. Some of them, in an agony of reproach for their past, throw themselves upon the mercy of God, and in their time of deep need find that God is near. He has always been but they have never truly called upon him before. Many who find inner peace and real joy and relief, imagine, in the ecstasy of the moment, that this is “the baptism of the Holy Spirit.”

I do not think it is so at all. But if they mistake their experience for “the baptism of the Holy Spirit,” I shall not fight or argue or debate with them. I have given you my own personal understanding derived from my study of the word of the Spirit. I do not intend to bind it upon any person nor to discredit any experience or change in life-style. Praise God for such changes!

Let me repeat that the one baptism is immersion in water of one who sincerely believes with all of his heart that Jesus is the Messiah and the Son of God. Every person on this whole wide earth who submits to the act upon the basis of that faith is God’s child and my brother. I do not care who instructed him. I do not care who immersed him. Jesus ordained as a response to the good news concerning himself, belief of the facts announced therein and baptism. I have no power, inclination or desire to alter, amend or change those terms. I accept them exactly as he stated them.

Because I believe what he said I shall not set up other criteria related to degrees of knowledge, understanding or intellectual apprehension. One is not forgiven of his sins because of doctrinal attainment but because of his faith, his absolute trust in Christ Jesus. One is not justified by baptism but by faith. Yet it is faith that acts, and baptism is the God-ordained act by which faith reaches out to lay hold upon God’s promise. It is faith that grasps the promise of divine grace, marvellous as that grace is.

Never would I go through life without being immersed into Christ. Never would I advise, counsel or suggest to anyone else to do so. “For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.” I am glad both of those sentences begin with “for.” There’s a reason for it! We are children of God. We became children of God through faith. We exhibited that faith by baptism into Christ. In that act we put him on like a garment. He is still my garment, my shield and buckler.

The older I get, the longer I live, and the more I study the revelation of God, the more convinced do I become that baptism is an irrevocable part of the divine plan for our entrance into the unity of the Spirit. No one can ever slight it and still do justice to the testimony of the apostles. Because of my faith I simply accept what the word of God says. I trust you will do the same!

One God

Mission Messenger (September 1974)

Volume 36

[Abstract]

There is one God. The apostle was not trying to prove there is a God. He was not writing to people rescued from atheism but from idolatry. It was not the existence of God but his uniqueness which called forth the statement. Incongruous as it may seem it was the Christians who were branded as atheists in the Roman Empire simply because they refused to recognize the genuineness of pagan deities.

Tertullian in his tract De Corona Militis relates how the saints scorned the sacrifices of heathendom, and turned away with abhorrence from its banquets and gaities. Tacitus the pagan historian says they were convicted of “hatred to mankind” because they refused to participate in the popular games and festivals. Everything in the pagan world was done as a tribute to the pantheon of gods. Whatever the Christians did in word or deed was done in the name of Jesus to the glory of the Father.

There was no meeting ground for the two. “Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them: and I will be their God, and they shall be my people” (2 Cor. 6:14-16).

“What say I then? that the idol is any thing, or that which is sacrificed to idols is any thing? But I say, that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils and not to God; and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils: ye cannot be partaker of the Lord’s table and of the table of devils” (1 Cor. 10:19-21). “Little children, keep yourselves from idols” (1 John 5:21).

When Paul wrote to the Ephesians that there is one God he was addressing the saints in one of the centers of idolatry. Here was located the temple of Diana, the many-breasted goddess of fertility. The original temple was burnt down on the night in which Alexander the Great was born in B.C. 355. The arsonist was an obscure seeker after fame, Erostratus. Because the citizenry mistakenly thought that a fallen meteor was the goddess of the moon come down to earth, all Asia Minor joined in rebuilding the temple, one of the seven wonders of the ancient world.

There were 120 supporting columns, each one the gift of a foreign prince or potentate. More than 220 years were devoted to construction of the temple and its accompanying theater which had seats for 24,500 people. Both the temple and theater are mentioned in a stirring account in Acts 19:21-41. The business agent for a local union of craftsmen affirmed there that “all Asia and the world worshipped” at the shrine.

Paul began his list of the seven planks in the divine unity platform with “the one Spirit.” This was logical since the unity which was to be maintained was the unity of the Spirit. He closed with “the one God” because this is the capsheaf with which to crown all the rest. It is in him “we live and move and have our being” (Acts 17:28). He does not dwell in temples made with hands. He is not supplied by men's hands as though he needed anything. Instead, he gives to all life, and breath, and all things. He is the bestower, not the beneficiary.

It is God who made the cosmos a functioning unit. There is a sense in which every atom is dependent upon every other atom. Nothing in nature is independent. The planets are a symphony. The seasons are a harmony. This is a universe and not a multi-universe. The sovereign purpose of God is to bring all things together in Christ. The Greeks had a multitude of gods warring with each other. We know there is one God. Let us consider carefully what is affirmed concerning God.

The one God is the Father of all. This statement breathes a divine concern. God is not indifferent. He is not a God afar off who cannot be touched by our infirmities. God is love. This very love is unitive. And it is poured out in our hearts by the Holy Spirit who is given unto us. It unites us to the Father but it also unites us all to one another. He that dwells in love dwells in God, and God in him. Everyone who loves is begotten of God, and knows God. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us and sent his Son for an atonement for us. If God so loved us, we ought also to love one another.

We know that we have crossed the frontier from death unto life because we love the brethren. The Fatherhood of God creates the brotherhood of the saved. The sonship in him creates the fellowship of the ransomed ones. Regardless of what men may say, regardless of their cavilling and minute distinctions to split and splinter, all those who are in Christ Jesus are in the fellowship to which we have been called. They share together a common life, the life of God, eternal life. There is one God and he has made his children one, all of them!

One of the most beautiful revelations ever given is that God is our Father. The very word speaks of tenderness and compassion. It is a "family" word and it implies sons and daughters. It also implies an inheritance so magnificent that the finite mind cannot grasp it and we will have to await the time when we shall see him as he is, and our vile bodies are changed and made like his glorious body. It is certain the Greek world had no concept of a God like this.

When the apostle declared there is one God and Father, he gave hope to millions of nameless slaves, deprived of all hope of identity, treated like things and bought and sold like chattels. But he also gave hope to me. What a thrill it is to be adopted into a family circle where the indwelling Spirit makes it possible for me to cry “Abba, Father.” I would not exchange my status in Jesus for all the money or fame this world has to offer. God is my Father.

The one God is above all. This speaks of divine control. The creation was not just set to spinning and left to itself. God is adequate. He is not outmoded by the scientific and technological breakthrough of our day. He is not frustrated by our space exploration nor upset by our discovery of nuclear fission. He is above all nature including “fire, and hail, snow, and vapors, and stormy wind fulfilling his word” (Psalm 148:8). He counts the stars and calls them all by their names (Psalm 147:4). Nature holds no fear for one who trusts in God. “We need not fear even if the world blows up, and the mountains crumble into the sea” (Psalm 46:2).

God is above all history. He calls the things that be not as though they were. He sees the end from the beginning. No event sneaks upon him unawares. He is never surprised by a sudden turn of events. All the people in the world are nothing in comparison with him. They are but a drop in the bucket, and dust on the scales. That is what the prophet says, and he adds, “All the nations are as nothing to him, in his eyes they are less than nothing— mere emptiness and froth” (Isaiah 40:17). He does not need to subpoena tapes to reach a judgment. He can read what has been erased.

He is above all of his children. I know because I am one of them. Do you recall that beautiful benediction Paul used for his Jewish brethren, his relatives in the flesh? “Of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen.” But God is not just over the Jew. “For the scriptures tell us that no one who believes in Christ will ever be disappointed. Jew and Gentile are alike in this respect, for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him” (Romans 10:11, 12).

He is above all human attempts to capture him and put him in a box contrived by human wisdom. He is not just “the ground of being.” He is the being who made the ground. He is not just the “voice within.” He is above all!

The one God is through all. This has to do with both communion and communication. It is because the same God works through all of us, sharing our lot, and sending us out, to achieve his transcendent purpose, that we should be one. In the Gentile world there were “gods many” and “lords many” as Paul stated it. Each people had its own god and these gods regarded each other as rivals. The political intrigues upon the brow of Olympus exceeded those of mortals at its base. The people were divided by their very gods.

The jealous passions of imaginary and artificial deities were transferred to men so that the earth was kept in turmoil and peace was unknown. A belief in monotheism erased all this and provided a philosophical and rational basis for universal tranquillity.

God works through all in proclamation. The message of hope is to be carried to a hapless world by every follower of Jesus. Every believer is a priest and every child of God a minister.

God works through all in preparation. The ultimate goal of life on earth is to prepare for life that is not on earth. We now bear the image of the earthy but we shall bear the image of the heavenly. God wants all men to be saved. He does not want any one to be lost and he has no favorites.

God works through all in performance. Not one single organ or member of either the physical or spiritual body is useless. God made no mere appendages. Each member has a responsibility to fulfill. All are related. The head cannot go where the feet do not take it. The feet cannot go where the head does not direct them. No one can do the work of another. Each has his own work and God has no part-time eyes and ears.

God works through all in production of spiritual fruit. He has no purely ornamental trees. God maintains an orchard. He is not the manager of a park. He prunes us that we may bring forth more fruit.

The one God is in all. This speaks of companionship. Jesus promised when he went back to heaven that he would not leave his disciples orphans. He said he would come to them, and he made it clear that his coming would be through the presence of another helper, the Holy Spirit. The world could not receive the Spirit. It did not know him and could not see him. But the disciples could know him because he was to be with them and in them forever, that is through the age of the absence of Jesus.

The Holy Spirit is called the Spirit of Christ and the Spirit of God. The Spirit dwells in my body as a temple. I am not a hollow shell. I am not a vacant tabernacle. My own spirit is not alone. It has the companionship of the other helper. I am one Spirit with the eternal one. He does not simply walk along with me as a friend outside. He abides in the room of my heart.

God dwells in me to strengthen my weakness. I do not know what to pray for as I ought but I can be sure that all of the deep inexpressible longings of my soul will be translated into intercession. The pull and tug of the world is great but I have the assurance that greater is he that is in me than he that is in the world.

God dwells in me to supply my wants. The inner cravings are greater than the outer desires. I desperately want to grasp his grace, share his sufferings, and glimpse his glory through the eye of faith. His closeness to my spirit provides insight and incentive, meaning and motivation.

God dwells in me to share my worship. He is not worshiped with men's hands as though he needed anything. Worship is the prostration of the heart in his presence and since he is ever present, whatever I do in word or deed is worship. I do not go to a temple. I am a temple. I do not pay a pilgrimage to the place where God dwells. I am a place where God dwells. It is not that I bring him things. I simply give him me! And he gives me himself. That's worship!

Functioning Gifts

Mission Messenger (October 1974)

Volume 36

[Abstract]

Do you know what a metronome is? The word is a combined form of the Greek metron, measure, and nomos, law. A metronome is a device to measure time, especially in music. Perhaps you have seen a little triangular case sitting on a piano, with a waving pendulum which can be seen by an amateur player, who can develop a proper sense of rhythm by timing his beat with the sweep back and forth of the arm. I mention this because the word metron occurs in the original of Ephesians 4:7, “But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ.”

This is an important statement. It is important not merely because it originated with the Holy Spirit. It is significant because of its content and meaning. The theme of the chapter is the unity of the Spirit. We have just learned of the seven things which create and make possible that unity which we are told to guard within the bond of peace. The word for bond is sundesmos, that which binds together. It was used for a rope to bind limbs together to be carried home for fuel. It was also used for the chain with which prisoners were linked together. Peace is the chain which holds us all together. It is our heritage when we are justified by a faith which binds us to Jesus. The unity is the gift of the Spirit. Peace is the result of forgiveness which makes hostility no longer necessary.

So we have seven things in common. But in addition to these things provided by divine love, each of us receives grace in a special way. We are one body but we are individually members of it. Each of us is given grace to enable him to function in his capacity. The arm must receive grace to function as an arm. The eye must receive grace to function as an eye. All of the members are essential. No one was added to the body as a mere afterthought. No one is a parasite.

We have one Spirit but he dwells in each of us. The gift of the Spirit is to every person who is in Christ, but it is because every one has the Spirit that we have him in common. There is one faith but we embrace it as individuals. There is one baptism but we submit to it personally. There is a grace that is common to all but it is because each of us is given grace.

The word for grace is charis. It is from this we have charisma, which refers to a grace-gift, that is, a gift which one cannot earn or secure by effort or practice. Any gift freely bestowed by God is a gift of the Spirit, regardless of how it is communicated to the recipient. That is why I object to designating any period of time “a charismatic age.”

There is no such thing as a charismatic age, for the simple reason that there is no non-charismatic age. There has never been a time when the will of God was not enhanced and promoted by gifts of grace. A gift is not charismatic because of its nature, method of reception, or effect, but because of its origin. It is charismatic because it is a gift of charis, grace. In Romans 12:6-8 is given a list of gifts differing according to the grace that is given unto us. These gifts are called charismata in the original. They include gifts of prophecy, administration, instruction, exhortation, liberality in giving, supervision, and succoring the afflicted and needy.

The man who has the enviable gift of understanding and relieving the needy is “charismatic” as surely as one who has the gift of prophecy. The one who can give cheerfully and freely as his contribution to the work of the saints is “charismatic.” So is the gifted teacher or exhorter. In view of this, I am not turned on by such expressions as “The Spirit is working again in our time.” The Spirit has never ceased working. Any theory which conveys the idea that the Holy Spirit was “on the ball” for a few hundred years, and then started relaxing and laying low for a few centuries is a mistake. The Holy Spirit has always been active in the universe. He is not more so now than he has been in the past.

Our problem is that the church, which gets out of tune with God, periodically becomes so dead, sterile and unfruitful that the constituents die on the vine. They are so dehydrated and dried up on the inside that even a crusade or rally does little good. The people who “rally” are the ones who never miss anything. They are busy all of the time. When the folk get to the end of their tether and begin to agonize internally and call upon God and throw themselves upon his mercy, and commit themselves unto him in desperation, something starts happening.

What happens is confused with “the power beginning to flow again.” This is a little ridiculous. The same thing could have happened in any age since Jesus sat down on the throne. The power has been there all of the time. No one was plugging into it because they were trusting in their own power. When you plug in the percolator and it begins to perk it is not necessary to conclude that a divine electrician has just turned on the energy by pulling a master switch at the heavenly power plant. The power has always been there.

The gifts of God are varied. Paul wrote to a congregation which came behind in no gift and told them that the ability to restrain sexual passion, making marriage unnecessary was a charisma of God. But he also implied that the gift of sexual need which could be gratified in marriage was a charisma. “I would that everybody lived as I do; but each of us has his own special gift from God— one in one direction and one in another” (1 Corinthians 7:7). It is quite evident to me that my gift is not in the same direction as was that of Paul.

I rather suspect that it is a gift of God to be able to divest yourself of all earthly possessions and give the entire proceeds to the poor. Perhaps the same is true of going cheerfully to the stake and giving your body to be burned. Certainly these two are listed in conjunction with the gifts of tongues, prophecy, knowledge and the faith which can move mountains (1 Corinthians 13:1-3). If they are charismata, the one who can vow to remain in poverty should not expect every other person to do so. Nor should the one who uses the things of this world, not abusing them, look down upon those who disclaim a need of them, and even renounce them. I would hope that a man who has the gift of giving every bit of his goods to feed the poor while living in a tent with a dirt floor, would marry a girl with the same gift.

I really doubt that there is such a thing as a non-charismatic member of the one body. If I am correct, it is not necessary to run around and tell everyone you are charismatic. “To everyone of us is given grace.” Note that it is always given “in accordance with the measure of the gift of Christ.” Weymouth renders this, “measured out with the munificence of Christ.” The Authentic Version reads, “And to each one of us there is granted some favor, corresponding to the extent of Christ’s bounty.” The New English Version has it, “But each one of us has been given a gift, his due portion of Christ’s bounty.”

The record in the verse under consideration says that “to every one of us is given grace (charis), according to the measure (metron) of the gift (dorea) of Christ.” W. E. Vine in his Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words says of dorea that it “denotes a free gift, stressing its gratuitous character; it is always used in the N. T. of a spiritual or supernatural gift.” In this passage, he says, “the gift is that given by Jesus Christ.” The whole point Paul is making is that Jesus is a Lord who bestows gifts. He did not just give himself, but he gives of himself, of his bounty.

“Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men” (Ephesians 4:8).

This is a free translation of Psalm 68:18. The expression “he saith” can better be understood if we read “David said,” or “The scripture said.” Paul lifts the quote to apply to three actions of Jesus— he ascended to the Father, he led a multitude of captives in his train, and he bestowed gifts upon men. At this juncture the apostle inserts a parenthetical statement identifying Jesus as the one who first descended into the lower parts of the earth and then ascended up far above all heavens. This he did that he might “fill all things.” This means that both the descent from heaven to be with man and the ascent into heaven to be with God were essential to the qualification required to supply every need and furnish every gift required for the growth and perfection of all.

NATURE OF THE GIFTS

We now come to the gifts he bestowed. Those gifts were special functionaries supplied to meet actual needs. These special servants were given to the called-out community by the Lord. They were his gifts to the body to bring it to the ideal of God. Because of the reading of the King James Version a lot of good brethren have been misled. In their interpretation they have missed the whole point. That version says, “And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers.”

Recently I heard a brother on the radio who was sawing away at the traditional explanation which has, in some places, become a part of what may be properly called “Church of Christism.” This is the collection of opinions, deductions and explanations which have become so much a part of the dogmatic declarations of members of the Church of Christ, that it is accepted as being the will of God, and any contrary opinion is regarded as heresy or “liberalism” in the quaint and eccentric vocabulary adopted or invented by our brethren.

The brother was bent on proving that what he called “the age of miracles” had passed away. He was especially zeroing in on the gift of tongues. He insisted that Ephesians 4:11 taught that some “miraculous gifts,” as he referred to them, were given to apostles, some to prophets, some to evangelists and teachers, until we all come to the unity of the faith. The faith was God’s revelation. The unity of the faith was the completion of the apostolic writings. Therefore, when the new covenant scriptures were completed the gifts passed away.

This constitutes a prime example of what happens when men desperately strive to validate an opinion and make it “scripturally sound.” The brother was wrong on every count. He couldn’t have missed it farther if he had been blind-folded and fired at random. The faith, in this context, does not refer to the scriptures at all. The unity of the faith is not the completed canon after it had been argued about for a century or so. The gifts were not given to the apostles and prophets. The apostles and prophets were the gifts that were given.

Of course, we must not conclude that the translators appointed by King James I to prepare a revised version which he could authorize to be read in the Church of England, said that Jesus gave some gifts to apostles, some to prophets, etc. They did not put that in the passage. It remained for our brethren, caught up in the proof-text syndrome, to put that kind of slant on it. Such explanations do not so much depend for their effect upon the knowledge of the exposition as upon the ignorance of the auditors. I think it is a good thing for a lot of us that we live among spiritual illiterates. In the land of the blind a one-eyed man can be king!

I have remarked before, and I repeat, that any argument which depends for its force and validity upon only one version should probably be suspect. That is why by the simple expedient of reading more than one rendering of a passage one can often be spared from making an egregious error. I just threw that “egregious” in because it means “conspicuous for its bad quality.” I guess all errors are bad enough, but some of them are worse than others, because they have been used to hound brethren out who were nearer right than the “hounders.” Here is the way the passage under consideration appears in some other renderings.

“And these were his gifts: some to be apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, some pastors and teachers.” (The New English Bible).

“And He Himself appointed some to be apostles, some to be prophets, some to be evangelists, and some to be pastors and teachers” (The Modern Speech New Testament).

“And he has given some men as apostles, some as prophets, some as evangelists, some as shepherds and teachers” (The New Testament in Plain English).

“And he it is who gave to the Church apostles, prophets, missionaries, pastors and teachers” (The Twentieth Century New Testament).

“And he gave some to be apostles, and some, prophets; and some, evangelists, and some, pastors and teachers” (American Revised Version).

“And his gifts were that some should be apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, some pastors and teachers” (Revised Standard Version).

“And he gave to the Church some as apostles, and some as prophets, and some as evangelists, and some as pastors and teachers” (William Barclay).

Whatever else may be involved, this passage does not refer to bestowing “spiritual gifts” upon apostles, prophets, evangelists, etc. For that reason it has not one thing to do with the cessation of those gifts. Whether they ceased or whether they did not is not alluded to in this verse. Some brethren are so uptight about the need for proving spiritual gifts have been abrogated that every time they see the word “gifts” they latch on to it and work it into their sermon outlines. At that, it may not be much farther off than some of the other things they include in those outlines.

The called-out community was created to enable every person to develop to the fullest potential in service to others. This meant that training was required. Accordingly, Jesus bestowed upon the community, as his gifts, special functionaries to equip and develop all of the members of the body, so it could be edified or built up “by the effectual functioning of every part.” M. R. Vincent says in his Word Studies in the New Testament, “Christ’s ministers are gifts to his people.”

There were four categories of special servants bestowed as gifts. The record does not say, “He gave some to be apostles, some to be prophets, some to be evangelists, some to be pastors, and some to be teachers.” He gave some to be pastors and teachers. The word “and” is from an original which joins two words, the latter of which defines or explains the former. We should read, “He gave some to be pastors, even teachers.” The pastors are the teachers. They are the elders, or bishops, and their duty is to instruct and train the gathered flock, to feed the sheep of God as shepherds. Do not forget that these offices are not positions. They are functions.

APOSTLES

The word “apostle” means one sent, that is, on a mission.

Four things are implied: a sender, the one sent, the ones to whom he is sent, and the message or mission to the latter. There are three kinds of apostles mentioned. There are apostles of God, of Christ, and of the congregations of saints.

Moses was an apostle of God under the old covenant. His commission is found in Exodus 3:10, “Come now, and I will send thee.” Jesus is the apostle and high priest of our profession (Hebrews 3:1). “He was faithful to him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all God’s house.”

There were twelve apostles of Christ. They were his special envoys, first to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and then to the whole world. They are unique and referred to as the twelve. They sit upon twelve thrones. Judging the twelve tribes of Israel (Matthew 19:28). There are only twelve thrones and there are only twelve apostles. Their names are engraved upon the twelve foundations of that great city, the new Jerusalem (Rev. 21:14). They are “the twelve apostles of the Lamb.” In spite of some modern teaching to the contrary, there are no modern apostles of Christ Jesus, no new ambassadors.

Any person sent forth upon a special mission by a congregation was an apostle of that congregation. This is true whether he was designated an apostle or not. Several such persons are named in the scriptures. In that sense, of course, there are apostles today. Our word “missionary” is applicable when such a person is sent on his way by others.

PROPHETS

A prophet, in the new covenant usage of the term, is one who speaks forth under divine impulse. He is not necessarily a foreteller, but a forth-teller, as the name indicates. The prophet received revelation (1 Cor. 14:3-9) and declared the counsel of God, using his gift to speak unto men for edification, exhortation and comfort, which means to build up, stir up, and cheer up.

The position of the prophets in the divine arrangement was next to that of the apostles. “And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, etc.” (1 Corinthians 12:28).

Sometimes we are asked why, if we have evangelists and teaching pastors in the body now, we do not have apostles and prophets. We do! What was said by Paul in a wholly different context may well apply here. “For the gifts and calling of God are irrevocable.” We have the same apostles and prophets the reconciled community has always had, else we are a temple without a foundation. As surely as Christ is still the chief cornerstone, that surely the apostles and prophets are still in the foundation. And it is a living foundation!

The office is still there, but the apostles and prophets had no successors, for the simple reason that they fulfilled their function. They were the recipients of God’s revelation. That which was a mystery, which in other ages was not made known to the sons of men, was revealed to the apostles and prophets by the Spirit (Eph. 3:5). The mystery consisted of three parts, all related. The Gentiles would be fellow heirs. They would be members of the same body. They were to be partakers of the divine promise in Christ by the gospel, the good news of God’s magnificent redeeming act. When that was fully revealed and the final triumph of the rule of heaven was assured, there was no further need of other apostles and prophets.

God is not still laying the foundation. He is now building upon it and has been for centuries. To postulate that there are still apostles and prophets living among us is to imply that the mystery, the glorious secret, has not been fully declared. But Paul said it had been “now disclosed, and through prophetic scriptures by eternal God’s command made known to all nations, to bring them to faith and obedience” (Romans 16:26).

Even by the time Peter wrote, the function of prophets was being displaced by that of teachers or instructors. “But there were false prophets among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you.” There were prophets. There shall be teachers. If the office of the prophet was to continue why did the apostle make the distinction? W. E. Vine, in his Notes on Thessalonians (pages 196, 197) writes thus: “With the completion of the canon of Scripture prophecy apparently passed away, 1 Cor. 13:8, 9. In his measure the teacher has taken the place of the prophet. Compare the significant change in 2 Peter 2:1. The difference is that, whereas the message of the prophets was a direct revelation of the mind of God for the occasion, the message of the teacher is gathered from the completed revelation contained in the Scriptures.”

I do not believe there has been a single new truth revealed since the day that John wiped the ink from his reed pen on Patmos. The revelation of God was completed by “the revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, which he sent and signified by his angel unto his servant John.” There is much truth yet to be discovered, but discovery is not revelation. Discovery is the result of man’s probing. Revelation is the result of God’s providing. I am content to build upon the foundation. I shall not attempt to add to it and I will resist the attempt of any other man to do so.

EVANGELISTS

The taking of the good news to succeeding generations will always be required and thus the function of evangelizing will never be fulfilled until our precious Lord comes. Revelation is complete but the fact of reconciliation must continue to be announced so long as there is one person remaining who is “alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in him.” The word evangelist means “a bringer of good news.” The word for “preacher” in the new covenant scriptures is the word for herald. The herald was the town-crier, the one who announced the news before the day of the newspaper. He was the runner who bore news of the battle to the anxious people.

There is nothing in the original word for preaching to indicate whether the news was good or bad. A herald might bring tidings of defeat and rout of the home forces. But the news to be announced or proclaimed about God's program was inevitably good and glad. So the word evangel was adopted. The evangel is announcement of victory in Jesus. The gospel is not a law. It is not a code of ethics. It is not a bill of particulars to regulate the conduct of life. It is not a compilation of things we are to do for God. The gospel is the good news of what God did for us, when we were helpless to do anything for ourselves.

It is the declaration of the divine breakthrough. The Word became flesh. He brought his own tent and shared our pilgrim lot. He died for us. He was laid in a cold dark sepulcher. He arose again on the third day. He conquered the dread foe. He extracted the venom of death from the fangs of the serpent. That is the gospel. It is this which saves us if we keep it in memory. Praise God!

The evangelist was essentially an itinerant. He took the news to those to whom it was news. It really isn't news when you've heard it five hundred times, even if it is given a different title to keep you awake until you find out it is the same thing with only the label changed. Good news is exciting, exhilarating, effervescent, and world-shaking. There is not too much overwhelming joy in a diatribe on "Why We Sing and Do Not Play."

When people enlisted and pledged allegiance to Jesus, the evangelist gathered them together, taught them, trained them, and developed them until men of stature in their own number could shepherd and feed them, then he moved on to new fields to repeat the process. That is no longer the way we do it since we have "restored the Lord's church." We now have three kinds of preachers. They are evangelists, missionaries and ministers. If we happen to be members of the Christian Church we're liable to call these last "pastors." Some of them are so far afield they even call themselves that!

In our day evangelists are men who travel around and hold meetings in the United States. Does anyone know what it means to "hold a meeting"? I had a letter from a good brother who is a "located evangelist" whatever that is, and he wanted to know if I could recommend a place where he might "preach a meeting"? What in the world is that? Missionaries, in our vernacular, are men who are sent to heathen countries like Canada and Great Britain, and supported by money from Texas. They might even be sent to North Dakota or Idaho. These are foreign countries to some folks who live in Tennessee.

Ministers are men who are hired to serve a congregation. Sometimes there are five hundred people in it, who are unable to feed themselves and must secure a professional to throw down the fodder. Ministers must be subjected to a try-out in which they contest for the prize against others who are also vying for the job. In some places, the one who gets the job is the loser, and the one who does not is lucky. Ministers are to visit the sick, conduct funerals, listen to complaints, referee dog-fights among the sheep, and try to keep in good with the wives of the elders, so they do not have to move on down the valley. Most of them are not too successful and their theme song is the dirge "We are going down the valley one by one!"

What we have now is Church of Christism. It is related to the primitive ekklesia and the ancient order of things in the same manner that the spirit of the United States in this generation is to the Declaration of Independence. We have what one good brother calls a "pattern theology." We have developed a pattern, made up of traditional interpretations and opinions, partly borrowed and pilfered from our sectarian neighbors, and we have stretched and warped the scriptures to cover it. Worse than that, we've got two-dozen different patterns, everyone of which is faithful to the Book, and no two of which agree.

It is amazing how, after we drummed up our modern complicated scheme, we discovered that God had anticipated it all nineteen hundred years ago just like we created it. I have sad news for you. We have developed a first-class, dyed-in-the-wool, Grade-A clergy system. We will deny that, of course, until we die. But we have painted ourselves into a corner. We have been caught in our own snare. We have tripped over our own invention. And wonder of wonders, we now have evangelists evangelizing saved persons. It is enough to make angels weep and strong men bow themselves in shame, to see the corkscrew methods by which we try to validate something which God never revealed and no apostle ever conceived.

PASTORS AND TEACHERS

In a previous issue of the paper this year I demonstrated that the bishops were to be the pastors in the divine plan. In the modern mixed-up religious complex a bishop is often regarded as a single individual over several churches, whereas, in the scriptures, he is always regarded as one of several individuals over a single church. Our best current word for bishop is superintendent or supervisor. A bishop is given the privilege of overseeing the work of a local congregation by the constituency of that congregation. He has absolutely no authority to act in the affairs of any other congregation.

Bishops are pastors because of the nature of their relationship to the saints under their care. The word literally means “one who tends a flock, a shepherd.” In the imagery of the Near East in which God’s revelation was given, the people of God were always spoken of as sheep. Those entrusted with their supervision have accordingly been regarded as shepherds, or pastors. In order to understand the function and responsibility of spiritual shepherds, one needs to know the work regarded as essential to the natural shepherd in the Oriental mind.

Fortunately, the revelation of God makes both casual and direct reference to the responsibility of the shepherd in the natural and figurative settings. A good example is found in Jacob's protest to Laban, his father-in-law, who was a desert sheik in the land of Padan-aram. Of particular interest is the statement that for twenty years he endured the heat of the sun by day and the chill of the frost by night, and often went sleepless (Genesis 31:40). The welfare of the flock took precedence over his own ease and comfort.

I suspect that Ezekiel 34 should be required reading for every bishop who is to shepherd God's people. This remarkable chapter shows that the shepherds are to encourage the sheep and not exploit them. The flock must not be regarded as a source of personal gain. Shepherds must feed the flock and not feed on them. The diseased are to be strengthened, the sick are to be healed, the broken bound up, that which is driven away brought back, the lost searched for and found.

The charge made against the shepherds that they ruled with force and cruelty (verse 4) might well be made against many bishops in the Churches of Christ today. Men who are jealous of assumed authority make arbitrary decisions, create unwritten creeds of their opinions and decisions, and ride roughshod over those saints who seek to stand fast in the freedom wherewith Christ made them free. Despotism takes the place of loving concern and guidance. Ignorance and arrogance sometimes go hand-in-hand. The saints of God are reduced to the status of serfs under feudal lords. The congregation becomes a fief.

A good example of this is before me as I write. It consists of a letter of charges and accusations made against a man and his wife, humble saints in a congregation whose house of meeting they sacrificed to help erect. The letter is drawn up in cold legalistic language even while professing a love for the souls of the accused. They are promised no opportunity to present their defence before the saints with whom they have met for years. The case has been judged and the verdict reached. They are summoned to come forward and make a public acknowledgment of sin under penalty of being read out of the congregational association, or, as the letter so quaintly and unscripturally puts it, “the fellowship of the church will be withdrawn.” Contained in the official document of censure is the threat that a copy of the action taken will be mailed to every other “loyal church” in the area.

What are the grave offenses of which this rather aged couple are adjudged guilty? What are the heinous crimes they have committed? You will be inclined to disbelief when I tell you. One of the accusations is that the couple held Bible studies in their home without first consulting the elders and gaining their consent. Another, and I suspect that this is the crux of the matter, is that they passed copies of Mission Messenger along to some of the brethren. The funny thing about this is that two of the “official party papers” are kept in the tract rack in the foyer for any and all to pick up!

No greater honor can come to a person than to be excluded by such a sectarian group because they would not submit their minds to the tyrannical imposition of men. To be set free from such a system is to be promoted in the kingdom of heaven. To submit to such injustice through craven fear is to be less than a disciple of Jesus, for a follower of Christ can acknowledge but one Lord.

Having said this, I must add in all fairness to such elders, that they also are victims of “the System.” The restoration movement, losing its way and forsaking its ideal, has now fractured into a bevy of little sects. This is especially true of those who renounce the employment of instrumental music in conjunction with their public praise. These parties have little in common except a mutual adherence to immersion as essential to entrance into the fellowship and a mutual rejection of the instrument as essential to remaining in it. Each party has hoisted its own standard around which its members must encamp. The duty of the elders is to guard against erosion of the unwritten creed which is the official loyalty test, the term of communion or fellowship. The chief concern, therefore, is not for persons but for the status quo. Persons are valuable and worthy only as they support the party position.

This is the price to be paid for losing the marvelous concept of a divine family consisting of brothers and sisters, and substituting a hardboiled institution or organization made up of dues-paying constituents who must come through under penalty of hell. In such an arrangement the love of the flock gives way to the law of the pack. The overseers cease to be encouragers by example and become enforcers by authority. The love letters of the Spirit are no longer a staff upon which to lean during the pilgrimage but a policeman's truncheon with which to batter into submission those who insist upon personally digesting their pasturage.

Will the situation ever change? Of course it will. Such things always work their own rebuke. Already there are signs everywhere that revolution is taking place in the hearts and minds of men. Tomorrow is going to be brighter than today. The young men and women of the now generation who have caught the ideal of love will be the leaders of tomorrow. They will change things in God's good time. That is why I am content to labor and to wait!

Equipping the Saints

Mission Messenger (November 1974)

Volume 36

[Abstract]

In the very midst of a wonderful discussion on the unity of the Spirit, the apostle Paul injected a statement about the descent and ascent of Jesus (Ephesians 4:9, 10). The translators appointed by King James I thought it was parenthetical and so indicated. I am not so sure that it was. The immediate concern is that Jesus is a gift-giving Lord. He is free and lavish. Every one of us receives grace, measured only by His bounty. No one is left out. No one is forgotten. Every person in Christ is a recipient.

Jesus descended as the greatest gift heaven ever bestowed. When He ascended He gave gifts unto men. When He came it was in a body of flesh. Every member of that body functioned to enable Him to carry out the divine purpose. He walked, talked and spoke to suffering humanity. His eyes looked upon the cringing woman taken in an adulterous act. His hand touched frightened lepers existing in the isolation of a living death. But the ultimate design of God could not be fulfilled while he was in a body of flesh.

To fill all things, to reach out to the universe He had to ascend. In doing so He left a spiritual body to carry on His mission among creatures of the flesh. Every organ in that spiritual body has a function. The body is not edified or built up by being ministered to, but by ministering. It is the whole body which must be appropriately joined together. Every joint must supply something. There must be an effective working in every part. This guarantees “the increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love” (verse 16).

The body is not one with ministers, but a body of ministers. It is not a kingdom with priests but a kingdom of priests. Every child of God is a minister. Every called saint is a priest. Every one is obligated to “show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light” (1 Peter 2:9). Turn to that verse and read it. Meditate upon the word “that” until its implication in this passage floods your consciousness. It is a tragic commentary upon the ability of man to confuse and corrupt to behold what he has done to the body of Christ. He has manipulated and moulded it after his own image. He has defined and confined it, organized and disorganized it. He has debated and argued over its area of service and responsibility, and sought to control it by claiming the authority to speak for its head.

Nothing is sillier than to talk of “the social gospel” as if there were another gospel. Nothing is more ridiculous than to withdraw the salt from the putrefying mass and put it into a theological salt shaker on an ecclesiastical shelf. It is a sin to put the light under any bushel, but the sin is compounded when the basket used to hide it is the church. Members of the body of Christ must touch man physically, morally, mentally and spiritually, as the Master did. And like the Master they must leave their lovely heavens and go where men live, and suffer, and agonize and die. Whatever Jesus did for men while in a body on earth, the body of Jesus while on earth can do for men. It can never be wrong for the body to minister as did the head.

All of this is interesting to me. I just had to say it. I admit it was only secondarily the theme of Paul in Ephesians 4. He was interested primarily in showing that Jesus left no stone unturned in providing for the functioning of the body when He returned to heaven. If He had not gone away the enabling Spirit could not have come as the other Helper. In order to fill all things, Jesus gave special gifts to the gifted body. In our issue for last month we learned that His gifts to the body were special functionaries. There were four categories of these— apostles, prophets, evangelists and teaching shepherds, or pastors. In this present issue we are to learn the divinely ordained function of these in the community of the reconciled ones.

As a proper approach to this I entreat you to stop right now and read Ephesians 4:1-16. I wish I were in your home or office where we could read it together. I deplore the limitations of cold print. But please read it and underline in the text the words “in love” in verses 2, 15 and 16. We must make allowances for one another in love. We must speak the truth in love. The body must edify itself in love. Love is the answer to impatience, harshness and decay. Love must regulate our mutual association, our speech and our contribution to the upbuilding of the majestic body. Because we are in a culture hooked on the success motif, a capitalistic society where often “the Madison Avenue man in the gray flannel suit” dreams up gimmicks and promotions to mesmerize the public, we are often betrayed into thinking that if we could just hit on the right commercial we might lead the public to our trough and soon outgrow “the other sects” in number. This is a vain hope. It is a fragile fantasy.

Programs can be dreamed up and drummed up by very unloving people who regard others as statistics and so many scalps on the partisan totem pole in front of the orthodox tepee. But the only dynamic which will change this world is love. I mean love for the unlovable, love for persons whom you cannot like. You would not need to be forbearing in love if everyone saw things exactly as you do. If you love only those who love you, you would make a first-class publican according to Jesus, but you would not truly be a child of the Father.

Every gift must be exercised in love. Love validates every gift and sanctifies every sacrifice. You can have the faith that moves mountains like anthills, but without love it would amount to zero. You could surrender your body to be reduced to ashes by the flame at the martyr's stake, but it would be a useless gesture without love.

What was the real purpose of Jesus in bestowing evangelists and instructional shepherds upon the body? Was he creating a special caste to be trained and put up for hire as the ministers of the flock? Millions think so, or their actions belie their thoughts. I deny that this was the intention of the Father as judged by His wonderful revelation. I am going to make some statements which are emphatic. I make them now so you can decide whether you want to read further. I have no desire to have a captive audience. It is possible to walk out on one in print as it is when he is personally present. But whether you continue to read or not, remember that your disagreement with my thinking will in no sense militate against my love for you.

If there is any hostility it must be in your heart toward me. I feel absolutely none toward you. My love is not conditioned upon your seeing these things as I do. I accept you as my brother because the Lord accepted you as His child. My love for you is based upon the Lord's love for us. "Beloved, if the Lord so loved us, we ought also to love one another." It is just that simple with me. I shall express my honest thoughts. If you can agree, praise God. If you cannot agree, praise God anyhow!

1. Every gift bestowed by God, whether conveyed naturally or supernaturally, mediately or immediately, is designed to be used for the good of all and for the edification of the body.

2. The community of the saints is a fellowship created for the purpose of enabling every disciple to develop to the fullest degree of his potential in whatever area he is endowed of God.

3. Any system which operates in such a manner as to inhibit or sublimate the use or development of any gift of God is detrimental to the cause of Christ and can never restore the primitive order to the ekklesia of God.

4. The training and developing of a special class or caste to minister to the ekklesia, or for the ekklesia, to the exclusion of the development of every member of the body as ministers, is foreign to God's purpose and plan. It can never have the divine sanction or approval. Every organism on earth is strong only in proportion as it is able to carry out the purpose for which it exists. The fact that it may be successful in accomplishing something else is no indication of strength at all. If a school is known for the beauty of its architectural structure but its students are uneducated and helpless to face the world, that school is a failure. If the human body has one organ which has shown prodigious development while the others are all weak and decrepit, the body is not strong, but weak. A man whose arms and legs are paralyzed is not strong merely because he is a good talker and has eyes with unimpaired vision.

So that I may not be misunderstood, let me be very explicit! The practice of hiring a man as the minister of a congregation of saints is without scriptural warrant. It creates an office unknown to the revelation of God, try to justify it though men will. The very concept of putting up a sign reading "Church of Christ— John Doe, Minister" is sectarian and unscriptural. It will not make it any less so to childishly put "Vocal Music" in parenthesis under "Church of Christ."

Why not put John Doe, Priest, upon our signs? If every Christian is a minister, and every Christian is a priest, and one can be hired to be "the minister" for the ministers, why can he not be "the priest" for the priests? I hope that you will not want to hang me when I say that the average professional minister of "The Church of Christ" actually is more of a priest than he is a minister. Our liturgy or ritual is different than that to which our Roman Catholic friends are subjected, but whatever it is it is conducted by “the minister.” He is the front man until the elders fire him and he must remove to another diocese.

The congregation is no longer a family of brothers and sisters gathered around a thanksgiving table of the Father. It is a convocation of communicants or parishioners, gathered before an altar, a sacred desk. When all are seated the man of the hour comes in and issues a priestly summons to worship. He intones the prayers, reads from the sacred volume, delivers the homily, and thus fulfills the role for which he is reimbursed. This is not a social gathering of saints at all but an organizational approach. Is there no place for an evangelist? Is there no place for teaching shepherds? Of course there is! They are the gifts of Christ to the body and God never gave a useless gift. But we can divert gifts from the purpose intended by the donor and this is what The System has done. If a father presents a car to his son as a gift so that he may more easily attend school and the son uses the car for an immoral purpose it does not argue that there is anything wrong with the car. What has happened is that we have used the gifts of God to the body in a way which Jesus did not intend.

But The System has so cleverly disguised itself that we now confound it with God’s revelation. It has substituted tradition for the divine purpose and insinuated itself into our thinking until we have been intellectually drugged by it. We are addicts. We cannot survive without it. And we dare not experience the withdrawal symptoms. Our brethren have been converted by The System and they have been converted to it. We would be much more honest if we would just admit that we are hooked. But like any addict we are bitter toward any person who accuses us of addiction, and especially hostile toward one who tries to rescue us from our state or condition.

If you are still with me, I’d like to have you do me a favor. Turn again to Ephesians 4, and by the side of each verse from 11 to 16, put down these captions as guidelines for our discussion. By verse 11 write “Special Functionaries.” By verse 12 write “Specific Purpose.” By verse 13 “Scholarly Stature.” By verse 14 “Safety From Deception.” By verse 15 “Speaking Acceptably.” By verse 16 “Serving the Body.” Of course Paul didn’t give “book, chapter and verse” as a lot of our brethren caught up in the proof-text syndrome refer to it. Sometimes the versification is arbitrary. Certainly my verse labels are so. They are merely handles with which to grasp on to thoughts in an unbroken sentence. In the King James Version these six monumental verses are contained in one sentence.

Jesus gave some to be apostles, some to be prophets, some to be evangelists, and some to be instructional shepherds. Why did He give them? What was the purpose of these gifts to the body? The answer is “For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ.” But if prizes were being given out for verses most often misunderstood, this one would certainly win a ribbon.

What does it mean? Look at it again. Note that the word for appears three times. But the first word is not the same as the last two. It comes from pros, a term which implies implementation of purpose. Probably the very best rendering here is “with a view to.” The gifts of Christ, the special functionaries, were given with a distinct view or purpose in the divine mind. The word “perfecting” is from katartismos. Originally it meant to restore something to its proper place. From this it took on the connotation of properly arranging and putting things in order, and finally, making complete and functional. A good translation here would be training, qualifying, adapting or fitting. The evangelists and shepherds are to train the saints.

Work is from ergon, the word for employment or task. Ministry is from diakonia, the word for service of any kind. W. E. Vine points out that here it is “not in the sense of an ecclesiastical function.” No one can determine by seeing the word ministry in the sacred scriptures what kind of service is implied. This must always be defined by qualifying and explanatory terms. The same word used to describe the work of Timothy is employed to describe that of Martha, who applied to Jesus to draft Mary as an “associate minister” (Luke 10:40). One who mows the lawn surrounding the meetinghouse is as much a minister of God as one who stands in the pulpit.

The word “for” here is from eis, as it is in the next and last usage in this verse. It signifies unto or into. “For the work of ministry” simply means unto the work of service. Edifying is building up or strengthening. Verse 16 shows that the body is to be self-edifying. It is built up by being fitly joined together through the effectual working of every part. It is not that someone comes in to build up the body, but rather, what is in the body builds it up. A physical body may have an occasional shot in the arm, but it is the exercise of all the members which really builds it up. The same is true of the spiritual body. It is consistent spiritual growth and not an occasional “revival” which makes a strong congregation. You revive something that is dead, and that which is living, functioning and working properly, would not have time to attend a revival. I am sure what I say here will not be popular!

THE ENABLING GIFTS

Now we are ready for what Paul is teaching about the gifts bestowed by Jesus when He made His ascent to glory. Remember that his gifts were special functionaries. “And his gifts were that some should be apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, and some teaching shepherds, with the view that these should train and equip all of the saints to carry on the work of service, so that the body would be built up by the efforts of all.”

I doubt that any of us who honestly and objectively survey the fragmented restoration movement today can say that we have restored this concept of carrying on the work of ministry. God's method is to equip all of the saints to function to the highest degree in the exercise of their gifts. Ministry is not the work of one man or two. It is the responsibility of every member of the body. The arm is to function as an arm. The ear is to function as an ear. But it is by the cooperative work of every organ that the organism grows.

The System has betrayed us into struggling along on our own until we can accumulate a sufficient amount of money to hire someone as "our minister." If he is successful in increasing the number enrolled upon our roster we think in terms of hiring an associate, or assistant minister. As these develop in skill and acumen through use, the other members grow spiritually flabby through disuse. Eventually as "familiarity breeds contempt" and the personality of "the minister" fades or palls, we let him go and look for a new face to grace "the pulpit." Brethren are always seeking a minister instead of seeking to minister.

Most of us do not know that the word "pulpit" is a transliteration of the Latin pulpitum, a stage for actors. Our British brethren are correct when they talk about "the speaker's platform" but never about "the pulpit." The very idea of a pulpit determines the attitude of those who gather with us. When one attends a theater he does not go as a participant in the drama. He pays admission and attends as a spectator. He waits nervously for the show to begin and when it is over he heads for the parking lot to try and beat the traffic jam.

It never occurs to him to take a place in the spotlight. He is a watcher, not a worker. He is an observer and sometimes an objector. But he is not one of the players. We are losing the battle because we have changed the purpose of God from a well-trained army in the battlefield to a content group in the bleachers meeting to watch a gladiator thrust at an unseen and sometimes imaginary foe.

Regardless of oratorical ability, if an evangelist or an elder does not train the saints— all of them— to minister according to their gifts, that evangelist or elder is not doing what God expects of him. He is not fulfilling the purpose of Christ in bestowing his function upon the body. You do not train soldiers by lecturing to them but by allowing them to use their weapons under proper supervision. Soldiers cannot always train with wooden guns or cap pistols. They learn best when under fire. Saints should be taken out on field trials and taught to meet the opposition face-to-face.

Suppose that an elder not only cannot train the brethren under his care but is himself untrained and helpless. What should he do? The answer is simple. He should resign. He should not have been ordained in the first place. The scriptures specify the qualifications for a bishop. It is wrong to violate and ignore those qualifications and deliberately appoint someone who does not have them.

It is a sin to put men in to “fill a vacancy” or to conform to humanly-contrived by-laws, when the brother is not able to discharge the duties of his function. An elder must be apt to teach. He must be able to exhort and convict the gainsayers. If he cannot do so he should step down. One does not need to be a bishop to be a Christian, but he will be held accountable for accepting a responsibility for which he has no qualification.

But I am told there is no scripture for resigning. Of course not. The word of God assumes there will be no one ordained as a bishop who is not qualified. If one is gifted as an administrator and can meet the other divine requirements he should exercise his gift. He should do so willingly and not under constraint or pressure. If he is unable to meet the requirements he ought not to retain the place. A bishop does not occupy a political office. He fulfills a function. He does not qualify because he gets votes but because he meets God’s specifications.

There is no such thing as an elder emeritus, or a minister emeritus. Such designations are dreamed up to pamper human pride, of which some preachers have more than their fair share. They are bestowed to make men my age feel good and appreciated so they will not think they have been laid on the shelf to be replaced by younger men who have a lot of hair. But you couldn't run fast enough to pin a title like that upon me. Emeritus indicates someone who has served out a term and then retired with a title corresponding to that he held in active service. But I am a minister for life. My term will end in death. I enlisted for the duration. God made me his minister the day I was born into his family. I may not always minister in the same way, but I intend to serve my Captain until the waves of Jordan take me under and sweep me over to the other side. I want no special titles! I just want to serve Him whose call I heard echoing over life's hills when He found me.

A lot of folk become incensed when I talk about training every saint for "the ministry." Even my brethren who are preaching feel uneasy and inwardly upset by such talk. They immediately jump to the conclusion that I am implying that every person would be trained to "make talks" on Sunday morning. Actually, that is probably the easiest thing to do and the least effective form of ministry in the church. I know one preacher who says he "gets up his sermons" while on the golf course. After listening to some of them I am sure he is correct. If he cannot hit the ball any better than he does the mark, he needs a computer to keep track of his score. But when people are sick, discouraged, frustrated and depressed, they do not need someone to "earn his salary" by getting up and "delivering a sermon" on the sin of supporting Herald of Truth, a pretty effective radio and television program of the "Churches of Christ" opposed to use of instruments in conjunction with the public expression of praise to the Father of mercies.

The primitive saints did not gather to hear a sermon. The word isn't in the scriptures. The idea is not there either. They met as a family to sit down at a thanksgiving memorial service. They came to share their sufferings and the account of their persecutions and to recite their victories. They came to petition the Father to grant them boldness in the face of brutal adversaries. And Paul said they could all speak one by one, that all might be comforted, and all might be built up. He declared that those who spoke did so to build up, encourage and cheer those who needed it. What a gathering it must have been when brothers and sisters tearfully embraced.

They did not hold services, they rendered them. The service did not begin when they met in a third-floor loft or tenement for a communal meal, but when they gave each other a holy kiss and went back out into the raw and bloody pagan world. One of my favorite historians writes: "There is scarcely anything said in the history of the second and third centuries of Christians who could, in any distinctive sense, be called missionaries. The trader on his journey, the soldier in the camp, the slave in the house, the philosopher among his disciples, as well as the friend among his friends and the mother among her children: these all did their part in diffusing the knowledge of the truth which they felt to be of God, and to which, they were assured, God would give the victory."

At first the church had no "missionary program." It was God's missionary program. The saints did not send out missionaries, they were missionaries. If there were those who went to regions beyond, those who remained behind helped them in their needs, but those who went were no more missionaries than those who remained. The saddest commentary on our modern state is that brethren no longer have a sense of mission to the world. They support programs rather than becoming involved. And because they are frightened to go out into the big world which God has made they create their own little worlds and mill around in them and thus salve their consciences. The fact that we now draw up charts depicting various departments — evangelistic, benevolent and missionary— speaks volumes about what has happened unto us. We have not only fragmented human personality but we have fragmented our approach to life.

BECOMING A FAMILY

Equipping the saints for carrying on the work of ministry means far more than holding public speaking classes. It might include that, but again it might not. The first thing we must do is to forget the concept of “church” in its modern connotations and become once again a family. There is nothing more stagnating than institutional churchiness with the stuffiness of those who maintain it. In a church you are a member of an organization. You are a statistic, a name in the card index to be filed under the proper letter where the secretary can locate you. There isn’t too much warmth or human compassion about being a member of a church.

In a family you are a brother or sister, not because of the way you dress or talk but because you have been born again. You are accepted, not because you have a lot going for you but because you came to Him when He called. Churches are hung up on structures, drives for money, fights over the color of the rug on the pulpit, and squabbles about whether you should kneel for prayer in “the sanctuary” or stand as stiff as a ramrod.

I hope you’ll not become too aggravated at me for what I am going to say. I doubt that we will ever be able to train for service to dying humanity in our so-called “church buildings.” We have sanctified our brick and stone. We have dedicated them, and in the very act of doing so we created an artificial setting where we cannot act naturally. We have stained glass windows to filter light in a kind of ghastly type of flecks upon the pages of the hymn books. We have lights that are manipulated from a console so they can be brightened or dimmed to affect our moods. Home was never like this!

Even if you were having a good time in the parking lot, that is squelched as soon as you hit the front door and enter the foyer. As one mother said to her little freckle-faced kid, "Wipe that smile off your face. You're in church now!" I suspect our best training for service will come in the homes of our pagan neighbors, at the shop-bench where we work, or in the hospital where children are screaming and older folk are quietly weeping in their pillows from fear and pain.

But we are victims of our past! Tradition has shot us down! We have been taken by the Goths who deposed rulers and imposed architecture. We somehow feel holier when we are in "the Lord's house." We forget that we are the Lord's house and He is in us. Not long ago a sister who went over on Wednesday evening to clean up the house, wash the dishes, sort and put things away in a house where a young mother had died that afternoon, confessed that she felt guilty because she had to miss prayer meeting. She was a prayer meeting! I imagine the angels were laughing and clapping hands in glory as they looked down and saw prayers translated into soap suds and detergent.

Now all of this brings up some real questions. For instance, what about a young lad who goes away to school to "study for the ministry" as we so oddly phrase it, and then is "hired" by "the pulpit committee" of a congregation which does not want to be trained, adapted or fitted? Many congregations have no intention of ministering. They do not come to minister. They come to be ministered unto. That's one way in which they differ from Jesus. There are a lot of other ways I will not mention.

Such congregations are composed of runners who do not intend to run. They are composed of soldiers who do not intend to fight. They are spectators. They came to see the action and not engage in it. They do not want to take the sword of the Spirit. They want to watch a sparring match once a week. And they are not going to pay someone to disturb the status quo. They are not going to come out of the grandstand and get into the arena.

When congregations hire a man they want to own him. In that personality-eroding rivalry experience called “the trial sermon” a man is sized up not because of his ability to put the saints to work, but because he appears to be a good mixer, and one who is “safe.” He will not disturb things. He will be content to work in the morgue without trying to get the cadavers to rise and walk. Congregations like this hire men to enhance “the community image” of the church. Remember that congregations do not hire prophets. They hire priests. And priests are defenders of traditions. They do not rock the boat. They only miss it! Congregations which create images always end up worshiping them. And to try and change the image is like attacking a god, an object of adoration and praise.

Can such places really be changed? I doubt it! Those who compose them did not enlist to fight the good fight of faith. They did not sign up to fight at all. Many of them came in under emotional stress. In highly-charged situations they were impressed with a burden of overpowering guilt. Those who were young and plastic manufactured guilt out of purely normal human feelings. They were baptized not so much to live for Christ as to be able to live with themselves. There was never a thought of getting into a fray where one might be battered, bruised, persecuted or even massacred. They had no thought of full-time service. They were caught up in a crusade, or driven in with a drive!

Many such persons live in a state of peaceful co-existence with Satan. They do not like him and they resent him, but they have no strategy to develop where they can engage in a toe-to-toe slugging match with him. They come unstrung when their children grow up and start “running with the wrong crowd” and drop out on Sunday and Wednesday nights, and grumble about having to get up and attend on Sunday mornings. They have a momentary heart-flutter when they learn that a family from “the Lord’s church” has started attending with the Baptists. But they rationalize that the family was never very stable anyhow and the wife was always asking disturbing questions about why we do things as we do.

Shall the preacher quit and go somewhere else? Shall he opt out and get a job teaching school or selling life insurance? Neither of these would be wrong. One does not “leave the ministry” when he gets another job. He is as much a minister as he ever was. The only way to leave the ministry is to forsake Christ. But suppose that one wants to continue working with the brethren directly. Shall he “resign” and look for a new pasture? Where will he go?

The institutional image is well nigh universal and while some places are successful in holding a huge crowd, and in promoting a large building program in the suburbs, this does not mean that such a place is a more valiant company of combat troops. They will be fortunate if they do not end up tomahawking each other over the new building. It is easier to lose yourself in a large congregation. You can go through the motions without becoming involved. You do not really have to know the others, and hopefully they will not get too thick with you. In large congregations you can be socially polite without being warm. You can be attached to the place while being detached from the people. You must quit evaluating size with strength. There is a lot of difference between muscle and blubber!

I'd like to suggest an alternative. It is based upon the facts of life. It recognizes that the condition with which we are confronted is not ideal. It simply faces up to things as they are and not as we would like to have them. It is not original with me. Few things are! I have seen it hinted at in various books but I really got “zapped” with it while reading the fascinating biography of Count Nicholas Ludwig von Zinzendorf, who was born May 26, 1700. During his lifetime this man was famous wherever Christ was named. He was deeply loved by slaves in the West Indies, Eskimos in Greenland, Indians in Pennsylvania, Hottentots in South Africa, and Negroes in Surinam. I mean that! Philip Doddridge called him “that blessed herald of the Redeemer.” John Wesley wrote to him and asked him to pray in his behalf.

Perhaps there has never been a more ardent worker for unity of all believers than this man, who wrote, “All fellowship which is only based on agreement of opinions and forms without a change of heart is a dangerous sect.” The prayer of our dear Lord for all of us to be one became a passion, almost an obsession with this wealthy nobleman.

Early in his lifetime, probably from the Pietistic movement, Zinzendorf caught the concept of ecclesiolae in Ecclesia (little churches within the Church). In every congregation there is a majority which is satisfied, immobile and stuck. They are legalistic and formal. But in every group there are also those who “sign for Jerusalem.” Their hearts are tender and open. They seek a closer relationship with the infinite. This is not only true of congregations in a specific movement but it is true of the whole range of believers in Jesus in every denomination and sectarian group.

The greater number in a congregation is like a backlog in a fireplace. You can strike matches and hold them against it until you are worn out, and no flame will be kindled. But if you will apply fire to God’s kindling wood and then push it against the backlog you may be able to start it burning. In practical application this means that while one is carrying on his “routine work” in a congregation he must ever be searching for those whose spirits “pant for God.” In small groups in homes these must meet to pray, train themselves in the Word and develop a strategy for capturing the minds of men and bringing their thoughts into captivity.

They must come to regard themselves as shock troops. They are God’s Minutemen. They are commandos for Christ as I wrote in my book on that theme. They must not desert the army whose members helplessly mill around in the mess hall. If they flake off or flack out they will never reform them. No reformation is ever affected from without. All reformations are wrought by those who stay in. Commandos fight apart from the regular army but always as a part of the regular army. There may only be three or four in a large congregation willing to endure the rigorous training essential to well-honed combat forces. Let them train! God has always worked with remnants. He does not need a majority. He saved the whole world of mankind once with eight persons. A yeast cake does not have to fill a dishpan in order to motivate the dough to do so!

Did you read this statement by Elton Trueblood? “The more we study the early church the more we realize that it was a society of ministers. About the only similarity between the Church at Corinth and a contemporary congregation, either Roman Catholic or Protestant, is that both are marked to a great degree, by the presence of sinners. After that the similarity ends, for we think it is normal for one man to do all the preaching, while the others are audience, whereas, in Corinth, many did the preaching. ‘When you come together,’ reported their most famous visitor, ‘each one has a hymn, a lesson, a revelation, a tongue, or an interpretation.’”

SCHOLARLY STATURE

“Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ” (Ephesians 4:13).

Here is the divinely-ordained goal of the equipping ministry. It is the ideal of the Father for all of His children. The original for “till” does not necessarily relate to time. It may designate the summit or peak, the highest point reached. But the word which must be emphasized in this verse is all. “Till we all come.” This is the reason for training everyone.

An army is not strong just because it has a handful of outstanding fighters. A football team is not likely to win if only the quarterback and fullback have received coaching. The function of evangelists and shepherds is to train a team, to adapt the saints to the work of ministry so that all will be welded together as a unit in faith and knowledge of the Son. In his book The Church and The Churches W. E. Vine writes, “The ‘we all’ signifies all believers as a body, the complete company.”

It is not enough to have a few leading citizens in the kingdom of heaven who are conversant with the dynamic of faith and living in conformity with the character of Jesus. It is not enough to have a few branches in the vine bearing fruit or a few organs of the body functioning properly. A perfect man is a mature man, one who is capable of performing adequately and skillfully in any field in which he may be called to serve. It takes every member of the body to make a complete man. God has no plan for non-functioning members in the body. Complete development is defined as “the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.”

We have developed false standards of measurement. Sometimes we measure by the number of people who enter our structures for “the body count.” Sometimes we gauge strength by the amount of “this world’s goods” in the congregational bank deposit. Sometimes we use as a measuring-rod the number of men in the mission field whom we support. None of these are the criteria of God. Only our growth toward the stature of the fulness of Christ really counts. In attaining this every person contributes the share made possible by the divine gift. How we employ our gifts in ministering determines the strength and vitality of the body.

SAFETY FROM DECEPTION

“That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive.”

Here is another reason for training every saint, for establishing every one in the faith, and instructing every one about the character of God’s Son. The untrained and ignorant, the immature and untaught, become the victims of deception. We are to be like children in some respects, but in understanding we are to be men. Knowledge is the best armor against delusion, the best weapon against error. To send our brethren into the world untaught is to send them forth naked against the sophisticated wiles of the wicked one.

It is not a sin to be ignorant but it is a sin to remain thus. It is not wrong to be a child but it is not right to continue to be one when you could grow up. The term “tossed to and fro” was applied by the Greeks to ocean waves. Anyone who has stood on the beach and watched the breakers knows the instability and restlessness which characterizes them. There are individuals who are victims of every passing fancy and fad. They are influenced by bizarre doctrines and fanciful opinions and speculations. They are not really “here today and gone tomorrow,” because sometimes they are not even here today!

The expression “carried about with every wind” was used to describe a ship without a helm, in a storm at sea. Such a vessel cannot keep a definite course. It is at the mercy of every gust sweeping violently over the ocean. Doctrines are referred to as wind because they have power to move men in a certain direction. They can carry the minds of men along with them. Albert Barnes says on this passage, “No man can be useful who has not settled principles. No one who has not such principles can inspire confidence or be happy, and the first aim of every convert should be to acquire settled views of the truth.”

Children are often governed by whim or impulse. Their attention span is very short and extremely limited. Every fleeting thought sends them off on a new track. One of the reasons for developing the saints is to give them a foundation upon which to build and to protect them from being swept from their moorings. In Much Ado About Nothing, Shakespeare wrote, “He wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat.” Faith that is as fickle as fashion will accomplish but little toward the stability of mankind.

The word “sleight” is extremely interesting. It is from kubeia, a cube, and refers to dice used in games of chance. It is intended to condemn the idea of regulating actions, conduct or life by opinions which result from chance. Human behavior cannot be decided by drawing straws, or by rolling dice. Men who seek the guidance of God by opening the Bible at random, rather than through diligent study and prayer, should give thought to the implications of this statement. There is an English proverb which says, “The best throw of the dice is to throw them away.”

“Craftiness” is from panourgia. This is a combined form consisting of pan, all, and ergon, work. It is literally “all-working.” It refers to one who works all of the angles, one who knows all the tricks of the trade. There are cunning men who seek to make merchandise of souls. Such men have a field day when they move into an area where people are emotional without being too rational, and where they make up in enthusiasm what they lack in knowledge. An informed congregation is a safer congregation. Charlatans shy away from those who know the Book and are trained for spiritual combat. The truth can make us free only when we are not free from the truth.

SPEAKING ACCEPTABLY

“But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ.”

The first six words specify an action, speaking; a subject, the truth; and an attitude, in love. The next eight words specify the object of the action, the result to be achieved. The truth must not be bottled up or kept in a mental container. It is to be shared. Silence is not always golden. Sometimes it is yellow. The philosophic Amien said, “Truth is not only violated by falsehood; it may be equally outraged by silence.” Emerson declared, “The greatest homage we can do to truth is to use it.”

I think that, in this context, the truth is used in contrast to the winds of doctrine, the decisions of chance, and the frantic activities of cunning craftiness. The last word in verse 14 is deceive. It is said that some “lie in wait” to deceive. This means they conceal themselves and their true motives. The alternative to this is openly to speak the truth. Only when we substitute truth for deception can we help our brethren grow. Years ago I read from the pen of someone and copied down for my own meditation these words, “Error always addresses the passions and prejudices: truth scorns such mean intrigue, and only addresses the understanding and the conscience.” Unity must be based upon reality and verity, which is what truth meant to the Asians whom Paul addressed in this letter we call the epistle to the Ephesians.

Of course, truth must be spoken in well-chosen words, and in kindness and concern. But I do not think that is what is meant here. Love has to do with the condition of heart rather than with the choice of words. Love is the realm in which God’s children operate, the kind of a life into which they have been called. In view of this they should speak the truth in love for each other. One does not deceive those whom he loves.

Verse 13 treats of spiritual manhood. Verse 14 deals with unnatural and prolonged childhood. The transition from one state to another is a matter of growth. Sometimes growth is lopsided. There are those who grow in some areas while in others they are deficient. God's design is that we advance in every department of life and in all things. We have already learned that our goal is the stature of the fulness of Christ. It is Jesus who must be our constant pattern. "More like the Master," should be our song and our dream.

We should not forget that this entire treatise of the apostle has to do with the "edifying of the body of Christ" (verse 12). It is for this all of the saints must be trained, fitted, adapted or equipped. It is for this that every gift has been given. No gift is to be used in solitude. No gift is to be used in isolation. All individual growth is for the purpose of encouraging body growth. But the body has a head, and it is that head into whom we must all grow up. Growth apart from Jesus is useless. The head is perfect, but we are not! The head is mature, but we are not! It is as we keep Him in mind and seek to reproduce His life that we constitute the body and contribute to the growth of this divine organism. No one who reveres Jesus will show disrespect for the body. He loved it and gave Himself for it!

SERVING THE BODY

"From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."

Study that verse carefully! It is the divine formula for body growth. It is God's recipe for the increase of the organism for which Jesus shed His blood. It can be stated as an equation. Unity plus togetherness plus work plus increase equals edification. The apostle starts with the whole body. It is true that we are joined to Jesus individually, but being joined to him, we are one body. I am one in Christ with every saved person on this earth. I am not joined to Jesus because I am joined to my brethren, but I am joined to my brethren because I am joined to Jesus.

We are not one because we share the same opinions, ideas, views or insights. We are one because we have been joined to one Lord. William Barclay writes, "A church where social and class distinctions exist is no true church at all. A real church is a body of men and women united to each other because all are united to Christ." Again, in another connection, he says, "We ought to realize that we need each other. There can be no such thing as isolation in the church. Far too often what happens is that people in the church become so engrossed in the work they are doing, so convinced of the supreme importance of the side of the work to which they have given themselves, that they neglect or even criticize others who have chosen to do other work. If the church is to be a healthy body we need the work that everyone can do."

Lesslie Newbigin writes in his book The Household of God, these words, "The unity of believers with Christ and with one another in Him is of a far deeper nature than intellectual agreement. It is not in its essential nature an intellectual agreement at all though necessarily it involves a certain amount of intellectual agreement about truths which can be expressed in propositional form . . . Within that unity a vast amount of intellectual disagreement is possible, though such disagreement will never be other than painful. It is never to be acquiesced in, and believers must always be seeking to convince one another of the truth as they see it, and learn from one another. But it can be borne when the Holy Spirit binds believers together in love, and it is made bearable by the assurance that one day we shall know as we have been known. The true character of this union of believers with one another in Christ is disastrously distorted when it is conceived of essentially in terms of doctrinal agreement. The effect of such distortion is to break the Christian fellowship into rival parties, each based upon some one-sided doctrinal formulation."

Another modern writer, an Oriental possessed of a keen analytical mind, whose name is Kokichi Kurosaki, in his book One Body in Christ, writes, “However, the reformers did not stop with separation from Rome; for having broken free from its bondage, they made their own institutional church. Then, almost immediately there appeared differences of opinion among them, and having learned well the lesson of sectarianism from the mother of that spirit, they now believed themselves to be the defenders of the true faith. Their only recourse to difference of opinion was separation, so there started an endless principle of division.”

It is the whole body that is joined to the head, and not merely one faction, party or sect. If one is in Christ he is in the one body regardless of what else he may be in. And I receive him not because he has joined something else, but because he is joined to Christ. God joins men to the divine organism and sometimes they join themselves to something else. I deplore the “something else” regardless of what it is. I do not receive any person because of that to which he belongs, but because of the One to whom he belongs.

“Fitly joined together.” This is from a word which originally meant to sew together, as one would take pieces of a dress or coat and fit them into their proper places and bind them to each other. It was used of ancient cabinetmakers who could join pieces of wood so skillfully that inspectors could hardly detect the line of juncture. It was often applied in the classics to musicians who played together in harmony. Harmony cannot be made by sawing away at a fiddle with one string. Harmony is produced by divergent instruments tuned to play in unison. An orchestra, like a congregation of saints, is an example of unity in diversity, the only kind of unity available to the created universe, as the critics of it aptly demonstrate.

“Compacted” is from a term which literally means “knit together.” There is a difference in knitting things together and in sewing them or pasting them together. A lot of brethren are merely stuck together. When problems arise they come unglued. Knitting requires interlacing or interlocking in a sense of interdependence. I am not merely tied to my brethren. I am knit together with them. If I pull away from them I might unravel the whole fabric of fellowship to which God has called us. My task is to strengthen our hold upon one another, regardless of how weak or frayed the thread may be.

Since I no longer receive people because they agree with me, I have been delivered from loving only those who are in a certain faction, or do things a certain way. Admittedly some of them are difficult. Every family has problem children. God's family has a lot of them. But they are real tests of the genuineness and sincerity of the relationship. When brethren write me up, and some of them do almost every week, I read carefully what they say. If it is true, I make corrections in my life so I can be more like Jesus. If it is not true, I forget it and go on and love them anyhow. It wasn't too long ago that I was bitter and factious, and thought I best served the Father by being hostile to His other children. Martin Luther said, "Give men time."

Congregations will not be held together by preachers and elders. Even some elders cannot hold together. If the brethren do not love one another more than they revere their opinions and speculations and interpretations, all of the preachers on earth cannot keep them together. They will sacrifice what they love least for what they love most. If they love their brainchildren more than they love God's children, they will kill God's children to protect their brainchildren. Joint is from a word meaning to bind, fasten or secure. The body is knit together by that which every joint supplies. Every Christian is a joint, a supplier of strength and solidarity.

Working is the Greek energeia, our English word energy. The energy is in every part, every organ of the body. If there is an energy shortage in the body it is because some of the brethren are “laying down on the job.” No member is useless. All are necessary. Every person who has had the patience to read this far, and who is not asleep, must realize that he is a vital part of God’s program for conquest of the world. I confess that I do not have a brother or sister I can afford to lose. If they are in Him, they are where I am. And I love them, even if they cannot love themselves.

Increase of the body! What a glorious thought! Edifying of itself in love. What a transcendent principle! Please forgive me for quoting again from the pen of William Barclay. “Jesus Christ is no longer in this world in the body; and therefore if he wants a task done for him, he has to find a man to do it. If he wants a child taught, he has to find a teacher to teach him. If he wants a sick person cured, he has to find a physician or surgeon to do the work. If he wants his story told, he has to find a man to tell it. Literally, we have to be the body of Christ, hands to do his work, feet to run upon his errand, a voice to speak for him . . . Here is the supreme glory of the Christian man— he is part of the body of Christ upon earth.”

If it doesn’t bore you too much I would like to close with a statement from Elton Trueblood. Read the last sentence carefully. It may form the basis of what I write about in the next issue.

“The notion that the professional minister’s main job is that of the conduct of public worship is something which we must destroy if we are to get ready for a larger and more fruitful team ministry . . . We must understand that, whereas public worship is important, it is important only as the beginning of a total process. The matter of chief importance is the steady continuous ministry of all the members, and the chief function of the pastor is to help people get ready for this ministry . . . The congregation must, accordingly, be reconstructed into the pattern of a small theological seminary with the pastor as professor.”

Time for Change

Mission Messenger (December 1974)

Volume 36

[Abstract]

I suspect the hardest thing for most of us to do is to change. It is easier to stay in a rut than to get out of it. When I was a “boy preacher” in North Missouri there were no hard-surfaced roads. The soil was gumbo, which meant that it literally rolled up in the wheels of a Model-T Ford, until you had to stop periodically and dig it out with a spade, or it would make progress impossible. When a heavy rain came, or the spring thaw began, no one even thought of going to town until after the mail carrier had made his run and cut a rut. You could then get in that rut and go to town almost without steering. The only thing that took your mind off your grocery list was the need for constant prayer that you’d not meet some “eager beaver” who didn’t know enough to stay home until the weather cleared up.

I remember one “character” whom I knew as a lad. One reason I recall him so vividly is that he scared the living daylights out of us. He was a big red-faced, raw-boned country type with a black handlebar moustache. We didn’t have policemen with which to threaten the children in those days so they threatened that he would get us if we didn’t watch out. We watched out! He was a tyrant to his family. He browbeat his haggard and bedraggled looking wife who had long since reached the conclusion that resistance was impossible.

His son ran away from home at an early age. The two daughters eloped and married when each was barely sixteen. Once, when the schoolteacher could no longer bear the thought of brutality toward the family, he risked going to the man's home to talk with him about changing his attitude. He got nowhere. He reported that the man said, "I don't want to change. I intend to have my way and go on just like I am until I die. You live like you want to live and I will do the same." He did just that! One morning when he did not come in for breakfast his wife went to look for him. She found him slumped into a heap at the back of the barn. His nerveless fingers still gripped the handle of the revolver with which he had blown out his brains. He committed suicide rather than make a change.

If it is hard for an individual to alter his course, it is even more difficult for an institution to do so. Traditions grow up which throttle it. Men become entrenched in power. They feel that they are indispensable. Influence blocs, chiefly concerned with monetary support, develop and successfully resent all reformation. If an intrepid crusader arises, he is quickly squelched. He is branded as a liberal, identified with all kinds of ideas which have "shock value" to keep the manipulated masses from ever reading what he is really saying. Party hacks take the platform to assail him from the safety of a rostrum to which he has no access, and thus assure that no original thinking is ever brought to bear upon the sect.

Few of my readers within the so-called "restoration movement" would deny the validity of what I say when applied to what they quaintly refer to as "the sectarian world." They know these charges are true when applied to Roman Catholics, Baptists, and Methodists. They deplore the fact that these structural organizations cannot be altered to become like "the Lord's church," a term they love to chew on like bubble-gum, and which they fondly apply only to themselves. But they bitterly resent any person who dares to imply they are equally guilty, and in dire need of making radical changes to become what Jesus intended for His spiritual body to really be.

I not only intend to imply that. I want to openly, frankly and candidly say it! We may even be the worst offenders. A non-sectarian sect is often the worst in the litter. We took a noble concept, enunciated by brilliant, peace-loving men, mostly Presbyterians, and we have mauled and hammered it into a conglomerate of narrow, intolerant factions, all of which we lump together in The System which we fondly call the “Church of Christ.” Not one of these parties rallying around its tribal standard is the body of Christ, and all of them put together do not constitute that body in its fulness. There are members of the body in all of them, for which I praise God. I also praise God that there are members of the body who are in none of them.

I no longer confuse The System which we have envolved with that marvelous spiritual organism which He created and for which the Son shed His blood. Each of our parties is composed of those who elevate some concept of truth above relationship with Him who is the Truth. Each faction has argued, debated and emphasized some aspect, opinion or deduction, into such prominence, that it has become the party totem, and the spiritual integrity of men is judged by their willingness to bow the knee to the decisions and delineations of the factional “powers that be.” Each party has its own “somewhats” and these call the shots, determine the policy, and ruin those who will not “play ball.” There is really no exception, because this is the fruit of the party spirit, and all parties are created by that spirit.

This is not to say that every faction in “the restoration movement” operates in the same fashion. In some parties the leadership is blunt, brutal and arrogant, exercising dominion through blatant threat and innuendo. In other factions the leadership is smooth, suave and political, manipulating the masses by cleverness and sweetness. The net result is the same. The party is resistant to change. It is under the domination of men who can pull the strings and get anything they want. Under a false facade of “local autonomy” the non-instrument Churches of Christ are really dominated by powerful leaders who have been elevated into prominence by being directors of all kinds of related institutions. Our brethren are not a theocracy or a Christocracy. They are governed by editorcracy— rule by editors! They are forced to goosestep to the tune banged out on printing presses in party headquarters, and woe be to him who marches to the sound of another trumpet!

I trust you will not allow your dander to rise or get in a big dither, and tell me I have done a grave injustice by creating a stereotype. I know there are exceptions to the rule in every one of our two dozen factions. One reason we do not know how many there are is because they have to stay underground. If the party ever gets the idea they are “liberal on fellowship” the roof will fall in on them. There are faculty members in all of the schools who have a vision beyond our narrow pale. There are preachers in many pulpits whose spirits chafe because they must conform to dogmatic and arbitrary elders, some of whom are still living in the nineteenth century milieu.

I also know there are congregations, God be thanked, which have resolved to be free in Christ Jesus. They can listen to anyone they wish to hear. They can even invite me to come and speak. When they do, some of the “local autonomy folk” in other congregations come over and tell them that they are making a cruel mistake, and will end up divided and split to smithereens. They tell them I have divided churches all over the country and have taken a post-graduate course in how to fracture factions. They always end up admitting they have never met me, heard me, or read a thing I have written. But their last preacher warned them against me and told them I had gone off the deep end and would “fellowship anyone.” Some of our preaching brethren cannot be trusted to report correctly the views of those with whom they differ. You have to take what they say with a twenty-five pound block of salt. A grain of salt won’t do.

There is nothing that hurts a partisan preacher more than to have someone else invade his private bailiwick, but there are more groups of brethren all of the time who are shaking off the yoke which neither they nor their fathers have been able to bear. There are still thousands of places playing in their own backyards, and kicking up dust in their own corrals, who could not even call upon a brother to lead songs or pray to God until he first went through the party customs and immigration service and received clearance to proceed. A lot of elders scrutinize your mental baggage pretty carefully to see that you've not brought along any original thinking to be used on your pilgrimage among them. Original thinking is a dangerous weapon to the party spirit. And a lot of elders think they are watching the sheep when they are merely guarding the sacred cows!

All of this boils down to the fact that reformers are in for "a heap of trouble." The situation, however, is no worse among us than it is in other segments of the religious complex. The reason is apparent. The hard core institutional status quo always results from the same spirit. What the members of the institution designate it does not change its origin or nature. And the defenders of the party seldom acknowledge they were wrong in launching it and never reverse their course. Thus division is sanctified, hostility is justified, and the faction becomes petrified.

It would seem that attempts at reformation are useless and wholly wasted. This is not true. Reformation must continue, not because ponderous institutions can be changed in a lifetime, but because there are always persons in every one of them who love truth more than party shibboleths and who will catch the vision and continue the task. I was caught up in the party spirit. I was a debater for and defender of tests of fellowship which were artificially contrived to give the party being. I was wrong. It was sinful. I am sorry!

I changed. If I learn other truths I will change again. All growth involves change. You cannot learn truths you did not know without growing in grace and knowledge and you cannot grow without changing. I have a real feeling that those of us who are heirs of what we fondly regard as “the restoration movement” need to make some real changes if we expect to survive and have any impact at all upon this intellectual age. God has not promised to keep enough people ignorant so we can “maintain our numbers.”

The fact is that every segment among us is losing its young people who are fleeing from the party image in droves. The ones who get fed up are not the careless and indifferent, but the more brilliant and perceptive. Bringing in a new professor to “parrot the party line” will not hold them. They have outgrown that kind of thing, and they do not forsake Christ. They simply resolve no longer to be confined in structures erected by men. They are all for the faith of the fathers but not too hep on the fathers of the faith. They seek to walk in the steps of the Master and are more open to the Spirit. I hold that our real hope lies with these young people who love truth more than tradition, and revere integrity more than factional fidelity.

1. We must change our vocabulary. Alexander Campbell knew this. He placed it at the very top of his list of goals for reformation. It is not enough to speak where the Bible speaks. We must also speak as the Bible speaks. We must make a distinction between the gospel which is a message to be proclaimed to an alien world, and the apostles’ doctrine which is a course of instruction for those who have responded to the gospel, and thus enrolled in the school of Christ. The gospel is to be announced to every creature. The doctrine is to be explained and expounded to those creatures who have “obeyed the gospel.” We are brought into the fellowship of the Father and Son through the gospel. In that fellowship we grow in grace and knowledge of the truth as we study and learn. But we do not grow up overnight, either in the fleshly or the spiritual realm. Fellowship is the fruit of faith, growth is gradual transformation in the realm of that faith. Fellowship can never be based on conformity in knowledge, and can only result from faith in and surrender to Jesus Christ as Lord.

We must distinguish between the new covenant written on the heart by the Holy Spirit, and the new covenant scriptures written with pen and ink by apostles and prophets. As God looks at it, and as we ought to look at it, the new testament does not contain twenty-seven books at all. The new testament which the apostles ministered was not written with ink, “but with the Spirit of the living God, not on tablets of stone, but on fleshly tablets of the heart” (2 Corinthians 3:3-6). The “books” are not a part of the new covenant. They are love letters addressed to individuals and groups of individuals, all of whom were already in covenant relationship. They do not constitute a written code, but are directives and guidelines. Our principle of action is love, not law. We are not under law, but under grace!

2. We must change our view as to the utility of so-called church buildings or religious structures. The primitive saints had no place uniquely dedicated to the carrying on of religious exercises. They would never have thought of erecting such a building in which to preach the gospel and try to convert the pagan world. They knew the difference between going into all of the world and trying to talk part of the world into coming to them. There is no sin in a congregation owning a house in which to gather if that congregation has a proper view of its use. There is no sin in not owning such property either, and the idea that a group can never really be “a church” until it appoints trustees and goes in debt for “property of its own” is a little bit silly.

Meetinghouses are to be drill-grounds for the soldiers of Christ, not a battlefield on which to meet the enemy. They are to be arsenals to which we come and replenish our ammunition when we have expended all of our available firepower against the enemy. The way in which most people fight the devil a box of spiritual cartridges will last a lifetime. Meetinghouses are to be development areas for the runners in the race and not the arena in which the race is run. The arena is the world and the spectators are not the other saints but the pagans. The Christians are not in the grandstand but on the track.

Such structures are filling stations where we come to get our batteries charged and our starters tuned up. They are places where we can get our tanks filled, although most of them have only “regular” and you cannot get a shot of high octane. You will be lucky in some places if there is no water in the regular. It is hard to put the “Go” in gospel when you are burning sermon-outline kerosene.

Our meetinghouses are company mess-halls. Here the troops gather to sit down at the table and eat and drink in memory of the Captain of our salvation. The early saints met to pray and the building was shaken. They came together to recount their victories through the Spirit and the Roman Empire was shaken. We need more meetings in which encounters may be recalled and gains consolidated. No army can ever be made an efficient fighting force by listening to weekly lectures of a lieutenant. We have confused training the force with entertaining the troops. Putting on a show at headquarters with singing and old jokes interspersed with sundry admonitions is a good way for us to become weaklings.

3. We must revise our thinking about ministry. Every child of God is a priest. Every disciple of Christ is a minister. This is the purpose of God. It deserves more than sickly acquiescence and pallid lipservice. To regard one man in the congregation as the minister is to discourage every other man from thinking of himself as a minister. If we are going to place the name of the ministers on the sign in front of the building, we ought to inscribe the whole congregational roster on it. For years we have been projecting ideas we never intend to implement. We have been espousing causes we never plan to launch. One who claims to believe in the ministry of all the saints ought to insist that he be given no special prominence. If every Christian is a minister there will be no need of getting new letterheads every time a preacher is sent packing and a new one moves in. That will help a little in these days of paper shortage. The fact is that a lot of brethren actually believe in a special clergy system. They want to be clergymen and they want to think of the other saints as their “laymen.”

When we talk of ministry, we should include every function of every member of the body. Visiting the sick, caring for orphans, mowing the lawn, sweeping the floor, repairing the roof, singing, praying, giving to relieve needs, baking cookies to take to the children’s home— all of these are ministry and those who do them are all ministers. Whatever is done in word or deed in the name of Jesus Christ to the glory of the Father is ministry. Please put the emphasis on that whatever! This means there are “women ministers” in the church. In fact there are no women in the church who are not ministers.

What we have come to call “pulpit ministry” in our unscriptural jargon, may be the least effective ministry in this modern age. When I compare a lot of talks I make with the very real service being rendered by others in service stations, hospitals, homes for the aged, and other places, I feel a little ashamed. But I thank God for everyone who in any manner ministers to this ripped-off world in ways that I cannot. The man who delivers groceries may sometimes do more good than the one who delivers sermons. However, all of us must minister in every way we can and allow God to put it all together!

4. We need to change our thinking on fellowship. This word, which literally means “to share a common life,” as it is so aptly rendered in The New English Bible is too majestic and profound to be kicked around as it has been in the two dozen hostile factions of the restoration movement. Fellowship in Christ Jesus is not something we extend or withdraw. It is a state or condition created by the Holy Spirit in which we share through the amazing grace of God.

It is not to be equated with endorsement. We are in the fellowship with many who think and do things we cannot condone. We also endorse things done by many with whom we are not in the fellowship. But if God and Christ can be in the fellowship with us while we are learning, growing and changing, surely we can be in the fellowship with others caught up in the human predicament, whose ideas and opinions cut across our grain. It all depends upon whether we love our ideas more than we love our brethren. With me it is not a question of whether I shall hold to my opinions or my brethren. I intend to hold to both, and I trust my brethren will do the same.

We are in the fellowship because we are in Christ, not because we are in agreement upon everything. To postulate fellowship upon conformity is to make it impossible for human beings. It is to lay the foundation for division rather than unity. A century of sordid strife should be enough to demonstrate that the prescription for oneness we have advocated was not written by the Great Physician. We have had only one remedy when differences arise and that is debate. We have had only one recourse when debate fails and that is division. But both debate and division are condemned as works of the flesh by the Holy Spirit. After a hundred years of debating we have just as many factions as we have always had. We have never debated a faction out of existence.

5. We must change our emphasis on the motto we have proclaimed. We borrowed that motto from a philosopher who lived centuries ago, but we have battered it into a meaningless mass by our carnal and ungodly wranglings. There is merit in repeating, "In matters of faith, unity; in matters of opinion, liberty; and in all things, charity." The first two have relevance for promoting harmony only when considered in the light of the third. Though I meticulously distinguish between faith and opinion, and have not love, it profits me nothing. Not all things are matters of faith. Not all things are matters of opinion. But all things must be dealt with in love for those who hold them, or this motto is so much poppycock. Not only must I deal with things of faith and opinion in love, but I must also do the same with the earnest attempt of every individual to relate matters to these categories.

Love will not allow me to impose my concept of faith upon another man's realm of opinion. The moment I attempt to do that there is at least one thing in which love is not my arbiter. I thus change the rules of the game to suit my own thinking. Even in gambling it is not considered fair to load the dice. What this means, of course, is that I must be forbearing with one who does not share my view about some of the distinctions. But I am commanded to do that. I am to be forbearing of others in love. Forbearance simply means to make allowance for another, so making allowance is the way of love. This means I must be tolerant of those who differ with me in opinion, and even as to what is a matter of opinion. Tolerance is not the endorsing of anything that is wrong. It is simply the enduring of one who thinks it is right.

If I hold the opinion that a thing is a matter of faith, and another holds the opinion that it is a matter of opinion, love will not allow us to divide from each other. If we do we will not divide over a matter of faith, but over our opinion as to whether it is a matter of faith. We must at least remain together until we can both decide into which category it must be placed. If we do so we will never divide, for if we reach agreement we will be in unity. If we never decide we can continue to discuss it and work together until Jesus comes. Then everything will be made plain. But if we are like the unrighteous servant who began to abuse and beat his fellows because his lord delayed his coming, we will have no peace now, and will have none then.

Our relationship to God is individual. I must determine for myself what is a matter of faith and what is a matter of opinion. I must do this by personal application of my mind and heart to the revelation of God. I cannot surrender my right or freedom to interpret the Bible for myself to any creed, clergy or clique. I am a firm believer in the right of private interpretation of the scripture. If I must answer for my thinking up there I will do it down here. No man or group of men on this earth will formulate my conviction. I will live with my conviction and according to it, and not allow it to be dictated by any party, segment or sect. I intend to be motivated by love for truth as I formulate my way of life under the lordship of Jesus, and motivated by love for all others who do the same.

I have mentioned changes which I consider long overdue in the particular movement of which we are heirs. Will that movement change? Will the splintered, fragmented, ripped-off, non-instrument Church of Christ change? There is no way of changing it as a unit because it is not a unit. Although each of the two-dozen or more parties has a loosely-regarded headquarters— a school, an editorial base, or a propaganda center— there is no national or international headquarters. Praise God for that! The Church of Christ is both congregational and partisan. The only way this modern complexity of factional cells can change is as thoughtful men in each party are changed.

That is happening! Brethren are being forced to examine anew the dogmatic and authoritarian structures in which they are trapped. Popery always works its own rebuke, whether manifested in a universal pontiff or on a local level by despotic preachers and power-hungry elders. The various parties in the movement have been often dominated by petty tyrants, but these are fast losing control. Perceptive professors in the colleges, promising preachers in the pulpits, and more erudite students are taking a new look at our concoction of “Church of Christism” and they can no longer defend it as the will of God. They know that whether you spell church with a little “C” or a big one, it can be composed of some very unlovable characters.

It is my own candid opinion that “The Church of Christ” in its present organizational or institutional sense cannot survive. There is no real reason why it should. Each part or faction in it prays for the demise of every other, and it just could be that all of their prayers will be answered. As it exists today, it is an organizational amalgamation of dissident groups which mistook a nineteenth century activity for a first century creation of the Spirit. But the body of Christ will survive. It is eternal and it cannot die as long as the Head is alive. He has already conquered death.

What will probably happen is that there will be a reformation of the restoration. The values that have been recaptured will be retained. The traditions which have accrued will become less valid and valuable. We will be purged and purified, and more attuned to the needs of this secularistic society with its multitudinous problems. Our brethren have contributed much to the recovery of truth. They have made the world conscious of the divisive nature of creeds. They have caught the view of the proper response to the good news. It is true that succeeding generations have not recognized the value of their heritage and have tended to erode it away, but much will remain that will be helpful in the future.

The basis of all sectism is fear. As we lose our fear and begin to cross over lines and ignore barriers, we will help to change the minds of men. The contacts will also operate to change our minds. This will be good. Perhaps all of us can some day bring every thought into captivity to Jesus Christ.

A Personal Visit

Mission Messenger (December 1974)

Volume 36

[Abstract]

As I write this I am aware that we are preparing to begin our 37th year of publication with the next issue. It will be our last year. One year from now the final number of MISSION MESSENGER will be deposited on the dock of the main post office in Saint Louis and I will return home without having to read proof for the next month. It does not mean the end of my articles. The editor of another journal has asked me to write the story of my uneventful life and it will appear in monthly installments for the next couple of years. More on that later. I hope to emphasize what made me change my views about fellowship.

We will be ceasing our own publication at the height of its circulation. Almost every month in 1974 has set a new record. The paper has readers in all fifty states of our Union and goes to every continent on earth. More than 500 copies each month are sent to subscribers in far-off regions. In view of this a great many good friends write asking why we plan to stop. There are a great many reasons. I shall mention only a few of them.

1. When I began to write on fellowship and to encourage the unity of all believers in Christ, I set certain goals and planned to attain certain objectives. I knew that peace would have to be waged as others wage war and this requires a strategy. The goals I set for my own editorial life have been reached and surpassed. I do not want to publish a paper merely for the sake of publishing. Nothing seems more useless than that. I refuse to clutter up the mails with a journal which has no purpose except to furnish entertaining reading for some brethren. The goals I now have will be better reached by writing books and by personal encounter, especially on the university campus. I am actually working on seven books!

2. There is a danger that editors will think of themselves and their journals as being indispensable. They wonder how God made it before they arrived on the scene, and how he will survive when they have crossed the Great Divide. I have no Messiah-complex. I desperately need the Father but he does not need me on earth, nor does he need MISSION MESSENGER. A lot of editors have rendered great service for a number of years and then grew older and wrecked all they had accomplished in a few remaining years of senility. They sometimes died ten years before they were buried. It was in that last ten years of editing they undid all the good of their former years. It seems to me that a wise man is one who knows when to step down and submit what he writes to other editors for their evaluation.

3. The burden of producing and processing the paper becomes ever greater. I have no secretarial help and have never had. I answer hundreds of letters every month. In addition, I fly multiplied thousands of miles annually to participate in all kinds of meetings. In the last year great new doors have been opened up which make it possible for me to share my witness in areas I never dreamed of penetrating. But Nell must work many hours each day of the week, including Saturday, just to keep abreast of things. We wrap, address, sort and prepare for mailing both books and papers in our own home. In less than a year we sent out more than 1500 copies of The Question Box and more than 500 copies of Thoughts on Unity, as a free gift to college and university students. Emily, our daughter-in-law helps wrap the single papers, and in recent months Ted and Pearle Ratliff have helped Nell sort and address the zip codes. As the number of subscribers increases the work becomes heavier and the financial problems greatly augmented.

4. History reveals that reformatory attempts have always ended in the creation of another party. When I began writing on fellowship after more than five years of wrestling in prayer with my own inner conviction I knew what I would say would demand a reform in all of our hostile factions. I prepared to avoid formation of another sect by refusing to make the two errors which had become characteristic of previous attempts at unity within the framework of our sadly fragmented groups.

First, I refused to leave the brethren with whom I had previously associated. I did not join another group. Today I am working with the same congregations of saints in the Saint Louis area with which I have always worked. There was no split and no division. All of us made changes in our thinking and are still doing so. But we have grown together. When I made the startling change from being a recognized debater for a faction to become the advocate of receiving and recognizing all of God's children regardless of their opinions, it created a trauma for some of those with whom I had labored across our nation.

Some of them, especially the older ones, regarded me as a traitor. I was called a renegade and a Benedict Arnold. Brethren who had stayed in our home and eaten at our table felt that I had sold out to Satan because I resolved to treat all of God's children as my brothers and sisters. They did their best to sow discord among the congregations with which I was associated and sought to divide the very brethren to whom I had previously introduced them.

I outlived some of them and outloved the others. I refused to engage in debates and harangues, or to be drawn into bitter written controversy. I simply printed what they wrote, replied to it lovingly, and let my readers form their own conclusions. I loved all of those brethren then and I love them now. They considered love as the most detrimental approach to division and I regarded it as the only dynamic to produce unity. We did not divide when problems arose. We divided when we quit loving one another. To restore unity we must recapture love.

Younger brethren in all of our factions have not generally exhibited the fierce and inflexible attitude toward sincere saints who honestly differ with them. It is my feeling that better days lie ahead of us when these brethren become leaders of thought among us. The death of some of our factional leaders and editors will herald a lessening of tension and the gradual dissipation of that form of hatred which has too long screened itself behind a facade which brethren call "love." The grave has swallowed up a lot of bitterness.

Secondly, I urged brethren to remain where they were when they learned new truths or gained new insights. This is a difficult thing to do. But to pull out and join a faction whose members already advocate the new truth, is to leave where that truth is needed and go where it is not. That is like taking the yeast out of the dough and huddling the yeast cakes together on the top shelf of the refrigerator. If one cannot love all of his brethren from where he is, he will probably not be able to love them from somewhere else. One is not factional because he is in a faction. He is not sectarian because he is in a sect, any more than he is a Russian because he is in Russia. One is sectarian because of his attitude toward truth and toward those who are not in his faction or sect.

I do not think one leaves people that he really loves. Of course if he loves only those who agree with him, every time he learns a new truth, he will have to love a new group, and hate the ones with whom he has been affiliated. But if one becomes convinced that instrumental music is not justified by the scriptures I see no reason why he should join an anti-instrument party and start assailing and attacking the brethren who put him through school and endured his ignorance until he learned better. If a young man becomes convinced that the division over the support of the Herald of Truth propaganda medium is artificial, ill-advised and unscriptural, he neither has to join the Herald of Truth staff, nor start bitterly attacking his former teachers and professors. One can still believe a thing is without scriptural warrant and oppose forming a faction or sect over it. I think this is the position of a lot of perceptive young people in our generation. God has delivered me from the factional spirit and made it possible for me to belong only to Jesus. This is wonderful because I no longer have to persuade anyone to leave his faction and line up with one I am in. All I need to do is to lead people to Jesus. He is my everything! That is not true of any faction or segment among us.

There is always some wag who jumps up in an open forum and declares that he cannot see how I am going to promote unity by encouraging everyone to stay where he is. You certainly are not going to do it by trying to get them to come out and band together and start a “loyal church.” The quickest way to fill the earth with “unfaithful churches” is to summon the brethren to come out and start “faithful churches.” That is what got us where we are now and we have twenty-four or more loyal “Churches of Christ” whose members will not even speak to one another when they meet in the post office.

What such a “logician” overlooks is that we are already divided. We must remedy an existing situation. We simply cannot continue to divide over every opinion, for we will divide ourselves out of existence as we have already divided ourselves out of influence in many communities. Our plea for unity of believers is a big joke to our contemporaries. We must stop dividing somewhere. But we cannot correct a situation overnight which has developed over 150 years. There are too many emotional angles connected with it. We cannot look at the matter rationally because our emotions get in the way!

I propose that we freeze our division by refusing to form another party. I have promised my God that I will never promote another party or faction. I want to be blessed and to do so I must make peace and not pieces of the body. By staying where we are and loving brethren who differ with us we will learn something we have not learned before, that is, how to maintain unity in diversity. This is the only kind of unity available to people who think. It is the only kind available to people who don't think, but because they don't think, they don't think so! The only way to have unity in conformity is for everyone to check his brains at the door and be subject to a pope. If there is no pope present, the local preacher will do in such an emergency.

But if we all stay put and love even those who do not love us, this will erode away our factions and decrease their number. Not one of the things which divide us could ever have done so until it was argued and debated into a prominence it did not deserve. For instance, it is silly for children of God, ransomed and redeemed by the blood of God's dear Son, to be split into hostile parties over the method of financing a television or radio program. They would never have become so divided if champions had not arisen, flung out challenges, devised clever and intricate schemes of legalistic argumentation, and come to regard each other as enemies of all righteousness. When the leaven of love remains in both factions, they will be tempered by it and the hostility will be abrogated so that brethren can work together in many areas even when they cannot do so in all.

I do not want MISSION MESSENGER to stay around long enough so that it comes to be regarded as a mouthpiece for a "school of thought." I do not belong to such a school. I intend to do my own thinking and I intend to let all of my brethren do theirs. I expect to answer to God for what I think and not to any person on earth. I am afraid of schools of thought because they attract too many who do not think. So we will gently chloroform the paper at the apex of its strength and let it expire gently in the arms of those who gave it birth and nurtured it through good times and bad.

We have been besieged by brethren who want the paper to continue. Several have volunteered to “take it off our hands” if we will give it to them. A few have offered to buy it. It will not be given away and it will not be sold. I guess I have never really thought of it as a paper. It is more like an extension of the life of Nell and myself. When we began, our children were still at home. We gathered around the dining room table and addressed the two hundred copies by hand, dividing the task between the four of us. Now we have three grandchildren in university and another finishing high school, and their grandmother addresses more than eight thousand copies every month on an Elliott System addressing machine. And we still feel as close to our readers as we did when there was a mere handful of them.

The paper is just not for sale, and neither is the mailing list. It is a great one, containing names of brethren in every segment of the restoration movement at home and abroad, and scores of names of avid readers in other religious backgrounds. The paper is read by Catholic seminarians and by Baptist seminarians. It is read by men prominent in the Mennonite and Methodist parties. But I would as soon sell the names and addresses of my grandchildren as the mailing list. We regard it as a sacred trust. Brethren appear on it because they subscribed for MISSION MESSENGER and not something else! If they want something else they can subscribe for it personally.

We will face our greatest financial crisis this year. The paper must be mailed out every month but there will be little income since most subscriptions will have been paid in advance. It would frighten some of you to know how much it costs to print and mail the paper each month. But we are going to keep the rate at one dollar per year. I want to finish the thirty-seventh year knowing we have never raised the price of the paper.

One dollar does not even begin to pay for getting the paper to a subscriber for a year. It has not done so for several years. But we have never ended a year in debt. As I write this all of our bills have been paid and we are ready to enter 1975 without owing a cent. This results from regular and occasional sharing of saints who believe in what we are doing. They contribute generously to share with us. We never print their names. They are known only to the Father in heaven and to Nell and myself on earth. I fervently pray that their generosity will be rewarded by the God of all grace. Without their assistance we could never have survived.

We have never taken one cent of subscription money for our own use. We employ surplus funds to send free books to college and university students. In the past few years we have mailed out more than 2500 such volumes, even paying for the wrapping and mailing costs. It is our hope that after we are gone, men and women will be able to take down from their library shelves the books we gave them when they were in school, and recall that they were sent as a token of our love.

If your subscription will expire before next December we hope you will send a dollar now and guarantee that it will continue to the end. We will not be able to notify you of expiration dates as in the past because it is too costly a process. If you send a dollar now you will have no worry. If you send more than that we will seek to use it to the glory of God. It might be a good idea to put your children and grandchildren on the reading list for the last year of the paper. Perhaps you'd like to subscribe for a group of brethren at a dollar per year. If God allows us to live we guarantee that you'll receive the paper for twelve months, although it is understood that if either Nell or I depart to be with the Lord, the paper will cease. Neither of us could publish it without the other!

The subject for 1975 will be One in Christ. At the end of the year all of the issues will be bound together in a beautiful clothbound volume under that title. There will only be two thousand copies of the book available and they will not last long. We do not know what the price will be but we promise you it will be as low as we can make it. If you want to reserve one or more copies in advance you may do so and we will enclose an invoice with the books. We urgently suggest that you not wait too long to make your reservation, for these books will become more valuable as time goes on.

It is my intention to write on unity and fellowship with a sense of urgency and destiny. In a fragmented brotherhood this is imperative. You need not concur with what I write to be revered and loved as a brother or sister in Him “whom having not seen we love.” But I do hope you will read what I say. I will write honestly and freely. I will love you whether you can concur or not. I am convinced that what I shall write is true. Some day the partisan spirit will be dissipated. What we are saying now will be generally accepted then. I am content to leave the verdict to history.

We are deeply grateful to those who have held up our hands in the year that is now fading away. We could not have made it without your help. It is just that simple. We eagerly trust that God will bless and enrich you for the sacrifice you have made. What a thrill it is to be a part of the majestic family with all of you. Please pray for us!

In a very few weeks the book Pure Speech containing every issue of the paper for 1974 will be ready for mailing. If you have not ordered yours we trust you will do so now. As soon as it is ready we will mail your copy and you can then return the enclosed invoice with your check. A good many brethren feel that what was said about the clergy system is worth reading again.

Another Gospel

Mission Messenger (December 1974)

Volume 36

[Abstract]

Recently, while driving home at night I was listening to one of the brethren on my car radio. His theme was based upon Paul's concern for the Galatians who had so quickly turned away from the one who called them by grace, unto a different gospel. The brother labeled every concept which differed with the unwritten creed of his particular brand of Church of Christism as "another gospel." It was apparent that the faction to which he belonged constituted the only group left on this planet who had not perverted the gospel.

In a distant state where I was conducting an open forum three men showed up recently to try and create a little havoc. They accused everyone else who was present for the occasion of preaching another gospel. Those who used instrumental music in conjunction with their public expressions of praise were preaching another gospel. Those who interpreted Revelation 20 to imply that Jesus would return before the millennium were preaching another gospel. Those who testified that they had received some special gift of the Spirit were preaching another gospel.

I am getting quite used to that. When I was in California not too long ago a good old soul came to see me and plead with me to use my influence to rescue those who used individual containers in conjunction with the Lord's Supper from thereby advocating another gospel. I have a letter here now from a brother in Oklahoma affirming that I ought to come out from among those who have Sunday Schools, and touch not the unclean thing, because the Sunday School is another gospel.

All of these brethren, regardless of their sincerity, demonstrate a special kind of ignorance not exhibited in any other part of the religious realm known to me. They are ignorant of the nature and content of the gospel of Christ. They are ignorant of the situation in Galatia to which Paul addressed himself, and they are ignorant of what he meant by the term “another gospel.” When I use the term ignorant I am not trying to be especially critical or recriminatory. I state it merely as a fact, in passing.

The gospel is good news. The good news announced to the Galatians by the apostle was that “the blessing of Abraham should in Christ Jesus be extended to the Gentiles, so that we might receive the promised Spirit through faith” (3:14). It was this which delivered them from the written code of the law and set them free from the galling yoke of slavery. When Paul speaks of “the truth of the gospel” in this letter he is not referring to the veracity or integrity of the message. The truth means the basic, elemental, foundational principle upon which the gospel is predicated. It is the core, the center, the kernel of the gospel. It is what makes the message gospel. The context shows that the truth of the gospel is justification by faith.

Justification, as Paul uses the term, is not by faith and something else. It is by faith in Christ and nothing else! But there were “sham-Christians, interlopers who had stolen in to spy upon the liberty we enjoy in the fellowship of Christ Jesus” (2:4). These could not stand the message of righteousness by faith in Christ Jesus. They had to bring the believers under law. They insisted upon circumcision so they could glory in the flesh. Paul said, “These men wanted to bring us into bondage, but not for one moment did I yield to their dictation!”

The gospel is a definitive message. It is the good news of what God has done in reconciling and redeeming us, proclaimed to an alien world to bring men into a rich relationship with God through the Spirit. Certainly the Galatian letter was not part of the gospel message. By the time it was written the Galatians had already accepted the gospel and turned from it. They had received the Spirit by believing the gospel message (3:2). The letter was written not to bring them into relationship with the Spirit but to encourage them to continue to walk in the Spirit “If the Spirit is the source of our life, let the Spirit also direct our course” (5:25). Acceptance of the gospel brings the Spirit as God’s gift to dwell in our bodies, guidance by epistles such as the letter to the Galatians enables the Spirit to direct our course.

Being circumcised was of no consequence, and not being circumcised was of no consequence. “Circumcision is nothing; uncircumcision is nothing; the only thing that counts is new creation” (6:15). That is not all that counts with a lot of brethren. With some being a new creation doesn’t count at all. The question is not “What think you of Christ?” but how do you stand on Pat Boone? One did not hold another gospel merely because he was circumcised. He advocated another gospel only when he affirmed that circumcision was necessary for justification, that is, to assume a right relationship with God. “Now certain persons who had come down from Judea began to teach the brotherhood that those who were not circumcised in accordance with Mosaic practice could not be saved” (Acts 15:1). That was another gospel. It predicated salvation upon another principle than absolute trust in Jesus Christ.

One can be mistaken about a lot of things without perverting the gospel. Faulty understanding of some point of doctrine, a warped view of interpretation of an apostolic passage — these in no sense constitute another gospel. One does not preach another gospel by expressing an opinion in favor of the use of instrumental music unless he hinges salvation or justification upon its use. The same thing holds true for an opinion relative to charismatic gifts or the millennium. Whatever view you hold about cups, classes, or colleges, has nothing to do with the gospel. Those who are not free in Christ to make mistakes are not free at all.

Men upon both sides of all these issues we have mentioned have obeyed the same gospel. They all proclaim the same gospel. To accuse one of advocating another gospel because he disagrees with your position upon one of these items, or all of them, speaks much more forcibly about your ignorance than about his. The one who is in danger of projecting another gospel is the one who makes fellowship dependent, not upon our relationship to God through the Spirit, but upon agreement with his faction upon some point of theological deduction. The gospel of “an anti-instrument position” as the hope of righteousness is as dangerous as a gospel of circumcision for the same reason.

We have all kinds of modern “circumcision parties” which say, “Except ye do this” or “Except ye do that” you cannot be saved. It is the binding of such exceptions which creates a perverted gospel. My position was best enunciated by a former president of Harding College. “I am resolved to make nothing a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation.” I want to be with all who are saved, and I expect to be. I care not one thing for any partisan flag waving over an exclusivistic rampart. My hope is in Christ Jesus. I began in the Spirit and I have no intention of trying to be made perfect in the flesh.

Many of my brothers in the Lord Jesus are mistaken in some of their deductions and opinions. They obviously feel that I am also. But we are not proclaiming another gospel. We proclaim faith in Christ Jesus who is the power of God and the wisdom of God. It is time that we all outgrew our petty childishness based upon traditions received from our fathers. The world has no place for bickering sects and fighting factions. It is time to close ranks and get on with the real job for which the new creation was created!

MISSION MESSENGER ESSAYS (1975)

Volume 37

One In Christ

Index to Volumes

- The Longest Prayer
- The Common Life (1975)
- The Sharing of Life
- The Legal Tangle
- The Art of Peacemaking
- The Spiritual Eclipse
- What Lack We Yet?
- Discerning the Body
- No Discord
- A Startling Proposal
- The Apostolic Commission
- The Delivered Faith
- Yesterday's Wisdom
- A Necessary Reminder
- Letters I Receive
- Wandering Stars
- Secular and Holy
- What Is Justification?
- Killed By Attitudes
- The Party Spirit
- Hail and Farewell

The Longest Prayer

Mission Messenger (January 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

I am sure you will think the poorest way in the world to begin a new year of writing is with a confession. So I am starting 1975 in the poorest way in the world. I confess I had no intention of writing this article. Mentally I had decided on my theme for the year, One in Christ, and had developed a vague idea of the format. This article was not part of it. But every time I prepared to write, the prayer of Jesus which John recorded intruded on my thoughts. Finally I gave in and here I am writing on the longest prayer recorded in the new testament scriptures.

It seemed to me, as I meditated, that John 17 was the proper launching pad from which to get my thought capsule on unity into orbit. With the shadow of the cross falling over his pathway, Jesus prayed for the oneness of all who believed in him. He conditioned the acceptance of his divine mission by the world upon the unity of those who had accepted him. The frightful cost of our division is a lost world. We must decide whether we can continue the luxury of disunity and pay the price of a lost world which he loved.

There was another thing which prompted me to write. For years I put that glorious prayer through our partisan meat-grinder, pulverizing and molding it to suit our own trivial factional ends. I mistakenly equated the oneness which comes from the belief of apostolic testimony about Jesus with conformity to our opinions, interpretations and theological hangups. Looking back I can see that I actually promoted strife while proclaiming peace, and severed the bond created through his blood, by debating brethren who were as belligerent as myself. The fact that I am ashamed of the kind of ignorance which made variant views in Christ more important than the relationship created by Christ needs to be told lest others fall into the same condemnation.

John did not divide his record of the Word who became flesh into chapters and verses. But the chapter which we call seventeen begins with these words:

When Jesus had spoken these words, he lifted up his eyes to heaven and said, "Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son that the Son may glorify thee, since thou hast given him power over all flesh, to give eternal life to all whom thou hast given him. And this is eternal life, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent. I glorified thee on earth, having accomplished the work which thou gavest me to do; and now, Father, glorify thou me in thy own presence with the glory which I had with thee before the world was made."

This beautiful petition was not isolated from life. It followed naturally after other words which Jesus had spoken. He had conversed with his disciples about his coming death and assured them, "I have said this to you, that in me you may have peace." To the Jewish mind the word shalam, peace, meant oneness, wholeness, completeness. It was the result of harmonious relationship. The purpose of Jesus in speaking to those who loved him was to convince them that wholeness of personality is achieved only in him. The man outside of Jesus is like a jig-saw puzzle with the parts missing. His moral conduct may be excellent. His filial associations may be commendatory. But there will always be a flaw which will not permit the picture of life to be perfected until that which is lacking is supplied. No one who is not conscious of God's forgiveness and declaration of guiltlessness ever knows true peace. “Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.” By faith! Through Christ!

Jesus said, “In the world you have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world.” Tribulation is from the Latin tribulum, a threshing instrument. It is the flail which separates the chaff from the wheat. Jesus did not promise the faithful they would not undergo tribulation. He promised them they would. Every apostle of his, except the writer of this record, suffered cruel death for his faith. The writer was subjected to brutal punishment and eventual exile. Our good cheer comes not from our ability to escape persecution, but from consciousness that we are in one who is triumphant over the alienated world which inflicts it. We shall overcome because he has overcome. If you believe that, be of good cheer!

It is in this frame of reference Jesus utters this remarkable prayer in which he says so much about the relationship of his followers to the world, and then petitions so earnestly for their relationship to one another in him. Our unity is important not as an end in itself, but because we are in the world. The world hates the disciples of Christ because they are not of it, even as Jesus Christ is not of it (verse 14). If the disciples exhibit lovelessness toward one another, the world accepts them as being of it. The world will never believe until we exhibit before it a oneness in spite of our human propensities and predicament, which transcends all frailties, weaknesses and differences.

Jesus has handed the world a measuring-rod and said, “Take this and use it to judge those who claim to be my disciples.” The world has a right to wield that yardstick. The criterion is not one of superior knowledge or of doctrinal correctness. It is simply love for one another. If we love only those who love us we are no better off than publicans or social outcasts.

For years I read this majestic chapter without noticing the emphasis upon glory. The word “glorify” appears five times. The word “glory” appears three times. The glory which God gave Christ he gave to the disciples so that they could become perfectly one. There is a relationship between glory and oneness. I did not know that. It was not part of my sermon outline. I am glad I know it now. There wasn’t a lot of glory in the way I taught it.

The hour has come! It had not come when he did the first of his signs at Cana in Galilee (John 2:4). It had not come when they sought to arrest him personally and prematurely (7:30). It had not come when he openly taught in the temple treasury (8:20). But when certain Greeks came and said to Philip, “Sir, we wish to see Jesus,” he knew it was near and spoke of a grain of wheat dying that it might produce much fruit (12:23). Now he begins this prayer to the Father with this simple announcement.

It would have been incongruous for anyone else to speak of glorification in connection with a cross. To the Jew crucifixion represented a curse. To the Greeks it was a frightful scandal. Only Jesus could be glorified by this instrument of torture, the most degrading one man has ever invented. He turned a badge of shame into an emblem of honor. Every nation awards to its heroes a cross as a symbol of valor. Institutions of mercy emblazon it upon their banners. Religious groups crown the spires and turrets of their cathedrals with it. Men and women wear it as an ornament. Constantine declared that he saw the words “In hoc signo vinces” (In this sign conquer) flashing in the skies, and the Roman eagle gave way to the cross.

The hour had come to turn apparent defeat into victory, disaster into triumph, and shame into glory. Jesus asked to be glorified, not for himself, but that he might glorify the Father. He did not seek justification or vindication. He had already been given power over all flesh. Man, in his frailty, weakness, and fear, had been placed under the authority of the Son. And the Son would glorify, exalt and magnify the Father who was the source of all authority by giving eternal life to all who had been given unto him.

There follows the divine definition of eternal life. In my childish ignorance I thought of eternal life like an old-line insurance policy which one had to die to collect. I know better now. Eternal life is not so much a quantity as a quality of existence. It is trust rather than time, dedication rather than duration, and consecration rather than mere continuance. It is life more abundant, not life simply extended. It is not measured by years but by yielding. What is eternal life? Listen to Jesus! "This is eternal life, that they might know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

To know in the Bible sense is more than intellectual perception by familiarity with facts. It is to enter into an intimate relationship in which personalities merge or blend. "And Adam knew Eve, his wife, and she conceived and bore a son, and called his name Cain." This knowledge was more than recognition. It was a union which made them one flesh and resulted in a new life. "He who is united to the Lord becomes one spirit with him" (1 Cor. 6:17). A new creature results from this union.

Eternal life is experiencing God through spiritual union. Just as one can read books and even lecture about marriage all of his life and never become one flesh with another, so he can read the Bible all of his life and never become one Spirit with the Lord. Eternal life is the life of God, and fellowship in Christ is sharing that life. It is not sharing the life of the only true God to the exclusion of the Son, but it must include Jesus Christ whom the Father sent. "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son hath not life."

It is a matter to cause us to think seriously that Jesus voiced his prayer for oneness of believers against a background of divine glory and eternal life. How tragic it is that we have dragged that plea from such majestic heights and wallowed it in the dust of partisan debates over trivia. It is a commentary upon our plight as creatures of the dust that we would ignore the beauty of the setting in which it was planted, to use it as the ground for wrangling over matters of opinion, speculation and fallible interpretation. Perhaps we should abandon our worm's eye view just once and seek to look at the unity of the believers in the Son as the angels must see it.

Jesus glorified the Father upon earth. He did it by accomplishing the work the Father gave him to do. Is this not the way we glorify the Father also? In view of the fact that it is peacemakers who are to now the bliss of being called the children of God, should we not glorify him by making peace among the fragmented, strife-torn, ripped-off segments of our brethren? Can we accomplish the work we were given to do by slighting, ignoring, or manifesting unconcern for God's other children? Do we glorify God by division when Jesus prayed for oneness? Do we glorify him by forming hostile parties or separating into warring tribes, and acting worse than aliens?

Because Jesus glorified the Father by completion of this mission on earth, he asked to share in the glory he enjoyed with the Father before the world was made. One cannot accept this statement and deny the pre-existence of our Lord. He cannot accept it and doubt the Deity of the Word. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." In the old covenant scriptures the glory of God signified the presence of God. It was God making himself known, entering into the sphere of human knowledge and experience. It is significant that Jesus asked the Father to "glorify me in thy own presence." This does not mean "in thy sight" or "before thy face." The word is from para, with, and it means to share with God all the glory that is involved in the Eternal. That we also shall share in that splendor after our suffering is over is a thought of such magnitude as to stagger human imagination.

Think what such a contemplation will do for a cancer victim. “Our very suffering works for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.”

PRAYER FOR APOSTLES

“I have manifested thy name to the men whom thou gavest me out of the world; thine they were, and thou gavest them to me, and they have kept thy word. Now they know that everything that thou hast given me is from thee; for I have given them the words which thou gavest me, and they have received them and know in truth that I came from thee; and they believed that thou didst send me. I am praying for them: I am not praying for the world but for those whom thou hast given me, for they are thine; all mine are thine, and thine are mine, and I am glorified in them” (verses 6-10).

The apostles were chosen, called and commissioned as ambassadors to an alien world. Their position in the rule of heaven is unique and unchallenged. The arrangement which would result in their sitting upon twelve thrones in the period of regeneration was of the Father. While Jesus summoned them directly they were God’s men and were given to the Son by the Father’s disposition. To manifest God’s name was to exemplify his nature, attributes and characteristics. The word name in scriptural usage means much more than a designation or title. It includes all that is involved in the personality of the one named. Thus “to believe into the name of Christ” is to be identified with him, literally, to pledge allegiance unto him.

The response of the apostles to the divine manifestation was fidelity to the word of God as it related to Jesus. They accepted the words of God about the Word of God. What the Living Word exhibited in the flesh was from God. They knew it was bestowed from above and they accepted the truth about its heavenly origin without doubt. The purpose of the testimony was to convince men that Jesus came from God. He came only because he was sent. This fact the apostles knew in truth, that is, in verity. This was essential if the world was to be led to believe through their testimony. Jesus said, "They have believed."

There is a great gulf fixed between the world and those who belong to Jesus. The world is composed of that great body of mankind which refuses to recognize the right of God to govern in their lives. It is the whole cosmic arrangement under the domination of evil, and in rebellion against God, living only for the Now and pampering every desire of the flesh. The world is creation adrift from its Creator, facing the storm of death without a compass, too drunk to steer by the stars, and too giddy to avoid stumbling into the abyss of darkness and misery and despair. It is the domain of false gods, perverted passions and wicked walks. Jesus did not here pray for the world, not because he was disinterested or unconcerned. He declares in this same prayer that he will send the apostles into that world. But his immediate concern is for the representatives whom God gave him out of the world. All depends upon them. If they fail or prove unworthy the cause is lost. "If the salt ever loses its strength, then how can the world be salted?"

The closeness between the Father and the Son is exhibited in the declaration that "All mine are thine, and thine are mine." W. E. Vine points out that many of us might declare that all we have is God's, but only one person ever lived who could say, while in the flesh, "All thine is mine." If Jesus was glorified in those given him out of the world, who received the words of God, believed implicitly in the testimony related to him, and showed unquestioned fidelity, will he not be glorified in us under the same circumstances? I trust you will not ascribe it to unworthy ambition or fleshly pride when I say that more than anything else in this whole vast universe I want Jesus to be glorified in me. I want to live to his glory and I want to die to his glory. I eagerly hope that I will not be drugged into insensibility when the Great Adventure comes and my spirit strains and tugs to loose itself from this envelope of clay cells in which it has been housed. I want to be conscious of the magnificent confrontation. I want to sense the victory at some “disputed barricade.” Of course, we cannot choose how we shall die, but I can choose how I will live.

FULFILLED JOY

And now I am no more in the world, but they are in the world, and I am coming to thee. Holy Father, keep them in thy name, which thou hast given me, that they may be one, even as we are one. While I was with them, I kept them in thy name, which thou hast given me; I have guarded them, and none of them is lost but the son of perdition, that the scripture might be fulfilled. But now I am coming to thee; and these things I speak in the world, that they may have my joy fulfilled in themselves (verses 11-13).

It has been a good many years since I read that large book written by A. B. Bruce, and first published in 1871 under the title The Training of the Twelve. I have just taken it from the shelf and opened it to note how I underlined many passages which struck home to me. In the lengthy chapter entitled “The Intercessory Prayer” I must have been deeply impressed. Bruce points out that the prayer begins with the word “Father” and this term of address is repeated six times. He observes, “He speaks to God as if he were already in heaven, as indeed he expressly says he is a little further on, ‘Now I am no more in the world.’”

That statement begins this section. Jesus knew what it was like to be in the world. He knew the trials and the testing, the turbulence and the temptation. He knew the suffering and the sadness, the sorrow and the shaking. For him all that was soon to be over, but the apostles were to remain. He places them in the hand of the Father, pleading with him to keep them. The word “keep” means to guard, protect and sustain. To keep them in the name of the Father was to hold them to his person as if the very reputation of Deity was at stake in their preservation.

When one leaves on a journey he wants to be certain that his valuables are put in trust. It is an indication of the regard Jesus had for his disciples that he would not leave without assuring their protection. It is likewise significant that he was anxious for them to be one as he and the Father were one. I shall later show that this had nothing to do with opinions or concepts. It would be absurd to expect fallible minds to be like infallible minds. Imperfect beings cannot exhibit the same degree of knowledge as perfect beings. The oneness here has to do with unity of purpose and effort.

Disunity among the disciples would frustrate the ultimate plan of God as much as a loss of faith. That Jesus would pray for the disciples to be one upon the eve of his cruel betrayal and tragic death is indicative of the value heaven attaches to that oneness. That it has meant so little to us is proof of our carnality and childishness. You can tell how much unity is valued by the saints when you consider the things for which they are willing to forfeit or discard it. The depth of one's love for his wife can be determined by the thing which prompts him to break up his marital union. Love is sometimes very shallow indeed!

In the flesh, Jesus guarded the disciples. He kept them in the Father's name, providing protection and supplying their needs. The only one lost was the son of perdition. This probably does not so much refer to the destiny of Judas as to his manner of life and course of conduct. He was not chosen to make him this kind of person, but because he was this kind of person he was chosen. I am interested in the regard of Jesus for the scripture and the fulfillment of prophecy. I cannot understand how one who professes to be a follower of Jesus can make light of the scriptures.

I have no intention to belabor the point and I cheerfully grant that what I am here saying is secondary to my real purpose. But I want to make it clear that no one can parade as a follower of Jesus while undermining the sacred scriptures. The approach of Jesus to questions of controversy was, “What saith the scripture?” Men may question interpretations placed on the sacred volume and a lot of them need to be questioned, but the legitimacy and authenticity of the scriptures must not be subjected to erosion. I want to make it clear that the scriptures are holy in my sight and they must be fulfilled.

The things Jesus spoke while in the world were to convey the fullness of this joy to those who heard them. There is no real joy obtainable except through him. His first advent was announced with tidings of great joy, and his second advent will bring joy to those who await that magnificent triumph. Jesus spoke in the world filled with sin, despondency and depression, but his speaking was to bring fullness of joy and happiness unbounded. Knowing Jesus is knowing joy!

SANCTIFICATION IN TRUTH

I have given them thy word; and the world has hated them because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. I do not pray that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil one. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. Sanctify them in the truth; thy word is truth. As thou didst send me into the world, so I have sent them into the world. And for their sake I consecrate myself, that they also may be consecrated to truth (verses 14-19).

I have given them thy word! Jesus is talking here about the message concerning himself and his identity. This is made clear in verse 8. Jesus had given them the words of God, they had received them, and because of their reception the disciples knew two things. They knew that Jesus came from God, and they knew that God had sent him. It is this which makes the difference, and which calls one out of the world and separates him from it.

If Jesus came from God, this is the visited planet. Someone from outside the human predicament created by sin has come to share our human lot. Not being touched or tainted by sin, he can point us back to reality. Sin is abnormal and it has made us all unreal. If God actually sent Jesus, then God is interested, concerned, and willing to be involved, not philosophically, but personally. No one can believe these sublime truths— really believe them— and ever be the same again.

How does one arrive at these two great scintillating facts until he “knows truly” as Jesus puts it, or experiences reality? The answer is simple. He receives the words of God. He believes the testimony. Our transformation from the state of abnormality created by sin to the reality of righteousness in Christ Jesus is predicated upon faith, and that faith is the natural result of an honest heart receiving the words of God. I think there is a great difference between hearing words and receiving them. I know people who have repeated words for years which they never received in the sense in which Jesus used the term.

It is this reception of the words of God, driving us to the side of the Word of God, which separates us from the world. Jesus is the “Great Divide.” The world hates those who are not of it, for the world is the realm of the flesh, and that is the realm of selfishness, bitterness, hostility and wrath. The world hates them because their love condemns its lovelessness, their unity condemns its disorder, and their purpose condemns its aimlessness. Jesus did not pray that the disciples be removed from the world. Light is needed in darkness. Purity is needed in impurity. Love is needed where hate abounds. The leaven is needed in the lump.

Jesus prayed that his disciples should be kept from the evil one. It would have been strange for him to talk to the Father about the evil one, if there was no evil one. Jesus was not bogged down in theories about the origin of evil. He had no hangups about the malignant spirit, active and intelligent, who opposed all the works of righteousness. He knew that if he did not snatch his disciples out of the world they were in danger, and he knew that behind that danger was one who was a malicious and diabolical schemer. I do not buy the sophisticated explanations of the intrusion of evil, which are cooked up to explain away the existence of the devil. In fact, I think the cleverest trick he ever pulled was to convince a lot of folk that he doesn't exist. Many who think there is no hell spend a lifetime raising it, and most of those who doubt the existence of the devil prove the mistake of their theory by acting like him most of the time.

The way we are preserved from the evil one is by sanctification. Men who get out in the bush in their thinking and become all tangled up in the theological thicket talk about this as "a second work of grace." They have an idea that divine lightning strikes once and regenerates you, then zaps you again and sanctifies you. I am afraid you'll have to excuse me from such nicely-timed computerized distinctions which have been dreamed up to bolster a well-planned set of opinions which, in the final analysis, are filmy fantasies.

The apostles were to be set apart from the world in which they lived by being in the truth. To be in the truth while in the world is to be different. That is what holiness or sanctification is all about. A sanctified person is one who is different. The thing that makes him different is that he belongs to God. He is consecrated. The table of shewbread in the tabernacle was sanctified, not because of its construction, material or design, but because it was God's table. It was consecrated to God's service. Sanctified people are not holy because they are in the world, but because they are not of it.

Of course, every word that God has spoken is true. God never uttered a falsehood. It is impossible for him to lie. But when Jesus talks in this prayer about the word which is truth, he is not talking about the thirty-nine books of old covenant scripture, nor the twenty-seven books of new covenant scripture. The latter had not been written, and he was asking the Father to sanctify the envoys then, so that when he was no longer with them to keep them, they would be safe against the evil one.

The word about which he spoke, which would set them apart, was the word he had given them (verse 14). It was the truth about himself, his divine origin and commission. It was this which severed them from the world. It was this in which they must be kept. The term good news, or gospel, is applied to this word. It is the good news about Jesus and what God has done for us through him. The gospel can never be separated from the person of Jesus. He is the good news just as he is the truth. To receive the gospel is to receive Jesus. To be committed unto the truth is to commit one's life and being to him.

PRAYER FOR BELIEVERS

I do not pray for these only, but also for those who believe in me through their word, that they may all be one; even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be in us, so that the world may believe that thou has sent me.

This was not an admonition to men on earth but a prayer to the Father in heaven. It is an indication that heaven is deeply concerned about our oneness. In view of the magnitude of that concern we should analyze carefully what Jesus said and determine our responsibility in helping to answer the prayer.

The desire of our Lord is that all who believe in him be one. This precludes any attempt at creating a coalition of so-called "world religions." Wild ecumenical dreamers who think of uniting all men under an umbrella of fellowship, allowing them to maintain their speculative philosophies in denial of the uniqueness of Christ have no right to quote this prayer as if it gave any credence to their fantastic theories. Belief in Jesus Christ as the Son of God is the dividing line across which men must come to be a part of this prayer.

Belief in Jesus is the response of the honest heart to the apostolic proclamation. That proclamation is the gospel, the good news, the announcement of the historical facts about the Word who was made flesh. As Paul said in the synagogue at Pisidian Antioch, “And we bring you the good news that what God had promised to the fathers, this he has fulfilled to us their children by raising Jesus.” The apostolic word which led men to believe was that God had fulfilled his promises in the person of Jesus.

In view of the fact that the apostles wrote some of the letters addressed to communities of saints and individuals, I once thought in my partisan heart, that Jesus had in mind the whole scriptural canon which later evolved through God’s grace, when he spoke of believing in him “through their word.” As a result, I considered those who did not see everything in those letters as we did, as being unbelievers. Regardless of how firmly one believed in the Sonship and Messiahship of Jesus, if he did not denounce as sinful such things as instrumental music or orphan home institutions, he was not a believer, and there was no way in which we could express oneness with him.

As I regard this childish and immature rationalization from more sober heights attained by intense prayer and study, it seems incredible that I ever entertained such ideas, much less mouthing them publicly. The apostolic doctrine was not written to make believers. It was written to those who were believers. Not one apostolic letter was ever written to those out of Christ, although, as Dr. James Macknight points out, the Roman letter was apparently to be read to and shared with some of the citizens of the capital of the great Empire. We do not believe in Jesus because we read the apostolic letters. We read the apostolic letters and apply them to our lives because we believe in Jesus.

We are one in Christ, and it is the word which brings us into Christ which makes us one. That word is the gospel. When we come into him who is the truth we obligate ourselves to accept all truth as it becomes known unto us. But we are not made one by the amount of truth to which we are exposed or which we can assimilate. Unity can never be achieved by conformity to or knowledge of a certain level of doctrine, for no two people on earth possess the same degree of knowledge. We become one by faith predicated upon historical facts and not by doctrinal attainment. Jesus is our peace. He has made us one. He raised us up together and made us sit together in heavenly places.

One is not an unbeliever because he disagrees with me about music or the millennium. He is an unbeliever when he denies Christ. A believer may disagree with me about many things, but his inability to share my deductions, opinions or interpretations does not negate his faith in Jesus. The prayer of Jesus is not for the oneness of those who share the same doctrinal insights but for those who believe in him. Faith in the testimony concerning Jesus brings us together. I refuse to destroy that togetherness by setting up another creed. Jesus Christ is my only creed. I am in Christ with every other person on this earth who is in him. I am in Christ with some who eat meats and some who will not. I am in Christ with some who esteem one day above another and with some who esteem every day alike. I am in Christ with some who hold that Jesus will come before the millennium, with some who think the millennium will come before Jesus, and with others who couldn't even spell millennium without looking it up in the dictionary.

We must face up to the fact that oneness must be viewed from two different aspects. There is the unity derived from God and a demonstration of it arrived at by us. The first is unity impressed upon us by the Spirit, the second is unity expressed by us through the Spirit. The first is invisible, the second is visible. It is this for which Jesus prayed, because it is something that can be seen by the world and which will lead the world to believe that God sent Jesus. Here is where we have miserably failed. We have allowed our views of things to become more important than belief in the Son. The world has seen this and formed a very shallow view of the importance of faith. A faith which will not cause men to adhere to one another when differences of opinion arise is wholly unsuited to men in the flesh.

I must confess another error of which I was once guilty. If you think I am doing a lot of confessing, please remember I was wrong about a lot of things. I still am, of course, but I will change as I learn better. Jesus prayed for believers to be one “even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee.” When I was factional and equated as faithful and loyal only those who saw partisan issues as we did, I construed this to mean absolute doctrinal conformity. I reasoned that Jesus did not disagree with God about any matter. God and Jesus were both amillennial, and both lined up unequivocally against the missionary society and instrumental music, while favoring multiple cups in the Lord’s Supper and classes for teaching the Bible.

I would feel even more humiliated with my former ignorance if I did not now realize that this is a necessary fruit of the party spirit, whether the party is political or religious in nature. I knew an old man down home who thought that God was a Republican and only allowed Democrats to get in office like he sent the Assyrians to punish Israel for their sins. In our faction I suspect we thought that Indianapolis occupied the same status under the new covenant as Jerusalem did under the old. I shall never forget the shock I felt when I learned of those who thought of Nashville or Abilene the same way. I thought the kingdom had been captured by aliens.

Of course, I still believe there are no differences of “opinion” between the Father and Son, because they do not operate on the basis of either faith or opinion, seeing they both possess perfect knowledge. It is absurd to make a comparison between finite and infinite minds and expect the first to conform in knowledge because the latter is able to do so. We show our finiteness by contriving such irrational ideas. There is no difference of opinion between God and Christ simply because they are omniscient. Although it may come as a surprise to some, our brethren in the flesh are not all-seeing, all-wise and all-knowing. If you think they are, ask their wives!

As human beings apply their minds to God's revelation there will be differences in their deductions and they will never see everything alike! Never! God has made us with diverse mental powers and characteristics as varied as our facial features. We can no more all think alike than we can all look alike. Any person who postulates unity in Christ upon uniformity of opinion, interpretation or doctrinal understanding is disseminating division and sowing schism. The only unity possible for men on earth is unity in diversity! There never was any other kind! There never will be any other kind! It is sheer demagoguery to hold out a hope that your faction will some day line up every believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, and that men and angels will cast their crowns down and surrender to the party chieftains.

Jesus and the Father are individuals. The unity for which Jesus prayed was that of individuals. Every believer should be joined to every other believer in this whole wide world as the Father and Son are joined to each other. Ours is not an organizational unity at all. We are not joined to Jesus because we are in the church. We are in the church because we are joined to Jesus. To condition our fellowship upon partisan alliance is to be guilty of a work of the flesh Jesus did not die to establish a faction to promote a certain millennial view. He did not suffer on the cross to create an anti-instrument party, or an instrument party either. He is not head of a Sunday-school faction or of an opposing huddle. He is the head of the whole body, the called-out ones, and every saved person on this earth is in that body. I am one with all of them. In spite of their hostility, antagonism and divergent views, I am joined to them by the love shed abroad in my heart by the Holy Spirit. I want the world to judge me on the basis of my love for the brethren. I want to use this as the criterion of my discipleship.

Jesus and the Father are one because they possess a divine nature. I do not think men can ever be one as the Father and Son are one until they become partakers of the divine nature. So long as they are under the influence of the lower nature they will gratify the desires of the flesh. They will follow “enmity, strife, jealousy, anger, selfishness, dissension, party spirit and envy.” It is only when they have crucified the flesh with its passions and desires that they will know “love, joy, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness and self-control.” But cheer up! Do not be discouraged!

The divine power has granted to us all things that pertain to life and godliness. All of this is through knowledge of Christ who has called us to his own glory and excellence. By knowing Christ we have life. By experiencing him we have godliness. All of this is the result of a divine power grant. Every contingency is covered. Nothing is lacking. There is no fine print. We are called to share in his splendor. We are called to share in his excellence. But there is more, much more.

The divine grant is even broader in scope. Listen! “By which he has granted to us his precious and very great promises, that through these you may escape from the corruption that is in the world because of passion, and become partakers of the divine nature.” The fellowship of the divine nature! Sharing the common life of the divine nature! What a mind-boggling thought. But that is the way those who believe in Jesus through the apostolic testimony can become one as the Father and Son are one!

That they also may be one in us! I praise God for this revelation! The only place we can ever be one is in Christ. We will never be one politically, economically, or philosophically.

We will never be one racially, socially, or nationally. The only way we can be one is to be in a state which transcends all of these, that is, to be in a realm where all of these exist but where none of them make any difference. Every political, economical or philosophical scheme to produce unity is doomed to failure. Every racial, social, national or international program to achieve equality in the flesh will come to naught. Only when men put on Christ, only when they are in him, are they one. "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free, there is neither male nor female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus" (Galatians 3:27, 28).

This does not mean there are no Jews in Jesus. There are many such. The writer of the letter to the Galatians was one of them. It does not mean there were no Greeks in Jesus. Certainly there were both slaves and free men in Jesus. There were males and females in Jesus. But such distinctions had no relevance. No one was accepted because he was a Jew, no one was rejected because he was a Greek. Racial, social and sexual differences amounted to nothing. There is unity in Christ because here every person in the flesh meets on a common level. All have sinned and come short of the glory of God. The master and the slave are sinners. The man and the woman are sinners. The Jew and the Greek are sinners. All of them must be baptized into Christ. All must put on Christ. The only real oneness there is on this earth is in Christ. One in Christ! What a theme!

Such unity is wonderful. Its overt expression is glorious. But it is not an end in itself. Unity of believers is a means to an end. It must never become the ultimate goal. The purpose of oneness in Christ is to lead the world to believe in him. Back about 1860, John Harris, an Anglican, wrote in The Divided Church Made One, these words, "Having implored the unity of his disciples as essential to the final success of his Gospel, we cannot expect the end independent of the means, without impugning his wisdom, and hope that his prayer may be forgotten.” We must find a way to express our unity or settle for a lost world. The world will be won to believe in Christ, when those in the world who believe in Christ are one! It is just that simple!

We can do something about the divisions inherited from our fathers who lived in days more crude and cruel than these. We need not perpetuate strife. We need not keep old feuds aflame by heaping new fuel upon them. Let us cross back and forth over the artificial barriers men have thrown up. Let us ignore the walls created by fear and cemented with hostility. There are no obstructions for you except those which you allow to grow in your own heart.

Do not be a pawn for a party, to be moved and manipulated by men for selfish gain and unwarranted pride. Let love be your arbiter. Let the indwelling Spirit be your strength. This is no time for craven cowardice. Be a bold adventurer for the freedom for which Christ set us free. Do not change your allegiance from one party to another party. Do not confuse association with endorsement. Think for yourself! Speak for yourself! Act for yourself! But think, speak and act under his lordship to whom you must give an account. Allow no other person to be the lord of your life and do not seek to become a lord over the life of any other person.

There is a crying need for peacemakers. Do not expect others to do what you are unwilling to attempt. Peace is not an accident. It has to be made. Match your prayers with your effort. Do not just read the prayer of Jesus for oneness. Start to answer and implement it. Regardless of what it costs you to labor for peace, it will cost you infinitely more not to work for it!

The Common Life

Mission Messenger (February 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

“The union of Christian hearts is founded on a kindred being and a kindred life which has come to them through the Father. Home is the chief school of human virtue. There the fountains of love are unsealed, and the lessons of trust and mutual forbearance are taught, and thus the church when it touches its highest ideal is a home. Our personal life can only be fully developed in an environment of personal relations, and hence the value of the communion of the saints. As in every moment of our existence we are dependent on others, clinging to them for sympathy, and leaning on them for strength, so in the divinest relation of our life, we seek the fellowship of others who share in the same hope and are heirs of the same destiny.”— Robert P. Downes in Pillars of our Faith (1893).

As I look back upon it, I think my life was typical of that of thousands of others in the Church of Christ. The magnificent dream of “a project to unite the Christians in all of the sects” had faded by the time I came along, and the movement which grew out of it had splintered and fragmented. Each faction thought of itself as the restored church. Each regarded those in every other party as either sectarians or extremists. Each narrow segment was a “brotherhood” of its own and this exhibited itself even in the language employed. Those who parroted the party line were always addressed as “Brother.” One from another party was carefully introduced as “Mister.” This very distinction was an eloquent proof of the narrow and bigoted attitude to which we clung as proof of our “faithfulness to Christ.” When we spoke of “the brotherhood” we never thought of including the thousands of others who had received Christ but were in other factions than our own.

Many of our attitudes were cultural rather than spiritual. We were a frontier movement and the emotional overtones which framed the pioneer settlements helped to orient our thinking. For one thing we were a people of fierce loyalties, clinging together for mutual strength and support like settlers in a fort or blockhouse. Anyone who did not wholly agree with our every interpretation was regarded as a threat to our imagined solidarity. He was an object of suspicion to be isolated and not allowed to speak in our tribal councils.

As a group, I suspect we were anti-intellectual. This is characteristic of movements which had their roots in the rural life of that day. I doubt that we could have escaped being so. It was a natural thing, given the factors which helped to produce us. We were in doubt of preachers from “big city churches” and agreeably surprised when one of them proved to be “as common as an old shoe.” Too, we were reluctant to read anything which was not written by one of “our brethren” and that narrowed the field of our reading greatly. The “loyal brethren” did not write much and what they did write we already knew, since, if they had written anything else, they would not have been “loyal.”

All of us took the brotherhood paper, another term for our official party organ. The editor was our factional watchdog, barking when he saw danger approaching, and sometimes growling when he did not, to let us know he was still on the job. Anyone who threatened his control could be slapped down with a well-directed journalistic blow. If the challenger was not popular he had to “fold his tent like the Arabs and as silently steal away.” If he was a well-known preacher, his fans rallied to his defense and another faction resulted. The recognized journal exhibited the power of negative thinking.

I would not want you to think the various groups were composed of wicked people. On the contrary, they were good neighbors, willingly helpful in any kind of tragedy or emergency. It was only when they were inside their religious structures that they became like the Pharisees. In the marketplace they were kind and polite, deeply considerate and compassionate. It was only when they hung up their hats in the meetinghouse that the milk of human kindness clabbered and their disposition soured. I have often wondered what there is about a “consecrated pile of brick and stones” which stifles human concern and turns frequenters of “the sacred premises” into such stern and implacable judges. Preachers who are warm and outgoing when eating in a “Burger Chef” palace, turn as cold as an iceberg when inside of their holy place.

I have reached the conclusion that the building is a symbol. It constitutes the temple of the illiberal sect. It is a fortress which must be defended at all cost. As always, the priests are the front men, the guardians of orthodoxy, the gladiators of gracelessness. Without a designated priesthood, we relied upon preachers and elders to repulse invaders and we came to regard their aloofness, braggadocio and downright boorishness as indicative of faith and courage. In truth, they were indicators of a deep sense of fear and insecurity. To question the validity of the concepts which gave the faction its being was to threaten the position of self-appointed guardians of the ramparts, and the brethren react as all practitioners of pride react when their power is challenged. Outside the bailiwick men can act rationally. Inside of it they are caught up with all the emotional tides which flood their souls as they look at the pews. They must act like Peter with his finger in the dike, like Horatius at the bridge, or Leonidas at Thermopylae.

The party spirit inevitably freezes ignorance at a certain level. All creeds, written or unwritten, are actually shackles put on the mental powers to make possible control by others. Creeds which are not enforced are useless as factional manipulative tools, so every faction must have an enforcement squad, a contingent of partisan Minutemen, ready to ride hard at a moment's notice and "head them off at the pass." In Churches of Christ these were never selected by a college of cardinals or a convention of delegates. They were achieved by dynamic personalities, always fluent, sometimes flamboyant, and were perpetuated by "Godfathers" who passed on control to fawning sycophants upon whom they had put the finger for future control.

Sometimes the governing power rested in the editorship of the paper, and family dynasties kept themselves in power by the simple expedient of inheriting the official mouthpiece and owning the linotype machine. The editor defined the boundaries beyond which the thought-process must not penetrate, so original thinking was stifled, and questioning of the partisan position was taboo, resulting in banishment or exile for the careless and thoughtless soul who indulged in it. Each little faction was under its own incipient pope, surrounded by a palace guard whose members could be summoned to cut down any intruder, with trained replacements for the elite corps being regularly turned out by "the loyal schools."

This worked well and functioned smoothly as long as membership was still being drawn from a relatively rural and village social culture. But the brethren made the fatal mistake of educating their children, and education results in mental growth which can only produce change. One of the traits of the enlightened mind in its honest search for truth is to question the status quo, not necessarily to reject it, but rather to determine its validity. It is a foregone conclusion that one who seriously examines our factional muddle must develop grave doubts. No sane person could seriously argue that our mixed-up mess results from God's will or is a production of the Holy Spirit. "God is not the author of confusion, but of peace." Brilliant young thinkers who refuse to gulp down everything that is spooned out or dipped up from traditional kettles sometimes find some strange ingredients upon closer examination.

It is axiomatic that every faction always skims the brains off the top while leaving the unstudious and unthinking mass undisturbed. It is only the thinkers who are driven off or thrown out. Conformists who never question, continue to huddle together, proudly congratulating each other upon their fidelity to the party and glorying in the fact that they have not changed in twenty years. A century ago such parties could survive. They were attuned to the life of the world from which they drew their constituents. The man who had a college degree was looked at askance. Now that world is gone! It will never return. We are living in an intellectual, sophisticated and technological era. It is this world we must reach or utterly fail in our mission for the Master.

Many of the brethren do not realize it, and many will resent my saying it, but from the very moment the first man stepped out of a space capsule, to leave his footsteps on the gray ash of the moon, any purported relevance of our narrow factional approach to relationship with the infinite Creator of the universe was wiped out. It was as if a giant hand had reached down with a wet sponge and swiped off the blackboard of religious history all that we had ever written in our partisan contentions.

As I sat in our living-room on that fateful Sunday night and watched a human being walk on the surface of one of the planets in the second heaven, I suddenly recognized that my whole life purpose had been altered. The struggle for men's minds in the computer age had been elevated to a higher plane. The battle had entered a new phase. It had been transferred to another field. Never again would debates over such trivia as classes in the congregation, multiple cups in the Lord's Supper, or the method of support of radio and television programs have any relationship to the world in which we live. All these disputes about methods, means and mechanics belonged to the old world of spiritual intrigue and partisan political maneuvering. Suddenly we were in a new world and time was running out. No longer can we engage in the luxury of exalting opinions or fending over fantasies. Once again it is either Christ or chaos. We dare not continue to contribute to the chaos!

I know what my brethren say when someone writes thus. I know because I once said the same things. I stood where they stand now. Those who are accustomed to judging allegiance to the Lord of life by one's stand on "the controversial issues" always conclude that one cannot be true to Christ until he lines up with the party. I disagree! One cannot be true to Christ who does line up with the party! The party chalkline is not the spiritual lifeline. I no longer represent any faction, fraction, sect or segment. I belong only to Jesus. I have no other Lord. I never intend again, so help me God, to allow anyone to lord it over my faith. The issues which divide us are controversial only because it is easier for carnal men to fight their brethren than to love them. They are no longer controversial to me because the Holy Spirit has made it easier for me to love my brethren than to fight them. But it took the Spirit to do it!

I know we have to be practical. Just because we are heirs of "the restoration movement" does not mean that we need to continue to be impractical. Our parties will perpetuate themselves for a long time. The papers will continue to grind out their exotic grist. More people will subscribe for them and fewer will read them. College lectureships will import "hatchet men" to try and frighten the student body with all kinds of rash charges, but fewer will be impressed by political hacks. The more brilliant thinkers will endure their surroundings and tolerate the teaching until they are awarded the degree and then will free themselves from serfdom. The fearful and less perceptive will still kick up dust in the party corral under the mistaken notion that they are "going into all the world."

After the project to unite the Christians had been inaugurated by erudite Presbyterians, and became a movement, the forces of history which helped to produce the Civil War, also divided it, and because of the nature of the developing philosophy it tended to center a great deal of its strength in the South. It is a little naive to brag that this was the only religious movement which did not divide over slavery, when the truth is that the brethren were already so busy tomahawking one another that a little matter such as the buying and selling of human beings like cattle did not mean too much.

We were divided by the passions which produced the struggle between the Blue and the Gray. As the King James Version so quaintly puts it, “my hap was to light” in one of the northern parties. We always felt spiritual hostility toward the brethren below the Mason and Dixon’s line, and they returned the feeling with true Southern fervor. When I went to Arkansas to hold a series of studies I was attacked before I arrived by radio, newspaper and letters. Firm Foundation carried a desperate warning under the heading, “Ketcherside Invades the South.” The brethren declared a temporary moratorium on their own heated squabbles to rally together to plug up the hole through which I was able to infiltrate. It was humorous to me at the time. It is even more so now that the brethren have resumed their squabbles where they left off.

Insofar as the non-instrument shard of the shattered vessel is concerned, it became primarily a white, rural, middle-class Southern-flavored institution. Congregations of blacks were segregated. In some places when Marshal Keeble held a “gospel meeting” the huge tent had a rope stretched down the center aisle. Whites sat on one side and blacks on the other. When people “came forward” at the invitation, a white preacher received the whites, while Brother Keeble received the blacks. Of course there was a lot of second-class sham about the whole thing on the part of both groups. But Brother Keeble had to constantly teach the “boy preachers” he took with him from his institute, to learn the Bible, and what was just as important “to stay in their place.” So that you will not forget let me remind you that until recent years The Gospel Advocate had a special little section on next to the last page for reporting the news of “Colored Churches.” And Where The Saints Meet, which is published by Firm Foundation, under the supervision of Brother Reuel Lemmons, has the notation “(col.)” after congregations of black saints. If you don’t believe it glance your eye down the list of Texas congregations in the 1972 edition. The term “Nigger Heaven” did not originate with the theater but first designated the rear pews in church buildings where “the colored folks” sat when they drummed up enough nerve or interest to attend.

When I left the Lutheran communion in which I was reared, to become “a Christian only” there was only one “Church of Christ” around our area. The Christian Church did not count. We had arrived and they had departed. We always “Mistered” them while “Brothering” those who had the right sign on their buildings. I was amazed when I found out there were about two dozen other kinds of Churches of Christ, and even more so when I found out that their members actually entertained the illusion they were going to heaven while being just as convinced that we were not. The first time I went to Georgia to preach I was regarded as a missionary from another country. After being there a few days I became convinced that I was. It would not have surprised me to have seen the caption “Yankee Go Home!” scrawled on the meetinghouse door.

A lot of our brethren will drag along, attacking forts long since abandoned and jousting with windmills which they mistake for giants. They will confuse walking in the old paths with wallowing in the old ruts. But this too shall pass away! The clouds of darkness will be wafted away by the fresh winds of deeper faith. Dogmatism will surrender to mutual sharing, and fears will be supplanted by association across our silly artificial barriers. It will not be accomplished in a day, but it will be accomplished! Slowly but surely we are being driven by the Spirit into the reality of our day, and we can praise God.

Primarily because of lack of qualified material I was thrust into a role of partisan leadership. I became a recognized champion, a debater and defender of our factional interpretations, deductions and opinions. I would not have you think this was against my will. I liked it. Gladiatorial combat was “right down my alley.” I firmly believed that our group was the kingdom of heaven upon earth to the exclusion of all others. We were the people of whom Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel had spoken. The disciples of Tolbert Fanning, David Lipscomb and James A. Harding were enemies of the cross. R. H. Boll was so far out he wasn’t even in it. I felt this way before I ever read a thing that either of them wrote. In fact I felt that way a lot more than I did after I read what they said. We could always select from their writings the little nuggets in which they agreed with us and use them to show that even the worst of men are sometimes right on some things.

It was great to know that you were in the congregation which had restored “the new testament faith and practice” without addition, subtraction, or modification. You were with the only people on earth who really spoke where the Bible spoke and remained silent where it was silent. It was thrilling to realize that if Paul came back and could locate us, which would take some doing, he would worship with us in a sense of deep contentment that things had not changed one iota since he wrote to the Thessalonians. We were willing victims of what a genial Texas editor calls “pattern theology.” We had restored the pattern. No one else had. If you were not with us you were not with the pattern.

All we had to do was to continue as we were, holding a fall meeting after the crops were gathered in and baptizing the children that had “attained the age of accountability,” and some day Jesus would come and separate us from the goats down South and say, “Come ye blessed of my Father!” We could watch the surprised look on the face of the “Bollites” as we politely referred to the brethren who were premillennial, as we marched by them on the way into the pearly gates. So we sang with gusto, “We’ve a home prepared for the saints above, just over in the gloryland,” and if there were any strangers present we sang “There’s an eye watching you!” There were a lot of eyes watching them. We knew who the saints were that were going home to be with Jesus. They were the ones who had individual cups and classes and opposed colleges and kitchens in the basement of the meetinghouses. The saints were those who were always on the right side of the wrong things!

THE GREAT AWAKENING

Then my little paradise caved in! The Holy Spirit bombed me out of my little air-conditioned, two-by-four heaven. Before it happened I thought that we were rich, and increased with goods and had need of nothing. Then I saw that I was blind, and miserable, and poor and naked! And I mean miserable! I groped for the mental eyesalve and rubbed it on. And I began to see. For the first time in my life I really began to see! And it was frightening. I dug into the revelation like never before. Every passage I had used to justify division I had misused. I had applied them to situations which the Spirit of God had never intended. I had used the written word to undo the very purpose of the Living Word. I had attempted to bind God with the commands He gave to bind me.

In their proper context these passages made real sense. They came alive. They were beautiful, appropriate, pertinent and correlative. Romans 16:17, 18! 2 John 9, 10! Amos 3:3! 1 Corinthians 1:10, 11! Finally I saw why I had wrested these from their context. I needed them as prooftexts, and what I was trying to prove was not in the text. It was a presumption. I was wrong about the divine concept of fellowship. For five long years I studied the divine ideal as revealed in the scriptures before I ever wrote a word on the subject of fellowship. Then I sat down and wrote the book Thoughts on Fellowship, followed a few years later by the volume called The Twisted Scriptures.

I was driven to the conclusion that the fellowship could never be confined to the members of a single faction, and that I was in the fellowship with those in every faction who had been born of the water and of the Spirit. At first, as I began to wade carefully out of the shallows in which I had always paddled around, I think I secretly hoped that I would find fellowship confined to the non-instrument wing growing out of the aspirations of our mostly Presbyterian forefathers. It is easier to receive those whom you have always regarded as “brothers in error” than those whom you have arrogantly branded as sectarians. Most of us choke to death on our nomenclature.

But God did not let me stop and settle down on my own sectarian lees. He kept pushing me further until, driven by the Word, I had to realize that the body of Christ is greater and more majestic than any movement within it. And that includes the restoration movement! Now I know that wherever my Father has a child I have a brother or sister. He has many children who never heard of Thomas and Alexander Campbell. He has children who are wholly ignorant of our historical restoration movement. The one body contains every saved person on this earth. I am in that body with everyone of them. One in Christ! What a mind-blowing, heart-throbbing, breath-taking, soul-purging thought!

We are not one because we have catechized, analyzed and synthesized every truth. None of us know it all! All of us have much yet to learn. We will always be disciples, and none of us will graduate while in the flesh. We are united, not because of what we know, but because of whom we know. It is not being on the Dean’s List but being in Jesus that counts. Some who are in Christ are quite ignorant but they are one with those who are educated, not because of what they have in their minds but because of Him whom they have enshrined in their hearts.

I would like to share with you again some of the things I have learned about fellowship. It is these things which have altered my life. Our word fellowship is a translation of the Greek koinonia. So rich in meaning is the Greek word that fellowship is inadequate to express the deep content of the original. It is further hampered by the restraints and restrictions imposed upon it by well-intentioned but misguided partisans. No single English word is expansive enough or full enough to exhaust the meaning of koinonia. In the revised version commissioned by King James and authorized to be read in Anglican churches the term is variously rendered. It is translated communication 1, communion 4, contribution 1, distribution 1, and fellowship 12. Koinonos is translated companion 1, partaker 5, partner 3, have fellowship with 1.

The root is the word for common, and koinos is so rendered seven times. The suffix “ship” is added to nouns in such a manner as to form another noun to signify a state or condition in which a joint interest is sustained by persons. Occasionally I get letters asking such questions as “Do you fellowship instrumental music?” or “Do you fellowship Sunday schools?” With all due respect for my querists I must say that they reveal an ignorance of the nature of fellowship, which may be more tragic than the matters about which they write. Fellowship is a relation sustained with other persons and not with things, as the word “fellow” indicates.

“Fellow” is from the Old Norse felagi, comrade. No one writes to me asking “Do you comradeship Ford cars?” I have never had a letter asking, “Do you friendship huckleberry pies?” But that would be just as appropriate as to ask “Do you fellowship kitchens in the church basement?” When someone writes me like that, I know he needs to do a lot of studying first before he begins to set himself up as an authority on fellowship.

Fellowship in Christ is not related to instrumental music. It is not related to Sunday schools. It is not related to such items as have kicked up a storm or created controversy among the brethren. Those in the fellowship may, and undoubtedly will have varied views about them and scores of other matters. But such views will not affect the fellowship unless some make their views a Savior instead of Christ, and make union with the party more important than unity with our precious Lord.

Others make the same kind of error when they ask “Do you fellowship persons who use instrumental music?” No one ever asks, “Do you companionship your wife?” or “Do you partnership your associates?” Fellowship in Christ is a state or condition or quality of being in which you receive, acknowledge and recognize as brothers and sisters all others who are in Him. Of course I am in that state with some who use instruments in conjunction with their expression of public praise, and with a lot of others who do not. I am not in the fellowship with them because they use instruments, or because they do not. I am in the fellowship with them because they are in Christ. Fellowship based on any other consideration is too niggling, piddling or insignificant to concern me.

The fellowship about which I write is a state created by God and into which he calls us. This is what the Bible reveals and I believe it. “God is faithful, by whom ye were called into the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord.” Every person who has heard the call and responded to it is in the fellowship. Every person who is in our Lord Jesus is in the fellowship. We are called by the gospel, “Whereunto he called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.” It is plain that every person who properly responds to the gospel, answers the call, and is in the fellowship.

The response to the good news is belief of the greatest fact ever announced to sinful men, that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah and the Son of God, and immersion in water in validation of that faith. Every sincere believer on the face of this earth who is immersed because he believes that one great and magnificent proposition is in the fellowship, and I am in it with him.

Fellowship is created by the gospel, the call of God! It has nothing to do with whether I am circumcised or uncircumcised. It has nothing to do with whether I am a conscientious vegetarian or can freely eat all things. It has nothing to do with whether I esteem one day above another or esteem every day alike. It has nothing to do with whether I think Christ is coming before the millennium or the millennium is coming before Christ. It has nothing to do with what I think about the method of supporting the Herald of Truth program. Fellowship in the Lord Jesus Christ is not and cannot be created or maintained by doctrinal conformity. It is possible only through the gospel and it is found only in Christ with whom we are called!

Fellowship has not one thing to do with whether a person is in one or the other of the two-dozen parties of the non-instrument Church of Christ, or the Christian Church, or in any other historical development, but with whether he is in the Lord Jesus Christ. There is only one church. It is the body of Christ. Every saved person on this earth is in it. All of the arguments and debates about this faction or that faction, this paper or that paper, this issue or that issue, are useless insofar as fellowship is concerned. Fellowship is a creation of the blessed Holy Spirit. Every person on this earth in whom the Spirit dwells is in the fellowship, even if he never heard of the “issues” which have become factional and sectarian “geiger counters.” Fellowship results from the Holy Spirit. Factionalism results from the party spirit.

Since those who are in the fellowship will never see everything alike while in the flesh and caught up in the human predicament, there will always be areas of disagreement and matters in which not all can jointly participate. No one must be forced into doing that which his conscience cannot condone, but the mere fact that one cannot participate in some things does not argue that he should not participate in anything. The conscience which will not allow me to share in thoughts and actions related to time must never destroy the fellowship in the timeless. In the physical family, if my brother smokes cigarettes of which I cannot approve and in which I will not indulge, this does not mean that I cannot help him paint the house, put up the storm sash or sit down together at the Thanksgiving table in our father's home. It would be absurd to conclude that because we painted the house together I thereby endorsed his habit of smoking.

In the spiritual family the one whose conscience did not allow him to eat meat, certainly could not do so with the brother who did, but they were still brethren, although he had to decline participation with the other in those features of which he could not partake. He dare not judge him! Each man has to be fully persuaded in his own mind. Each will give an account of himself to God. He is not accountable to or for his brethren. He should not play God with their lives nor allow them to do so with his. The word of God clearly teaches that men can do to the Lord what they cannot do together (Romans 14:6).

For years we made the tragic mistake of equating fellowship with another with endorsement of his opinions, views and doctrinal interpretations. We wrongly concluded that if we sanctioned what he did that was right this automatically made us endorse what he thought that was wrong. This is an absurd and childish position. Certainly it is right to pray to God but if a man from another faction attended one of our meetings we did not dare to call upon him to pray for fear that by this gesture of brotherly recognition we would be openly condoning his dissenting views. This made for a good deal of sham and hypocrisy. It promoted arrogance and rudeness of almost unbelievable quality among those who professed to be followers of Jesus.

Certainly Paul did not endorse the actions of Peter at

Antioch. He said he opposed him to his face because he was clearly in the wrong. Did he disavow being in the fellowship with him? If so, the foundation of the apostles and prophets had a big crack in it and was hardly suitable as an underpinning for the temple of God. The brethren at Jerusalem did not agree with “some of the Pharisaic party who had become believers” (Acts 15:5), but they did not deny the validity of their faith nor refuse permission for them to speak in the assembly.

Paul did not agree with the Corinthians about many things but he did not think of them as being outside the fellowship. He said they were “God’s people at Corinth, dedicated to him in Christ Jesus, claimed by him as his own.” He called them brothers. He said they were God’s garden and God’s building. He said, “I am not writing to shame you, but to bring you to reason; for you are my dear children.” He said, “I shall come to Corinth . . . and I may stay with you, perhaps even for the whole winter, and then you can help me on my way wherever I go next. I do not want this to be a flying visit; I hope to spend some time with you, if the Lord permits.”

It was the attitude of Paul toward the congregation at Corinth which had such a profound effect in changing my own attitude toward the congregations I knew. If one could sigh for and long to visit and labor with a group like the Corinthian congregation with all of its faults, frailties and fallacies, surely I should not wash out on the brethren I knew. The letters to the Corinthians stand as a monumental rebuke to the foolish idea that fellowship implies endorsement. What a chance Paul would have had to attack these brethren, to refuse to visit them, and to warn others against doing so. Instead, he wrote, “Our whole aim, my own dear people, is to build you up.”

I have never known a congregation with even one-third of the problems of the saints at Corinth. The worst congregations I have ever seen in my life could not even compare with Corinth. Yet Paul wrote, “Here I am preparing to pay you a third visit . . .

I will gladly spend what I have for you— yes, and spend myself to the limit.” When I think of my own cold, callous and contemptible feeling in the past toward brethren who differed with me I could weep bitterly over my littleness and bigotry. Never once did Paul question that he was in the fellowship with the ripped-off saints at Corinth. Not once did he suggest dividing them. Not once did he intimate that some of them should split off and start a “loyal church.”

As long as the letters to the Corinthians remain in the sacred scriptures they will act as a sharp slap across the faces of those who have created a faction of separated brethren over such matters as the method of financing radio and television programs intended to inform our pagan culture that Jesus has come. Let me be plain with you! If brethren in the Lord in Abilene, Texas, want to receive funds for financing a program which they have designated Herald of Truth, whether I agree with their project or not, they are my brothers, and I am in the fellowship with them. If brethren in Florida oppose financing the program, whether I agree with their position or not, they are my brothers, and I am in the fellowship with them.

But get this! I am unequivocally opposed to the division and fragmentation of the believers over such an inane question. I am opposed to pumping hot air into this issue until it balloons out of all proportion and negates the relationship created by the shed blood of God’s dear Son. I refuse to believe that any opinion held by the saints of God in Abilene or Lufkin in this century is as important as what happened at Golgotha in the first century. To elevate every dissident notion of men to equal importance with all that God has revealed is to make nothing important, and will make the cross of Christ of none effect in the minds of men.

To make tithes of mint and anise and cummin have the same value as justice, mercy and faith, is not to increase the value of the mint and anise, but to devaluate justice, mercy and faith. Every one of our tragic parties is a living proof of our distorted sense of values. Not one is an indication that we approach divinity, but they all exist as open monuments to the worst features of our fallen humanity. “Can you not see that while there is jealousy and strife among you, you are living on the purely human level of your lower nature?” (1 Corinthians 3:3). Do not forget that this was addressed to a congregation which should have divided into a dozen groups on the basis of our contemporary factional rationalization! How many different “Churches of Christ” do you think would have been in Corinth if the people had possessed the same distorted and warped views which have plagued the heirs of the restoration movement?

Fellowship in Christ Jesus does not even imply endorsement of the ideas, concepts, interpretations, deductions and opinions of those within it. It never did and never will. Fellowship is a creation of the divine mind through the Holy Spirit. Endorsement is an action of the human mind by which one sanctions the thought of another human mind with which he concurs. We are in the fellowship of the heavenly Father. Obviously He does not endorse all that we think, say or do! But He does not throw us out of His fellowship because of our mistaken views and silly speeches. If a divine being can tolerate our ignorance, inaccuracies and bewilderment, surely we, as mere human beings, ought to be able to endure one another with a little more grace. Although it is frequently said that we play God with one another, it might be a little more factual to say that we play the devil with each other. God is infinitely more tolerant with us than we are with one another, and if we played God we might be more loving and kind than most of us have been.

At one time in my life I was brainwashed into thinking that fellowship in Christ Jesus was contingent upon everyone arriving at a certain degree of knowledge at the same time. The degree was always determined by our own factional attainment. The party “somewhats” determined what constituted matters of faith, matters of opinion and matters of indifference. They sorted out “the musts” from “the maybes.” If you agreed with them on the sorting arrangement you were “in” but if you did not you were “out.” You did not really need to worry about thinking. That was done for you. Fellowship with us was a package deal. You had to take the rotten apples with the good.

Of course, the truth is that no two people on earth reach the same degree of knowledge at the same time. To predicate fellowship on such a far-out, farcical and fantastic notion makes fellowship impossible. You cannot freeze the level of knowledge. What you do is merely establish a plateau of ignorance. If someone comes into the faction and does not stop thinking, he will attain a higher degree of knowledge, and when he does he will be thrown out. This does not hurt him. It merely frees him to go on thinking. But it hurts the party by making it more ingrown, moronic and imbecilic.

All knowledge is built upon association, environment, research and mental ability. That ability involves retentiveness and rationalization. No two persons on earth have had identical experiences. No two have the same mental capacities. Our mental faculties are as diverse as our facial features. We can no more all think alike than we can look alike. We are not going to heaven in a clump. We are strung out along the road. Some of us are pretty far back. That doesn't bother me. If you are on the right road and facing in the right direction I praise God! I trust you'll not be looking back over your shoulder to see if the others are keeping up. If you are you are looking in the wrong direction. You might run into one of God's telephone poles and knock yourself out cold.

Uniformity of knowledge can never be the basis of fellowship. There are three reasons this is so. All of them are set forth in 1 Corinthians 8, where we are informed that it is love and not knowledge which builds up, and brings recognition from God. First, all human knowledge is relative. “If anyone fancies that he knows, he knows nothing yet, in the true sense of knowing” (verse 2). Second, knowledge is not universal. “But not everyone knows this” (verse 7). Third, all knowledge is affected by our past association and attainment. “There are some in whom the consciousness of the false god is so persistent, that even now they eat this food with a sense of its heathen consecration.” Anyone who is brash enough to state that he knows that point of knowledge which all in Christ must attain to remain in the fellowship of God and Christ proves that he knows nothing yet as he ought to know.

I must say, in closing, that I think the matter of gravest concern among us is not the division and the fragmentation which has occurred. It is rather the attitude into which we have been betrayed by Satan which has served to cause our schismatic condition. All sectarianism is born of fear and pride. Ours is no exception. We have built walls around ourselves to protect what we believe is vital to keep others out. But we have forgotten that it is those inside the walls and not those outside of them who are in prison. It seems high time that we awake out of sleep and assert again that freedom for which Christ set us free. If perfect love casts out fear, it will also destroy the party spirit which gives it birth. Love is the answer to all our problems. It is the fulfilling of the law.

The Sharing of Life

Mission Messenger (March 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

A consideration of the scope, or design, which the inspired author of any of the books of Scripture had in view, essentially facilitates the study of the Bible: because, as every writer had some design which he proposed to unfold, and as it is not to be supposed that he would express himself in terms foreign to that design, it therefore is but reasonable to admit that he made use of such words and phrases as were every way suited to his purpose. To be acquainted, therefore, with the scope of an author is to understand the chief part of his book. The scope, it has been well observed, is the soul or spirit of a book; and that being once ascertained, every argument and every word appears in its right place and is perfectly intelligible: but if the scope is not duly considered, every thing becomes obscure, however clear and obvious its meaning may really be.— Thomas Hartwell Home in An Introduction to the Critical Study and Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures.

I am indebted to John for a great deal I have learned about the real meaning of fellowship. I'm speaking about the son of Zebedee who was a fisherman until Jesus came walking down the beach and put the finger on him to enter training for an ambassadorship in the only kingdom that will survive the wreck of this world and last forever. John made good in the position and his official correspondence has the key to what it is all about.

One reason I am so thrilled with it now is because it contains the secret of the divine-human relationship like nothing else I have ever read. Of course the secret was all there all the time, but we were not. For years I read the new covenant scriptures through jaundiced eyes. After we waved the magic wand and converted “the restoration movement” into “the Lord’s church” it was but one easy step to assume that all of the apostles were members of our particular faction, and the Spirit inspired them to confirm our opinions, deductions and interpretations, so we could point to ourselves and say, “This is the way, walk ye in it.”

It was not too difficult to conclude that those who did not concur with our views were out of step with Jesus and His holy messengers, and had denied the faith and were worse than infidels. We were staring at every thing through clouded glasses ground by partisan optometrists. We looked at things “slaunchwise” as an old woodsman and tie-hacker down home used to say. That is the way I read what John wrote and I came up with some weird notions. That is why a dozen different factions had preachers who held forth on “The Way That is Right and Cannot be Wrong,” and yet they all had a different way. They could not even call upon one another to lead in prayer.

No one ever said more about loving the brethren than did John. He did not condition that love upon conformity of opinion or uniformity of understanding, but upon the fact of God’s love for us. We knew that, I suspect, but we also thought that 2 John 9, 10 wiped it all out. “If any man come and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him Godspeed, for he that biddeth him Godspeed is partaker of his evil deeds.” What we did when we turned that into a gnarled club to batter out the brains of dissenters from our puerile positions is an inglorious commentary on the frightful effect the works of the flesh can exercise in the lives of frightened factional followers.

We applied it to things of which John never dreamed and at which the Holy Spirit never hinted. Each faction had elevated some matter of opinion or deduction to the place where it became “the maypole” around which the partisans danced in proof of their loyalty. Whatever that thing was it became the criterion for measuring faithfulness. One might differ with the party on almost anything else, but if he was to be recognized as “sound” he had to be able to give the party password. If he did not do that he did not bring this doctrine, and he was not to be received or given a greeting. He was to be treated with such reserve and coldness that he would know he was in the “out” group.

If the test of fellowship was having only one container for the fruit of the vine in the Lord’s Supper, that doctrine became “this doctrine.” If the party was created to oppose the Sunday School that doctrine became “this doctrine.” If the faction formed to oppose the method of financing the Herald of Truth program that doctrine became “this doctrine.” Regardless of how much a person loved Jesus and sought to walk in the Spirit, if he did not endorse the party taboo he was left out in the cold. This doctrine was the twentieth century distillate of men’s minds around which an exclusivistic clan gathered, and unless you could pass the eagle-eyed inspection of prying editors or preying preachers you were left on the outside looking in through the chinks in the blockhouse!

I seriously doubt the apostle ever had in mind the danger of our becoming partakers in such evil deeds as having individual containers to pass the fruit of the vine, or of having classes in which to discuss the revealed message, or of sending a check to Highland congregation in Abilene, Texas, as a contribution to the propaganda medium called “Herald of Truth.” Anything becomes evil to one who wants to borrow it as something to which he can object and build his little party around the objection while blaming the thing to which he objects as responsible for division. All things are unclean to him who is unclean. But the fact that men have split the body into smithereens over such inane and innocuous trivia shows how little they regard the faith that is in Christ Jesus our Lord. The fact that they quote 2 John 9, 10 to justify their cold and callous treatment of God's other children demonstrates that the party spirit will stoop to any level to protect its fanatical regard for opinion.

It was a great day for me when I learned that John was writing about the majestic historical event upon which our blessed hope rests, and had no reference to our little partisan hangups. These are the mental toys over which selfish children squabble and fight. They cannot possibly mean as much to a loving Father as His children mean to Him. What a difference it made when I laid aside my "Church of Christ" bifocals and saw the epistles in their proper perspective.

I am now quite convinced that the community of the redeemed has always had to battle against two grave dangers—legalism and philosophy, the wisdom of this passing age. During the first century both of these tried the mettle of the faith. The untiring struggle of Paul won the day against "the Pharisees who believed" and the message was freed from the codicils and amendments tacked on it by those who preferred the security of law to the liberty of grace.

The destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman legions under Titus scattered the "salt" out of its original shaker and dispersed the saints abroad. It was, no doubt, divine providence which directed John to Ephesus at the very time when it was fast becoming a center for the dissemination of the most dangerous propaganda which ever threatened the hope laid up in Christ. There has probably never been another such potential for disaster as Gnosticism. Many factors contributed to make it so, not the least of which was the fact that it was a synthesis of the very kind which contained a magnetic attraction for the Greek mind.

Just as in the days of Paul it appeared that the saints might fracture into separate bodies composed either of the circumcised or uncircumcised, so Gnosticism threatened to split every congregation on earth over whether Jesus actually came in the flesh. By the time John arrived in Ephesus “many false prophets had gone out into the world,” and the aging apostle identified those whom he so labeled. They were men who denied that Jesus had come in the flesh. His three letters, as well as his belated gospel record, were written to counter the ever-increasing effect of this deadly system.

Even the casual student of Gnosticism knows that its adherents were divided into hostile parties although one basic and underlying idea was common to all of them. It was not new, but had been around a long time. That idea was that all matter was inherently and irretrievably evil. It was when Gnosticism came face to face with the fact of Jesus it met its greatest challenge. If Jesus was the Son of God come in the flesh, this one historic event forever knocked the whole theory into the proverbial “cocked hat.”

The amazing thing, and I take a lot of secret comfort from it, is that a number of Gnostics embraced the faith. This means that the historic facts were so positively established and the testimony so incontestable they were irresistible. The tension must have been great. Long since the Gnostics had concluded that God could not have directly created the earth for that would have been to accuse Deity of deliberately producing evil. The problem was resolved by assuming that Deity had sent out emanations in ever-widening circles of influence and these crystallized into creative intelligence, aeons or demi-urges. When one of these was far enough from Deity as a center so that Deity could not directly come in contact with matter, the demi-urge brought the material universe into existence.

This little background cannot possibly do justice to the system. Hopefully, it will be sufficient for our purpose. If we are to understand John's letters, however, there are a few facts we must not forget. Let me briefly mention them. Gnosticism was widespread. It was the accepted explanation of the origin and nature of the universe throughout much of the Greek world. The theory takes its designation from gnosis, knowledge. It had a real tug at the Greek intellect for the Greeks sought after wisdom. To be a Gnostic was to be sophisticated, to gain admission to the company of the intellectually elite, the inner circle of wisdom. The Gnostic was superior, the rest of humanity illiterate and barbarian. Only those could truly know the secrets of the universe who had made contact with the esoteric and been initiated into the Mysteries.

Any converts to the faith in the Greek intellectual world would more than likely have been steeped in Gnosticism. To them it was the only logical explanation of the world in which their lot was cast. That world had been conceived in the Logos of God. The Logos was the divine reason and word. It was this power which had conceived the means by which emanations could proceed until a creaturely world could be fashioned and set into whirling motion. To accept Jesus as a historical figure, declared to be the Son of God was one thing. To explain Jesus as having had pre-existence with the Father and having come in the flesh was a wholly different matter.

By the time John arrived in Asia, Gnosticism had taken two forms in its attempt to explain Jesus. There were the Docetics who took their name from the Greek term which meant "to appear, to seem." It was their idea that Jesus was not real at all. He merely seemed to have a body of flesh and blood but was actually only a phantom, a spirit, or as the Greeks would say, a pneumatic personality. Advocates of what James Moffatt called "the doctrine of seemism" did not deny the personality of Jesus. They merely affirmed his immateriality. Some of them wrote that when Jesus appeared to walk on the surface of the earth he left no visible footprints in the dust.

There was also the Cerinthian brand, named after its chief proponent, Cerinthus, who lived in Ephesus at the same time as John. A good deal of traditional material has been preserved about their personal encounters. The Cerinthian gnostics taught that Jesus was begotten by Joseph and conceived by Mary. When He was about thirty years of age and at the time of His baptism by John, the hagios pneuma, the Holy Spirit, descended upon and invested Him and it was this pneuma which was given recognition as the Messiah. Since it was reasoned that God could not be killed and the Spirit could not die, it was taught that Jesus yielded up the pneuma, and it was simply a man who died, not the Son of God.

It seems a little incredible to us that the doctrine which denied that Jesus came in the flesh could have gained such headway, but we live in a wholly different social culture. The faith has been debated, defined and refined during twenty long centuries of conflict and while there are pockets of what might be called “neo-gnosticism” our foes are of a different breed. It is important, if we are to understand what John is saying, that we put his writings back in the framework in which he wrote them. When we do this, we will at once gain some deep insights into what he is communicating.

For instance, we learn that many of the Gnostics had been in the redeemed community but they left the saints. John regarded their secession as proof that they never were really one with the brethren who accepted the reality of the incarnation. He says “they were not of us.” He brands them as liars and antichrists, and defines a liar as one who denies that Jesus is the Christ, and an antichrist as one who denies both the Father and the Son (1 John 3:22). In spite of their defection from the body the Gnostics still attempted to seduce the brethren (3:26).

John exhorted the beloved not to be gullible, but to test the spirits whether they were of God. That the Gnostics were numerous is indicated by the fact that the apostle declares that many false prophets had gone out into the world. A false prophet was one who refused to confess that Jesus Christ came in the flesh. Such a one was not to be admitted to the house. No greeting was to be given to him on the street. There was a great gulf between the Spirit of God and the spirit of antichrist. Nothing must be done or condoned which would leave even a suspicion that there was any agreement. All hospitality was to be denied to the wandering Gnostic teacher. Even the customary civility was to be avoided. The whole Christian faith rested upon the coming of Jesus Christ in the flesh. There was no meeting ground with one who denied this great fundamental truth. He was to be met at the door of the home and refused admittance.

Having said this much it is my hope that my readers are prepared for that to which the preceding is prologue. It is my intention to share with you my analysis and explanation of the first chapter of 1 John. In doing so I want to emphasize the nature of the fellowship of which we are partakers. I want to lift it out of the pitiable state to which it has been subjected. In our partisan zeal we have squeezed the spiritual life out of the relationship God has created. In some places the very word “fellowship” has been so abused by men who claim the authority to manipulate it that it is a hiss and a byword.

FELLOWSHIP OF LIFE

1. That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life.

This was not mere rhetoric. It was not written as an attention-getter. It was penned to saints who were under attack by a clever and designing philosophy. It is the opening salvo of spiritual firepower intended to devastate a Christ-denying doctrine and to reinforce the morale of believers. John is writing a letter to certain ones on a specific problem. But it does not begin like a letter. The faith is at stake and John has been brought in to save it. That is why he takes no warm-up tosses but whips a strike across the plate without indulging in the customary wind-up or salutation.

That which was from the beginning was the Logos, the Word who was with God and was God. He was the creative agent by whom all things were made. And it was the Word which was made flesh. It was not that the Logos invested one who was flesh, or came to one who was in the flesh, but the Logos became flesh. And He was the Word of life. In Him was life and the life was the light of men. It was not simply that He was alive, but He was the source of life. Life originated with Him. Do not forget that with John life is light. The life was the light! I shall expect to show that John uses three great words— life, light and love. In his context they are all the same. In this marvelous attack upon an insidious denial that Jesus Christ came in the flesh there was a real reason to affirm that “God is light” and “God is love.” These are not different things at all. They are the same. This becomes apparent to the perceptive student.

The Docetic theory that Jesus never had a human physical body of any kind, that the Word of life could not have become incarnate, had no appeal to John. He knew better and he knew upon the best evidence in the world. If a body is composed of flesh and blood and bones, it is capable of being apprehended by the senses. Its presence and substance can be verified by the organs of sight, hearing and touch.

John was one of the chosen witnesses. He was present with Jesus from His baptism at the hands of John until He was received up into glory. He did not just hear about Jesus, he heard Jesus! Jesus spoke with human tongue. He employed human words. John saw Jesus. He makes it clear that those who saw Him did so with their eyes. It was not a dream or vision. It was not a phantasy. Cerinthus denied that men could see the divine Christ with the physical eye. John declares that he and others did that very thing.

He looked upon Jesus. This is more than merely seeing a person or thing. One could do that with a passing glance and it might be argued that his eyes deceived him in establishing identity. But this word means to gaze or scrutinize. William Barclay says, "The idea is not that of a passing glance, and a quick look, but of a steadfast searching gaze, which seeks to discover something of the meaning of the mystery of Christ." It was the term which would be used to describe the action of a researchist or laboratory technician who sought to understand the object of his examination.

John said the witnesses had handled Jesus, that is, had touched him and felt His flesh. It was Luke, a physician who examined the eyewitnesses, who recorded that Jesus said after His resurrection from the dead, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have" (Luke 24:39). Under ordinary circumstances, the testimony of eye and ear would have been the highest form of witness, but for John's purpose the sense of touch was most important. He knew Jesus was truly man!

John did not rely upon visionary or hallucinatory evidence. He had auditory, visual, perceptive and manual proof of the reality which was affirmed. The term "Word of life" as used by John is so charged with significance that I find myself enthralled with it. To understand why I am so moved you will need to know that about the time Jesus was born, Philo, a brilliant Jew, was also born in Alexandria. He became a great student of Greek philosophy, especially that of Pythagoras and Plato, while holding to the divinity of the Jewish law as the basis and test of all true philosophy.

In trying to bridge the gap between the Jewish and Greek concepts, Philo taught that God was a Being without attributes, so exalted above the world that an intermediate class of beings was essential even to establish a point of contact. These beings were ideas emanating from the infinite one, and the ideas were active powers employed as messengers. Philo said they were the beings called demons by the Greeks, and angels by Moses. These intermediate powers he called the Logos, and man was a creation of the Logos.

It was Philo, at the very height of his popularity at the time Jesus summoned John to leave his nets, who had given such impetus to Gnosticism which the German writer Graul called “the gigantic serpent which lurked by the cradle of the infant church.” The Logos, said Philo, was one of the aeons, far enough removed from God that He could create a material world. To the Docetics He was an idea, a pneuma, incorporeal and spiritual. John’s first sentence ripped the speculation to shreds. The Logos was not an emanation or reflection. He was in the beginning. He was not given life or being. He was the Logos of life, and had been made flesh. He could be heard, seen, examined and felt. Anyone who denied this was a liar. “Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ?” (1 John 2:22).

ETERNAL LIFE

2. For the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father and was manifested unto us.

The word manifested is used twice in this verse. The original is used nine times in this short letter. That it was important to John in conveying his message can hardly be questioned. The verb is phaneroo, and phan means to shine. Thus the word means to make visible or clear. W. E. Vine says the true meaning is to uncover, to lay bare, to reveal. The life was exposed to sight. It was made visible. It was subject to examination.

But life as a quality, or essence, cannot be seen. No one has ever seen a soul as a vitalizing principle. We see life only as it is embodied. For life to be manifested it must be incarnated. No one knew better than the Gnostics what John was saying. They also knew that if John's little children, as the saints are called in these epistles, believed the aged witness, the days of speculative philosophy were numbered. They would be "weighed in the balances and found wanting."

The life that was manifested was eternal life. Eternal life is the life of God. It is the abundant life, the divine life. It is as unending and undying as God is. The fact that it was manifested in such a manner as to be susceptible to the senses is proof that eternal life can dwell in men of flesh upon earth. It is a relationship with the divine and one who has the Son dwelling in him has eternal life.

God gave a record of His Son, and he who believes on the Son has that witness in himself. "And this is the record, that God has given to us eternal life, and this life in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life" (1 John 5:11, 12). One reason John wrote his letters was to assure the saints that they have eternal life because they have the Son. "These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life."

I have eternal life. I have the witness in myself. I praise God that I know the life in the Son. It is because of this I live in the hope of the glory of God. I'm standing on the promises, not just sitting on the premises. John experienced the manifested life. He saw it in bodily form. He testified to it. He demonstrated or showed it. I accept without quibble that eternal life was manifested in the body of Jesus. I do not doubt that it is present in my fleshly frame. I believe implicitly what John wrote.

FELLOWSHIP OF LIFE

3, 4. That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full.

John states two reasons why he wrote about the personal experiences of the apostles with the incarnate Word of life. He declared these things to enable his readers to share in the fellowship with the eyewitnesses, who shared in the fellowship with the Father and the Son. He wrote the letter so that the joy of the saints would be complete and fulfilled. Fellowship is from koinonia, a word which means “to share a common life.” It is so rendered in the New English Version.

The common life we share is eternal life, the life of God. When the Word of life was manifested He made it possible for us to share in the divine life. This is the fellowship into which we are called by the Father (1 Corinthians 1:9). We enter that fellowship by accepting the apostolic testimony that Jesus came in the flesh. It was what John saw and heard about the manifested life in the Living Word which was declared that we might have fellowship.

This immediately places fellowship on an exalted plane. If God and Christ have fellowship with men in the flesh, in their humanity, that fellowship cannot be based upon equality in understanding or knowledge. It cannot be founded on absolute conformity of the participants. If God does not condition His fellowship with us upon such criteria, we dare not set up such conditions for our relationship with the saints. The only way God can be in the fellowship with us is by being merciful, tolerant and longsuffering. Thus, the fellowship revealed in the scriptures is one which demands such characteristics.

This fellowship is not something to be extended or withdrawn by men. No man can bestow upon you a share in eternal life. No group of men can take away your share in eternal life. Men cannot touch your fellowship with God and Christ. They can put you out of their synagogues. They can persecute you, revile you and say all manner of evil against you. But if you accept the testimony of the apostles concerning the manifested life, and have pledged your allegiance to the Lord of that life, men cannot touch your relationship to God. They can kill your body, and even think that in so doing, they render a sacrifice to God, but you are beyond their power to harm in regard to the fellowship of life.

Any fellowship which does not involve the common sharing of eternal life is too mundane and trivial to be concerned about. It is merely a participation in organizational or institutional association. It is like being a member of a country club. If you attend and keep your dues paid and do not question the policy of the board of directors you are regarded as “a member in good standing.” It is like being a member of a fraternity where you can be blackballed if you do not conform to the rules imposed by the controlling clique.

Do not misunderstand me. Organizations of men have a right to draw up rules and regulations to impose upon their adherents. They can decide how many meetings you must attend in order to be recognized. They can decide upon structures which you must help to build and maintain, and they can assess you, or hound you for the financial means by which to secure the status quo. They can also throw you out of the organization on charges they have trumped up when you start questioning the “powers that be” which were not ordained of God.

So-called “church fellowship” is generally of this nature. It has no real relationship to the fellowship of the Spirit. It is of the earth earthy, as are those who created it. There is a great difference between sharing in “church life” and sharing in eternal life. There are as many different kinds of “church life” as there are “churches” and you could get dizzy trying to share in all of them. Anything that men extend or withdraw is not too important. To cut one off from an organization does not particularly harm him. It may free him to serve Jesus, to think, speak and act upon a higher plane. Obviously, if one is in the fellowship of God and Christ, he will recognize his relationship to all others who are in that glorious fellowship. He will receive them all, every one of them, as God and Christ received him. That is real fellowship!

It is recognition of our sharing in eternal life through the enfleshed Word which brings joy in its fulness. Pause just for a moment, and let the thought of what it means to share in the actual life of God, seep into the moral fibers of your being. Unfortunately, we tend to confuse joy with pleasure or happiness, to which it may be related. But one's relatives are not himself, even though of the same stock. Joy is from the Greek chara, but our English term pleasure is from the Latin jocundus. Pleasure is produced from any or every object, and may be the result of gratification of our senses. But joy is derived from exercise of the affections. It is a vivid and more lasting sensation in the soul. It is contemplation of our sharing in eternal life which fulfills our capacity for joy. When the Spirit pours out the love of God in our hearts, and the never-disappointing hope floods our inner being we experience a degree of joy which no circumstance, not even death, can dim. This is the fruit of the fellowship which is sharing the common life of the divine.

LIGHT AND DARKNESS

5, 6, 7. This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth, but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

At the very outset, let it be noted that John is not talking about the basis upon which we, as human beings, have fellowship with one another. His theme is the foundation of our mutual fellowship with the Father. If you will read this carefully you will see that the expression “we have fellowship one with another” refers to God and ourselves sustaining fellowship with each other on the basis of our walking in the light to the degree that He is light. That we will have fellowship with others who walk in the light is a foregone conclusion, but it is not the subject of this section of the letter.

John gathers up the revelation of the Word who was made flesh in one grand statement. “The message we have heard of him,” does not mean the message about Christ, but the message which Christ announced or proclaimed. That message was that “God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.” Light can be a symbol of many things. But whatever it represents, darkness is the opposite of that thing or quality. If light represents knowledge, darkness represents ignorance. If light represents moral purity, darkness represents impurity. If light represents prosperity, darkness represents adversity. If light represents happiness, darkness represents unhappiness or despair.

It is especially important that we ascertain what John means by light, because we must walk in that quality to the same degree that God possesses it. It is upon that condition that we have fellowship with God and receive continual cleansing by the blood of His Son. “God is light and in him is no darkness at all. If we walk in the light as he is in the light . . .” If light is knowledge we must know as much of God. We cannot be ignorant of anything. If light represents moral purity we must be as pure as God. There must be in us no impurity of thought, speech or deed. If light represents happiness we must be as free from distress or despair as is God.

All of these may be ideals toward which we should strive, but if they represent the light which God is, we must attain them perfectly in order to share the common life with him. I doubt that a single one of my readers would affirm he has reached such a state. Certainly Paul testified he had not done so. “Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect, but I follow after” (Philippians 3:12).

The fact is there is only one thing in which we are to be as perfect as God. That thing is love. “Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment, because as he is, so are we in this world” (1 John 4:17). When Jesus said, “Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect” He was talking about love. He was urging His disciples on to unlimited and unrestricted love “that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven” (Matthew 5:43-48).

Now it is my conviction that light is love in the context of John’s letter. Let me tell you why I hold this view. John writes, “Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment which you had from the beginning. The old commandment is the word which ye heard from the beginning” (2:7). What was the message heard from the beginning? Listen! “For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that you should love one another” (3:11). The command to love one’s neighbor or brother was not a new one at all. It had been taught before Jesus came. He pointed this out. “You have heard it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy.”

But John goes on immediately in the very next sentence. “Again, a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you, because the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth” (2:8). Jesus is the true light and Jesus was love incarnate as we shall soon see. The old commandment included hate for your enemy, but with the coming of the true light hate and hostility toward those who were enemies was abrogated by the death of Jesus. “But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us . . . for if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life” (Romans 5:8, 10).

This is what the love that is light and life is all about. “Herein is love, not that we love God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins” (1 John 4:9). The new commandment is true in both God and ourselves. Jesus makes this abundantly clear in Matthew 5:44, 45. And John says in this letter, “Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another” (4:11). Something happened when Jesus came that added a whole new dimension to love, and wrote a new commandment. The darkness of hate was gone. The light of love now shone. But does John identify love of the brethren with life? Does he equate hatred of the brethren with darkness? Hear him!

“He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him.” Love for a brother is abiding in the light! If light is love, darkness must be hate. Now read this. “But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes.” Nothing so blinds one as a heart filled with hatred. “He that loveth not his brother abideth in death. Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer” (3:14, 15). “He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother is in darkness even until now” (2:9).

God is light (1 John 1:5). God is love (1 John 4:8, 16). “If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth.” That is, “if we say we share a common life with him, and hate our brother, we lie.” “If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar” (4:20). 1 John 1:6 mentions walking in darkness. 1 John 2:12 identifies walking in darkness in the context of this letter as hating a brother.

Walking in the light as God is in the light is loving as God loves. If we do this God and ourselves have fellowship with one another. I share a common life with God if I love as He loves. Everyone who loves like this is born of God and knows God (4:7). “If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us” (4:12). “God is love, and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him” (4:16).

When we share in this common life of love, the wonderful blood of Jesus Christ His Son goes on cleansing us from all sin. To share the life of love does not mean we are sinless. We are in the flesh. We are still caught up in the human predicament. Our faith is in the clouds but our feet are in the clay. If we say we have no sin we deceive ourselves. The truth is not in us. Sinlessness is not a condition of fellowship. If it were there would be no fellowship this side of heaven.

Recognition of sin, admission of it when we realize it, and confession of it, will always be a necessary part of our earthly plight. But God is faithful. He is just to forgive us our sins. Eternal life is not granted to the sinless but to those who are in the sinless One. It is not accorded because we are in the flesh but because we are in Christ. “And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us understanding, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life” (1 John 5:20). I know Him! I am in Him! And I know that I have crossed the frontier from death unto life because I love the brethren (1 John 5:14). Praise His wonderful name!

This is the secret of fellowship! It is the intimate, abiding relationship with my Father, the sharing of eternal life, which makes my cup run over with gladness. My joy is full! My hope is real! Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord! Heaven came down and glory filled my soul! The darkness is past! I am no longer groping my way along. The true light now shines! God dwells in me and I dwell in Him! He is my everything! He is my all! That is the fellowship of eternal life. That is the fellowship which I know and experience. And no one will ever take it from me.

THE PURPOSE OF JOHN

Why did John write this letter? Why did he fill it with admonitions to walk as the Word of life walked? Why did he lay such stress upon eternal life? Why did he literally fill the letter with the need of love for the brethren?

The answer is plain. This was John's prescription to the saints to enable them to stand against a foe which threatened the very foundation of the temple of faith. "These things have I written unto you concerning them that seduce you" (2:26). The word seduce is from a term which means to lead astray. In this case it means to entice men to renounce a belief in the incarnation of the Word and to leave the faith that finds reality in the person of Jesus.

These wandering Gnostic teachers were false prophets (4:1), antichrists (2:18), and liars (2:22). They were deceivers (3:7), were of the world (4:5), and motivated by the very spirit of error (4:6). Nothing is more important when the very life of the body is threatened than for the brethren to love one another. When danger from without is imminent the flock should huddle closer together. To become scattered is to invite disaster, to become divided can only mean death. It is a time to allow that which was heard from the beginning to abide within (2:24). It is a time to remember that "this is his commandment. That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another as he gave commandment" (3:23).

A recognition of the true nature of the fellowship is essential in time of crisis. Satan uses such circumstances to divide and conquer. If he can get the brethren to hating one another, or to act as if they do, he can use them against each other. The devil does not care who does his work, although it is more effectively done for him by professed followers of Jesus than by those who are not. In view of this I want to direct attention to one of the most abused passages in the new covenant scriptures. I refer to 2 John 9, 10. "If any one comes to you and does not bring this doctrine, do not receive him into the house or give him any greeting; for he who greets him shares his wicked work" (Revised Standard Version).

This was addressed to a lady and her children whom the aged John loved in the truth. It is probable that a congregation of saints met in her house. John rejoiced that he found some of her children walking in the truth. He begged her to remember the commandment they had from the beginning, "that we love one another." He said, "This is love, that we follow his commandments; this is the commandment, as you have heard from the beginning, that you follow love."

The apostle warns that "many deceivers have gone out into the world, men who will not acknowledge the coming of Jesus Christ in the flesh; such a one is the deceiver and the antichrist." Then occurs this statement: "Any one who goes ahead and does not abide in the doctrine of Christ does not have God; he who abides in the doctrine has both the Father and the Son." The doctrine of Christ as here defined is that which one must hold in order to have God. It is that which makes possible the maintenance of the relationship with both the Father and the Son. The expression "One who goes ahead and does not abide in the doctrine of Christ" is a perfect description of a Gnostic teacher. It describes Cerinthus, the Ephesian leader of Gnosticism with exactitude.

The Gnostic claimed a special wisdom to which those who depended upon a mere understanding of revelation could never attain. He went above and beyond what was said by God and reveled in a superior knowledge reserved for one who was an initiate into the Mysteries. E. De Pressence in The Early Years of Christianity writes, "Thus we see that by its exclusively intellectual tendency, gnosticism abandons the noble banner of Christian spirituality, and returns to the dualism which was the curse of the ancient world. We shall observe how faithful it was to its principle, and with what treacherous art it revived the old errors which had brought to ruin the most brilliant civilization of the world. From this primary and purely speculative character, there resulted the haughty esoterism which reconstituted the aristocracy of intellect, and placed its barrier in the way of the young and simple-hearted.”

Cooper, in his book on the Free Church of Ancient Christendom calls Gnosticism, “that yeasty product, thrown up by the working of the gospel leaven upon the dead mass of heathenism, which it was evermore powerfully striving to penetrate and quicken.” What is the doctrine of Christ in which one must abide to have God, and to have both the Father and the Son? John writes, “By this you know the Spirit of God: every spirit which confesses that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh is of God, and every spirit which does not confess Jesus is not of God” (1 John 4:2, 3). Again he writes, “No one who denies the Son has the Father. He who confesses the Son has the Father” (1 John 2:23).

This doctrine about which John writes is the teaching that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh. Denial of that great primal and foundational truth severed one from God. It made him the deceiver and the antichrist. But we have been subjected in our generation, twenty centuries this side of John, to a new brand of more childish, eccentric and extravagant brand of gnosticism, claiming special wisdom which goes above and beyond what is written, and finds grounds for separating and dividing saints over every conceivable opinion and deduction which deviates from factional creeds and partisan orthodoxy.

Does a party exist to oppose individual cups as an anti-scriptural innovation? “If any man come and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into the house.” Does the party exist to oppose classes in which to study God’s revelation? “If any man come and bring not this doctrine, receive him not.” Does the party exist to oppose the current method of supporting the Herald of Truth program? “If any man come and bring not this doctrine, receive him not.” Does the party exist to oppose singing praises to God, accompanied by musical instruments? “If any man come and bring not this doctrine, receive him not.”

My brethren, this is Church of Christism at its worst! It is the sectarian spirit gone to seed. To take an apostolic warning written to debar one who denied that the Word became incarnate, that Jesus Christ came in the flesh and was the Son of God, and apply it to an honest opinion held by one who confesses that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and the Lord of glory is almost as wild as you can become in the reckless and profligate mishandling of the apostolic teaching. To even suggest that a sincere opinion about cups, classes, colleges, music, money or the millennium, constitutes the kind of evil deeds in which John forbids participation is the height of absurdity.

And yet, I used to do this very thing! It seems incredible that I was ever so brainwashed by our partisan traditions that I would allow myself to be used and manipulated to arrogantly affront God’s other children. In our intense fanaticism for the party position, if one came who disagreed with our unwritten creeds about colleges and other things, we glibly quoted, “If any come and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into the house.” With this quotation we washed our hands of him and consigned him to hell. I was wrong, sinfully wrong. Any attitude which has to be maintained and justified by such reckless abuse of the scripture can never be right. To quote a passage referring to one who denied the Lord and use it to denounce a precious child of God who loves Jesus as much as you love Him is a blatant insult to God who received him and cherishes him as His own.

One is not a deceiver because he sees no harm in using individual cups at the table of the Lord. One is not a liar who sees no sin in having Bible classes. One is not an antichrist because he sends a contribution to Highland congregation in Abilene, Texas, to support Herald of Truth. One is not an apostate who believes he can praise God in song accompanied by musical instruments. Whether these things are right or wrong, those who claim that such children of the Father are deceivers, liars, antichrists and apostates, only reveal their own ignorance and become false accusers of their brethren. I abjectly apologize for my own former littleness and bigotry which tried to un-Christianize some of the finest people on this earth. I am ashamed of my one-time arrogance which was a clear proof of the party spirit, the spirit of sectarianism!

Our brethren have always been better than their creeds. The passage does not say, "If any man come and bring not this doctrine, receive him not." It says to receive him not into the house! I have never yet known one of the brethren to stand in the door of the meetinghouse and turn away one who could not see the harm in individual cups, Bible classes, support of Herald of Truth, or instrumental music. They receive such into the house and run half way across the auditorium to hand them a songbook so they can join in the praise of God. They give them a greeting when they come and when they leave.

I challenge those who quote this passage as the basis for their boorish attitude toward others to bar entrance to those whom they claim do not bring this doctrine! Until they do they are not obeying the command of John. I do not believe they have the courage to carry out the implications of their own interpretation and application of this passage. They will have to squirm and twist and make "into the house" have some kind of spiritual or mystical interpretation. This is the policy of all legalistic minds! If the book plainly says receive him not into the house, what about those who come and bring not this doctrine? In our mixed-up mess and messed-up mix the brethren will have to "withdraw from themselves" to be consistent with their deductions. All of this illustrates what happens to a people caught up in the bonds of exclusivism!

I have never read a sterner indictment of my former factional position than the one written by Frederic W. Farrar in The Early Days of Christianity. Farrar was a Fellow of Trinity College at Cambridge, Canon of Westminster, and Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen. His book was published in 1874. In dealing with 2 John 9, 10, he writes:

There is something distressing in the swift instinct with which an unchristian egotism has first assumed its own infallibility on subjects which are often no part of Christian faith, and then has spread on vulture's wings to this passage as a consecration of the feelings with which the odium theologicum disgraces and ruins the Divinest interests of the cause of Christ. It must be said— though I say it with the deepest sorrow— that the cold exclusiveness of the Pharisee, the bitter ignorance of the self-styled theologian, the usurped infallibility of the half-educated religionist, have ever been the curse of Christianity. They have imposed 'the senses of men upon the words of God, the special senses of men on the general words of God,' and have tried to enforce them on all men's consciences with all kinds of burnings and anathemas, under equal threats of death and damnation. And thus they have incurred the terrible responsibility of presenting religion to mankind in a false and repellent guise. Is theological hatred still to be a proverb for the world's just contempt? Is such hatred— hatred in its bitterest and most ruthless form— to be regarded as the legitimate and normal outcome of the religion of love? Is the spirit of peace never to be brought to bear on religious opinions? Are such questions always to excite the most intense animosities and the most terrible divisions? Is the Diotrophes of each little religious clique to be the ideal of a Christian character? Is it in religious discussions alone that impartiality is to be set down as weakness and courtesy as treason? Is it among those only who pride themselves on being 'orthodox' that there is to be the completest absence of humility and justice? Is the world to be forever confirmed in its opinion that theological partisans are less truthful, less candid, less high-minded, less honorable even than the partisans of political and social causes who make no profession of love? Are the so-called 'religious' champions to be for ever, as they now are, in many instances, the most unscrupulously bitter and the most conspicuously unfair? Alas! they might be so with far less danger to the cause of religion if they would forego the luxury of 'quoting Scripture for their purpose.'

This is but the first paragraph of several pages in which the eminent author expresses himself. He writes: "But there is too much reason to fear that to the end of time the conceit of orthodoxism will claim inspired authority for its own conclusions, even when they are most antichristian, and will build up systems of exclusive hatred out of inferences purely unwarrantable. It is certain, too, that each sect is always tempted to be proudest of its most sectarian peculiarities; that each form of dissent, whether in or out of the body of the Established Churches, most idolizes its own dissidence. The aim of religious opinionativeness always has been, and always will be, to regard its narrowest conclusions as matters of faith, and to exclude or excommunicate all those who reject or modify them."

The time has come for me to repeat again what I have often said before. I believe that the doctrine of which John writes is that Jesus Christ came in the flesh and that He was the incarnate Son of God. I believe this because of John's own statement in the brief letter written a faithful sister. It is established contextually and historically. One who came and brought not this doctrine was to be refused access to the house and turned away without a greeting.

But I receive all who receive Christ and all whom Christ has received. I receive them on the same basis that Christ receives them. Wherever my Father has a child I have a brother or sister. If one is in Christ, I receive him and welcome him. And

I receive him regardless of his opinion about cups, classes, colleges, music or the millennium. We are not one in opinion and we never will be. We are one in Christ, and I make nothing a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation. We are not one because we are in agreement but because we are in Christ Jesus!

I am thrilled to be counted worthy to share in the common life which was made manifest. Eternal life! That is what fellowship is all about and I am in that glorious and majestic fellowship with every person who has “set to his seal that God is true.” What a blessing to know that one has fulness of joy, that he is “filled with the fulness of God.” What a thrill to have the hope that never disappoints because the love of God is poured out in our hearts by the Holy Spirit who is given unto us! Praise God from whom all blessings flow!

The Legal Tangle

Mission Messenger (April 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

Any person who writes as I plan to write in this article is going to be brought under journalistic attack by his brethren. They will call in the big guns and zoom in on him and try to blast him out of the restoration movement skies. It may appear to some of you that I am acting foolhardy, like a farmhand hitting a hornet's nest with a hoe handle. You could be right. But I have some ideas which I believe need to be expressed. I will say them and take the consequences. I do not expect others to state what I am too cowardly to say myself. Really, what happens to an individual on this earth is not too important. What happens to truth is very important!

I do not think I have a martyr complex. I hope I do not have. I know a brother who does and he never intends to have a happy day or allow anyone else to do so. He feels that fate has conspired against him and he shows it in every lineament of his drawn features. Every time you see him he looks as if he is just coming down with a severe attack of "the uglies" and gives the impression of an accident going somewhere to happen. Even if he meets you on the street he will buttonhole you and entertain you with a list of the latest disasters, if you do not see him coming and duck into the nearest Woolworth Store. I do not want to be like that.

It doesn't "bug" me that some of my brethren oppose my position. It would disturb me if they did not. When they write me up I know that I must be writing pretty clearly. If they ever start commending me I will re-examine what I am saying and try to discover my error. I will know that I am wrong somewhere. I am not too thin-skinned and I do not think I am being burned at the stake merely because someone holds my feet to the fire. The only way to truly avoid criticism is to say nothing, do nothing and be nothing! It is too great a price to pay!

I am dedicated to the task of pleading for oneness in Christ. I think it will be very difficult to express for the simple reason that most people want you to be one in something else. A lot of them want everyone to be institutionally one, and they want it to be in their institution. This is especially true of groups which exist on a legalistic basis. Before you go off half-cocked let me tell you that when I use the term “legalistic” I am not speaking derogatorily of adhering to the commands of our Lord. I intend to keep them as meticulously as I know how. That is the only way I can overtly demonstrate to others that I love Him.

A legalist is one who thinks that we are under a written code and relate to God because of our subservience to it. To such a one, a righteous person is one who lives up to the law, and who both attains and sustains righteousness on that condition. I do not believe that. We are not under law but under grace. No flesh can ever be justified by law-keeping and one might as well seek to reach heaven by a Hindu rope trick as to attempt it. Justification is by divine declaration. It is upon the basis of faith in the Son of God. You can no more earn it or work it out for yourself than you could dip the ocean dry with a stainless steel teaspoon.

For fifteen hundred years God sought to keep His people together by a written code. He put them under bondage to law and shut them up under it so He could deliver them to Christ. Then He made a new covenant. It was not like the former one which was made at Sinai, or Horeb. “The law came by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.” Many people would change this to read, “The law came by Moses, and another one came by Jesus Christ.” Unwilling, or unable to trust in grace, and anxious to prove their own righteousness, they think that Jesus nailed one written code to the cross and handed another one down. That is not true. God did not send another law. He sent grace and truth.

Law is a principle of action. The principle which governs us is called “the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus.” That is our law, our rule of existence. That is why we are not under condemnation. If we were still under a written code and seeking to be justified by it we would be under condemnation and our state would be hopeless. We would be of all men most miserable. But we are not under law, we are in Christ. “There is therefore now no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus has set us free from the law of sin and death” (Romans 8:2). We have not simply swapped legal masters. We have been set free!

A great many casual readers, frightened and insecure because we are no longer under a written code, attempt to forge the love letters constituting the so-called new covenant scriptures into such a code. They ask me, “What is the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus?” Because the word law occurs here they think it consists of the compilation of the biographies of Jesus, the account written to a Greek city-state official by Luke, the twenty-one letters and the apocalyptic account by John. But these letters had not been written and even after they were it took more than a century before they were collected, collated and compiled. The primitive saints had no law-book. They had Jesus. Their law was what Paul said it was, “the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus.” That’s my law, also!

The written code was weak through the flesh. Every written code, without exception, is weak for the same reason.

God did not send another law. He sent His Son. “For what the law could not do, being weak in the flesh, God sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh.” Under law man was condemned. In Christ sin is condemned. I do not avoid sin simply because it is forbidden by law. I hate it because Jesus condemned it, and he did so in the flesh. Sin killed the dearest friend I ever had. It was my sin that did it, not his. He died to redeem me and I am in Him. He bore my own sin in His body on the tree. You do not need to pass a law condemning sin. I deplore it, hate it, and detest it. I am not dead in sin, I am dead to it. There is no life in law. “For if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law” (Galatians 3:21). “The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made me free from the law of sin and death.” I am off the treadmill.

Anyone who seeks to convert the new covenant scriptures into a written code by which a man must be justified makes them simply another law of sin and death. Written Code Number Two can no more produce life or righteousness than Written Code Number One. In that beautiful treatise on the difference between the old and new covenant, contained in 2 Corinthians 3, Paul points out that we are the real letter from Christ. The apostles were the penmen and divine postmen. That letter is not written with ink, but with the Spirit of the loving God. It is not inscribed on tablets of stone but on tablets of human hearts. He says, “Our sufficiency is from God, who has qualified us to be ministers of a new covenant, not in a written code but in the Spirit; for the written code kills, but the Spirit gives life.” I believe that with all my heart. And it is in my heart the new covenant is written.

It shouldn't take a lot of profound reading to determine that the apostolic letters were never intended to be an enactment of corpus juris. A little plain, old-fashioned, down-home common sense is all that is requisite. Take, for example, the letter to Philemon. Certainly it is not a compilation of statutes. It was written by an inmate of a Roman prison, and addressed to a brother in Christ, with his wife and son. Their slave, whose name was Onesimus, “went over the hill” and hitchhiked to Rome where he was picked up by the local police and clapped into jail.

Here he was led to Christ by the prisoner, whose name was Paul, and he was persuaded to return to his master. To make it easier for him, Paul sent along this letter in which he promised personally to pay off any debts which the slave owed. He also made a request. “Prepare a guest room for me, for I am hoping through your prayers to be granted unto you.” You might as well incorporate a personal promissory note or a request for a room reservation at the Ramada Inn in the State Constitution as to try and make this part of a written code of legality.

The letters to Timothy are no exception. They are personal and not statutory. They were written by an aged campaigner to a younger son in the faith. They mention the mother and grandmother of the younger man by name. They tell what happened to a group of associates who “flaked off” and went to different places. They request Timothy to pick up a topcoat which was left hanging in the closet at the home of a man named Carpus, and bring along some books, but especially writing materials. What would you do if you were reading the Statutes of the State of California and you hit a spot which read, “No longer drink only water, but use a little wine for the sake of your stomach and your frequent ailments”?

Of course, nothing I have said will make the slightest impression on a first-class Grade-A legalist! He is going to be under law if he has to make one up. Regardless of what God says about the new covenant being written on the heart, he must get it down on paper. Even though God declared the new covenant was not written with ink, he is going to get twenty-seven books into the new testament, and bind them in black leather stamped with gold. This must be the law-book, the book of statutes.

That way the preacher can lay down the law. This is much easier to do than to live up to love. He can memorize “the statutes and judgments” and reel them off, and give “book, chapter and verse,” and if he is a clever enough lawyer he can make them apply to things of which the original writers never even dreamed. He will become especially adept at creating precedents out of things not even in the same category as that which he is currently condemning. I know what I am talking about because I constantly hold forums which legalists sneak away and attend. Nothing upsets them more than someone who is really free to love all of his brethren in Christ Jesus. Any man in bondage has it in for one who is free. You can tell how freedom “bugs” them by the questions they ask. I’ll cite a few of them to show you what I mean.

If the new testament scriptures are not the new covenant, why do you quote from them to validate your position and refer to them as authority for what you say?

The answer to that one is simple. These scriptures were written by people who were in the covenant. They were in it long before a word of the new covenant scriptures was written with ink. Every apostolic letter was written to people already in the covenantal relationship. The covenant is actually Jesus. It is not a code, but the Christ. The covenant is a person, not a precept. God said, “I have given you as a covenant to the people, a light to the nations, to open the eyes of them that are blind, to bring out the prisoners from the dungeon, from the dungeon those who sit in darkness” (Isaiah 42:6, 7).

The apostolic letters were written under the guidance of the Spirit. They reveal to us the nature of the covenant. I regard them as the sharing of the thoughts of God. The scriptures are for instruction, edification, correction and reproof. They reveal to us how Jesus would have reacted to certain situations which arose, and how He would have responded to circumstances. But they are no more the divine-human covenant than a marriage manual is the marriage covenant. People can be married who cannot read a word in a marriage manual, and they can be married to Christ and not be able to read a word in the new covenant scriptures. My paternal grandparents could not even read their own marriage license, and my grandfather had to make an “X” where his name was written in by another, but they had a wonderful life together. They knew what a covenant was even though they could not read the marriage license.

It is from the scriptures I have learned that the new covenant is written on the heart by the Spirit. It is from the scriptures I have learned that we are not under law but under grace. It is from the scriptures that I have learned that Christ is the end of the law for justification to everyone who believes. It is from the scriptures I have learned that the law was a custodian to bring us unto Christ, and once faith came we were no longer under a custodian. I happen to believe every one of these things. These statements are valid to me. I do not employ casuistry to turn them into a written code and thus seek to circumvent them. I must confess that I once thought the new covenant scriptures were given as God’s law. His written code, to our particular segment of the Church of Christ. As good lawyers, we warped them into a compilation of Church of Christism exactly as the Jews created Judaism as an admixture of the Torah, their interpretations and traditions all whipped up together.

I do not derogate the scriptures now that I refuse to make them something God never intended for them to be. No one frustrates the grace of God by placing His revelation in its proper perspective. The problem is that we still have too many Pharisees who think they have eternal life in the scriptures and they can attain it by memorization of whole sections of it, or by making a passing grade in law-keeping. Jesus said, “You search the scriptures, because you think you have eternal life in them, but they are given to testify of me, and you will not come unto me that you might have life.”

It was not wrong to search the scriptures. It is right to do that. The wrong lay in the false concept that you could find eternal life in them. The scriptures became a substitute for the Messiah, and the Jews were so involved in “Bible study” they did not come to Jesus. The faith is not Jesus pointing us to a book, but the Book pointing us to Jesus. We can end up worshiping the book instead of the Lord. That would be like a girl so entranced by the love letters of her sweetheart that she couldn’t stop reading them long enough to marry him. I respect the love letters of the apostles but I certainly do not regard them as conferring life through my reading and understanding. Life is in the Son!

If we are obligated to obey the commands of Christ what difference does it make whether we regard them as a written code of laws or not?

It makes a great deal of difference. I will mention some of the differences in four different areas. (1) Every constitutional law requires an authoritative interpreter. When the interpretation is rendered by such a supreme judiciary it is that interpretation which becomes the law. The Roman Catholic Church is a legalistic institution and it eventually developed a papal system, investing a man with infallibility in order to have an enforceable code of laws to which all must be subservient. Regardless of what the Spirit meant by what was revealed the interpretation of the pope became the dogma.

The United States of America has a Supreme Court and the decision of this judicial body becomes the law of the land whether the citizenry likes it or not. The Churches of Christ have developed into a legalistic organization postulating the hope of salvation upon law-keeping rather than upon relationship to God through Christ by simple trusting faith. Since these churches claim to be autonomous, each congregation makes its elders a board of official interpreters who determine what “the law” means. From this decision no appeal may be made. Generally, a dissident or dissenter has no opportunity to even present his case before his spiritual peers. The elders are the plaintiff, prosecutor, bailiff and judge rolled into one. The individual is charged and must either subscribe to the ruling of the elders or he is thrust out!

The same spirit manifested by the pope on a universal level is characteristic of such elderships on a local level. The difference is one of degree and not of nature. But the fact is that we are not under a legalistic system at all and such tyranny has been drummed up to perpetuate The System. The letters of love were addressed to all of the saints. Each one is free and even obligated to read them for himself. The only court of decision is the individual conscience. There is no authorized interpretation. God has arranged for no official interpreters since grace requires none. No man can bind his understanding upon another person in Christ Jesus. He can state his opinion and share his conviction but he cannot make a dogma out of it. What one man cannot do a body of men cannot do. Each man must stand or fall to his own master!

Let me be specific about this, so you will not misunderstand what I say! Elders cannot interpret the meaning of the Word of God for others and make the meaning they derive a creed by which to coerce others. The right of private judgment in reading the word of God must never be abridged by any man or set of men. No one can mediate between you and the Father except the one mediator, the man Christ Jesus. It was John Locke who wrote: "It becomes all men to maintain peace and the common offices of friendship in a diversity of opinions, since we cannot reasonably expect that anyone should readily and obsequiously quit his own opinion and embrace ours with a blind resignation to an authority which the understanding of man acknowledges not."

(2) All laws must have an enforcement agency, and such agency must be empowered to command obedience to the law or assess a proper penalty for infraction or non-compliance. In order to force such obedience the Roman Catholic legalistic system invented purgatory and made the priests and hierarchy official enforcers with power to pardon and to punish.

The Churches of Christ, which also predicate life upon conformity to statutes, seek to impose enforcement by threat of excommunication on earth and torment after death. Fellowship is manipulative by men who can, through interpretation, decide upon the terms of its extension or withdrawal. As a legalistic institution the “Church of Christ” currently resembles a police state more than the prophetic kingdom of heaven. It employs police state methods in some places, with informers, spies, tape-recordings, intelligence agencies, and any other means for securing information, against one whom it considers to be detrimental to the continuance of the organization. It uses “carnal weapons” and reacts as a “kingdom of this world.”

This should not be thought of as strange. It is an inborn characteristic of legalistic establishments. One should expect elders and preachers to react as a Federal Bureau of Investigation, gunning down those whom they regard as subversives and keeping a tight control on the thought-processes. That all of this is utterly foreign to God’s design can be ascertained by those who read the scriptures without partisan bias. Few will do this, however, because to think for oneself is regarded as traitorous in any organization built upon a closed-in view of scriptural interpretation.

I am thinking now of a former elder in a congregation in a northern state. As he began to read this paper a few years ago he became convinced that what was being said made sense. He started gradually making suggestions about fellowship based upon faith and not conformity of opinion. The other elders served notice upon him that this type of thing would not be tolerated. Although he was as much an elder as they were, it became apparent that he would have to knuckle under or stand up and fight. Against the pleas of his wife he decided to resist.

The other elders subjected him to the “third degree” and when he admitted that he thought there were Christians in other bodies, they publicly charged him with heresy and announced that unless he repented, on a certain day he would be excluded from the congregation. He respectfully asked for an opportunity to state his position before the brethren who had chosen him for elder but was denied the privilege. He was “railroaded” out. This kind of action disturbs many people, but it should not. It is the natural reaction of those who are caught up in a web of legalism and who regard themselves as the guardians of orthodoxy and keepers of the gate.

(3) If the new covenant scriptures are regarded as a written code, one who violates them, even unintentionally, is regarded as a lawbreaker, or criminal. The old aphorism “Ignorance of the law excuses no one” will be repeated and made applicable, regardless of circumstances. Since all legalistic institutions must, for their own preservation, resist and punish any criminal element, the concept of penal exaction automatically intrudes itself. The law must be vindicated. The criminal must be punished.

But if we are not under a written code, one who misunderstands, or steps aside is not a criminal. If we are a family consisting of sons and daughters of the Lord almighty, and maintained by the bond of love, one who falls short of the demand of love is not a criminal. He is a mistaken brother, one who has been overtaken in a fault. The remedy is not to “lower the boom on him.” It is not to “throw the Book at him.” If he makes an unspiritual judgment the requirement is clear. “Brethren, if a man is overtaken in any trespass, you who are spiritual should restore him in a spirit of gentleness. Look to yourselves, lest you too be tempted” (Galatians 6:1, 2).

In our legalistic approach there are no honestly mistaken

brethren. There are just two classes— ourselves and false teachers. A false teacher is one who does not agree with us on “the issues” which have been exalted and inflated into divisive standards or criteria for fellowship. The expression pseudo-didaskalos only occurs once in the apostolic letters. It appears many times that often in one paragraph of some modern religious journals edited by men “who trust in themselves that they are righteous and despise others” (Luke 18:9). Peter made use of the term when he wrote, “But false prophets also arose among the people just as there will be false teachers among you, who will secretly bring in destructive heresies, even denying the Master who bought them.” He goes on to speak of their licentiousness, greed, exploitation with false words, and certain condemnation and destruction.

Those who are branded “false teachers” by radio preachers and front men who constitute the “palace guard” of the Churches of Christ are not like that. If a man does not think that instrumental music is as important as a lot of people make it he is a false teacher. If one does not think that the congregation becomes digressive if it has Bible classes he is branded a false teacher. If he refuses to get all lathered up over the support of Herald of Truth radio and television propaganda, and will not denounce Highland congregation in Abilene, Texas, of which he is not even a member, he is a false teacher, a compromiser, a liberal. One wonders just how silly we will get if we keep on drumming up new laws and new creeds with each passing decade.

One may be mistaken about instrumental music, cups, classes, or the millennium without being a false teacher. Not one of us knows all there is to know. As Will Rogers, the Oklahoma humorist put it, “We are all ignorant, but just about different things.” If being mistaken about some scriptural meaning makes one a false teacher, we are all false teachers, and our vociferous brethren are but examples of a lot of pots calling a lot of kettles black.

In view of our own human failings and shortcomings we would probably be better off if we were a little more understanding and tolerant and made allowances for one another as the scriptures teach us to do. Since I have learned we are not under a written code of law but under the demands of grace, I can be a little more gracious and a little less legalistic. I am not disturbed when other saints do not see everything as I do.

I recognize and respect the freedom of others in Christ Jesus. One who is not free to be wrong about some things is really not free to be right in anything. One who is not free to make mistakes is just not free. I cannot take away the freedom of brethren to think for themselves without forfeiting my own right to do the same thing. My brethren are not lawbreakers or criminals just because they do not concur with my opinions about instrumental music or the support of Herald of Truth. I am not one of God's motorcycle policemen whose duty it is to zoom around on a Harley-Davidson and "chew everyone out" and give a ticket to those who do not share my position. I am not a "divine clearinghouse for ideas" but a sinner saved by grace.

Sometimes I am asked, "But how do you regard one who worships where they have instrumental music?" I wish all questions I have to face were that simple and easy. I regard him as a brother in the Lord who worships where they have instrumental music. One does not become my brother because he is opposed to instrumental music, but because he is God's child. He does not cease to be my brother because he endorses instrumental music. We are not born of a position about music but of the water and of the Spirit. Since we are not under law but under grace I shall allow the grace of God to take care of the situation. I am not God's patrolman and I carry no heavenly "billy-club" to batter my brethren into submission to my thinking.

(4) If we are under a written legal code we are doomed to a life of fear, dread and insecurity. We can never be sure that we know all of the law we ought to know, nor that we are living up to what we do know to a saving degree. We can never have the assurance of salvation and hope will be more anxiety than anticipation. It seems incredible to me now, but when I was under a written code, I actually was afraid to say that I was saved. I thought that such conviction was arrogance. The only thing you could be certain about was your uncertainty. To be decisive was to be unfaithful to the Book!

It is an amazing thing that brethren who can be so positive about everything else cannot even tell whether they are saved or not. Characteristic of our casuistry in those days, we would always come up with a pat little slogan. "I know I am safe but no one knows he is saved." We thought you had to wait until the resurrection and judgment and find out whether you had made a passing grade on law-keeping or flunked out in your finals. If there was something you didn't know that you should have known, or something you should have remembered that you forgot, the recording angel would blot your name out of the book of life.

No wonder with that kind of an attitude we were all "recording angels" and blotting out the names of brethren "who did not live up to their responsibility." If they missed three times straight without being able to give a good and sufficient reason, like getting a leg cut off in an automobile accident, we withdrew from them. It never occurred to us that they were fed up with a diet of corn flakes every Sunday morning, served up dry and without the sweetening of love and the milk of human kindness. I am glad all of that is over for me. I think it was good that I waded through it and tried to hang on because now I can appreciate what a blessing it is to be in the everlasting arms.

I know now that I have been made a partaker of the divine nature. I am dead and my life is hid with Christ in God. I "worship God in spirit, and glory in Christ Jesus, and put no confidence in the flesh.” I have been set free from sin and become a slave of righteousness. I am a willing captive, drawn by His immeasurable love and power. “But now we are discharged from the law, dead to that which held us captive, so that we serve not under the old written code but in the new life of the Spirit” (Romans 7:6). The new life of the Spirit is not only contrasted with the old written code but it is contrasted with any other written code, old or new. I am glad that I found that out. Once I thought God wanted me to be a good lawyer, and I studied hard and majored in law. Now I know he wants me to be a great lover, and that’s my major. It is the more excellent way! I know. I have tried them both!

I want to be like Paul. I want to gain Christ. More than anything else in this whole universe that is what I want. I want to “be found in him, not having a righteousness of my own, based on law, but that which is through faith in Christ, the righteousness from God that depends on faith” (Philippians 3:9). Read that again! It is a description of the ground on which I have pitched my tent. There are two approaches to righteousness. You can try to have a righteousness of your own, based on law. It will not work. You do not have what it takes. You can never be good enough by law to make it. You can have the righteousness of God that depends on faith. It will not fail. It is founded not upon what you do for God but upon what He has done for you.

Yes, there is a difference between being guided by the abiding principle of love and being under a written code, a compilation of laws, where you are treated like a child or a slave (Galatians 4:1-3). Never forget that any written code upon which justification is suspended is a law of sin and death. If you convert the new covenant love letters into such a code you doom yourself to die. You build your own scaffold. You knot your own noose. You sharpen your own dagger. If the inheritance is by the law, or by any law except the principle of faith in Christ Jesus, it is no longer by promise!

If the apostolic letters are not intended to be a written code, why were they written at all?

Since they are personal letters and were written to different communities and individuals they were written for different reasons. If you have several married children away from home you do not always write the same things to all of them. Some of what you say applies to all and in that respect one letter is like another. But you deal with each situation as it requires. The same thing holds true with the apostolic letters. They were penned to meet needs, to encourage in times of stress and persecution, or to command actions that were worthy. The circumstances existing determined the purpose of the letters. Our problem is that we hardly think of them as letters. We regard them as so many parts of a book of statutes and we thus destroy the love that should shine through everyone of them.

Paul's first letter to the saints in Corinth was prompted by a report conveyed to the apostle by the family of a Christian woman whose name was Chloe (1:11). He wrote, "I do not write this to make you ashamed, but to admonish you as my beloved children" (4:14). This was his method of dealing with a rather sticky case of division within the group. Another part of his letter was a reply to one addressed to him and carried by Stephanas, Fortunatus and Achaicus. "Now concerning the matters about which you wrote" (7:1).

The letter to Philippi was one of thanks to brethren who had sent to relieve his need in prison. It was intended to reassure them of the recuperation of Epaphroditus who had almost died in bringing their gift to Rome. "I have received full payment, and more; I am filled, having received from Epaphroditus the gifts you sent, a fragrant offering, a sacrifice acceptable and pleasing to God" (4:18).

The first letter to Timothy was to inform him of the way one should behave in the household, that is, the family circle of God. If Paul could have seen Timothy the letter would not have been written at all. “I hope to come to you soon, but I am writing these instructions to you so that, if I am delayed, you may know how one ought to behave in the household of God” (3:14, 15).

The first epistle of John was written that the recipients might share in the common life which the eyewitnesses of Jesus shared with the Father and the Son, that their joy might be full and that they might know they had eternal life. “And we are writing this that your joy may be complete” (1:4). “I write this to you who believe in the name of the Son of God, that you may know that you have eternal life” (5:13).

It was never intended that those who wrote the letters dominate the faith of the saints. “Not that we lord it over your faith, we work with you for your own joy” (2 Cor. 1:24). Those who have converted these timely letters into a legalistic code with which to force brethren to goose-step to their orders and will have completely missed the spirit of the revelation of God.

If we are not under law, why does Paul speak of the law of faith?

In Romans 3:20, Paul affirms that no human being can be justified by works of the law in the sight of God. Actually, he says, law brings knowledge of sin. It does not bring relief from it. But now the righteousness of God is manifested apart from law. It is the righteousness of God through faith in Jesus Christ for all who believe. This makes boasting impossible.

Obviously, if one could attain to a state of righteousness through law-keeping he would have something about which to brag. But since we are justified by His grace freely, that is, as a gift, and not through our own efforts, there is no room for boasting. The King James Version reads, “Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay, but by the law of faith. Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of law” (Romans 3:27, 28).

The law of faith is not the new covenant scriptures. They were not yet written. The apostle was contrasting two principles upon which man might predicate justification. One was by perfectly keeping law. The other was by absolute faith, or trust in the righteousness of Christ. He shows that the first was impossible for man in the flesh. The only hope was by grace as God’s gift. The Revised Version conveys the correct meaning in the rendering, “Then what becomes of our boasting? It is excluded. On what principle? On the principle of works? No, but on the principle of faith. For we hold that a man is justified by faith apart from works of law.” Another good translation is that of Richard Francis Weymouth in The Modern Speech New Testament. “Where then is your room for boasting? It is for ever shut out? On what principle? On the ground of merit? No, but on the ground of faith. For we maintain that it is as the result of faith that a man is held to be righteous, apart from actions done in obedience to Law.”

There is no indication that the apostle Paul ever thought of the letters he was writing as part of a written code of law. It remained for us, after these letters were gathered up and compiled into a single volume, to read back into them the idea of a code of jurisprudence. Grace is so difficult for us to accept, simply because it is a gift without strings attached that we feel more comfortable if we devise a system by which we pay God back for what He did for us. Because of this tendency toward “legalism” every time some brethren see the term law they automatically think: it is speaking of a written code.

But did not Paul say he was under the law of Christ?

Indeed he did, and I am also under the law of Christ, exactly as he was. Paul was talking about adjusting to various categories of individuals for the sake of the gospel that he might by the employment of all means save more. He was free from all men, but he made himself the servant of all men, in order to gain the most men possible for Christ (1 Cor. 9:19). He knew that in order to do this it was necessary for him to share the life and circumstances of those he met. He did not ask them to become like himself. He became like them. He adapted himself to their customs, recognized their hangups and made allowances even for their prejudices.

He said, “Unto the Jews, I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law.” Paul respected the traditions of the Jews. He conformed to them while among the Jews. Although he regarded every creature of God as good and not to be refused as food if received with thanksgiving, he would not violate the dietary laws of those among whom he labored. He valued men more than his own freedom and would not allow his liberty to become a stumblingblock to others. When one has a passion for souls other considerations are always secondary.

“To them that are without law, as without law, (being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ), that I might gain them that are without law.” Paul did not seek to bind upon the Gentiles any of the ceremonies or requirements of the Mosaic law. Paul was circumcised, but had no qualm about eating with brethren who were not. He circumcised Timothy, who was a half-Jew, as a matter of expediency, but he did not suggest this as a rule for others of mixed parentage. He did not deliberately flaunt his Jewishness. As Albert Barnes says, in his comments upon this passage, “Nothing is ever gained by provoking opposition for the mere sake of opposition. Nothing tends more to hinder the gospel than that.”

But Paul was not lawless! He was not an antinomian. He was not an outlaw among those without law. He recognized the sovereignty of God. He sought to live, even among the Greeks, in such a manner as to demonstrate respect and reverence for God's rule. Jesus was not just someone for whom Paul lived. He was Paul's life. "It is not I that liveth, it is Christ that liveth in me." That is exactly the way I feel, and although I cannot begin to imitate His life as did Paul, I want to do so "as much as in me is."

For years I sought to be good by law. But law operates by fear. It does not bring inner calm, but trepidation. It causes you to measure yourself by dogma rather than devotion. It even inspires rivalry and jealousy. But I was delivered from my childish concept of God as head of a universal bureau of investigation, composed of angels reporting back to him as chief. I came to know what it meant to be a child in the family of God. What a difference it made. I am not only under law to Christ, but Christ is my law. My law is personal. It is unthinkable to me, the way I feel about Him, that I would not respond to His wishes, and keep His commandments.

What a blessing it is to have no rivals! You are yourself and God loves you as you are. He doesn't want you to be someone else or even try to be. This frees you from the frightful trauma of thinking you are a failure because you cannot accomplish what another does. It also delivers you from the terrible wrong of trying to make everyone else over in conformity with your own scarred image. You can listen to what others say about you and read what they write about you, and rejoice and be exceedingly glad. You can even laugh out loud when they lie about you, and feel sorry for them, rather than yourself!

No one is going to disturb my relationship with Jesus. No one is going to displace me or replace me. I'm the only child of the Father who is like me, and there are no substitutes for me. There are no substitutes for Him either. No one else has to think like me, talk like me, or write like me! They probably would not want to do so. But I do not have to think, talk or write like anyone else either. You're right, I don't want to! To let Jesus be your law does not mean that all of God's children are stamped out with a divine cookie cutter. It does not mean they are a row of sanctified Kewpie dolls lined up on the shelf of the heavenly den. If you have any growing ambition to convert me into being like you, forget it! I am clay, but you are not the potter! You are another lump of clay. And there is nothing sillier than a couple of clay pots engaged in a knock-down-and-drag-out fight about whether the Father will swipe one off the shelf for supporting a television program.

Those of us who are heirs of our particular "restoration movement" which was launched by godly and devout Presbyterians with the help of others, are running out of steam and effectiveness in this generation. We have never made peace in the church. We have only made pieces of it. Even now, while others are thinking in terms of repairing breaches and binding up wounds, a lot of our brethren are in a frenzy of withdrawal, driving humble saints out from among them, breaking hearts and homes, cutting and slashing as if the sword of the Spirit had been given them only for the purpose of massacre in the family. The day for such "blood-baths" and political purges is gone. The saints are getting fed up with authoritarian assumption. They are tired of mere human beings throwing their weight around and "lording" it over God's heritage. The fullness of times has come for a change.

The "church" is composed of individuals. It can only be changed as individuals are changed. And individuals are changed as their thinking is changed. We are today exactly where our thinking has brought us. We will be tomorrow exactly where our thinking takes us. If we would be different tomorrow than we are today we must change our thinking before tomorrow. You do not change the thinking of an organization. You change the thinking of those within it, but you must start with yourself. Please allow me to make a few suggestions I think may help restore to sanity a movement which is tearing at its own flesh, and ripping itself to shreds.

1. Begin to regard “the church” as a family, the whole family of God. Think of it as the entire collection of the ransomed and redeemed. It is not limited to those who have a correct understanding of certain doctrinal points. It consists of all who have been born again. It is the community of the whole creation. Every saved person on earth is in it. All who have committed themselves to an obedient life under the Lordship of Jesus are a part of it. If you must judge others, do so by their fruits, and not by their intellectual ability or attainments.

There is a difference in being a member of your father’s family and in belonging to the Farm Bureau Association or the Parent-Teachers Association. It is true that the constituents of the latter organizations can get together for a Christmas party but it is not like having the family present on Christmas Eve. Our problem is that we have allowed the family feeling to erode away and the warmth has gone out of our association. Sometimes we are even “bugged” because we have to go to a meeting and we are afraid to take strangers for fear they will be assaulted verbally by impolite and boorish guardians of the ramparts. We must allow the Spirit of God to change our hearts until we regard each other as beloved brethren.

2. Put the new covenant scriptures back into the proper perspective. They are not a compilation of laws under grace, but a collection of letters written with deep affection to the children of God in Christ. You are not a law enforcement agent, or a political officer. You are a sinner saved by grace. You are not one of God’s police squad, but a participant in divine mercy.

The new covenant scriptures are a recipe book for life. They are not the Way. Jesus is the Way. He is also the truth and the life. The letters are a road map to show you how to follow the Way. They constitute the white lines on the edges of the highway, and the yellow line in its center. Do not get uptight when someone does not see everything like you do. You will not be held accountable for what another thinks or does. Above all, do not “lay down the law” for others. You are as human as they are. Show them “the more excellent way.” It is never inappropriate, and never out of place.

3. Think of the particular restoration movement of which we are the fortunate heirs as a historical reaction to disunity and fragmentation of the saints of God. Do not confuse that movement, or its crystallization into its present form or image with the “Lord’s church.” It is sectarian to build an institution around any concept, even one as great as unity, and designate it as “the church.” This means that we must stop thinking of any of the two dozen different Churches of Christ, or all of them put together, as being the body of Christ exclusively.

That body has members in the world who never heard of “our” Church of Christ. It has members who meet behind various and divergent signboards. They are not God’s children because of where they are, but in spite of where they are. One is a child of God because he is in Christ Jesus and Christ is in him. He is not a person who is right on everything, but one who is in the right Person with everything, including his mistaken ideas and notions. We are not a people of the united notions, but a people united in Christ.

4. Begin to quietly enjoy the freedom wherewith Christ has set you free. You do not need to engage in oratory or flag-waving to be free. You do not need to set off fireworks in the local congregation. You do not have to beat a drum and shout in the Bible class. But remember, you are not free so long as your life is regulated by other men and you are motivated in what you do through fear of what others will say or think.

A good way to commence to be used by God as a humble peacemaker in this divided complex is to resolve to visit other groups who profess faith in the Lord Jesus Christ to see for yourself how they express their praise unto God. I suggest that you resolve to visit a new place one Sunday night per month.

Scare your neighbors by telling them you would like to attend with them on a certain Sunday night. It will probably cause them to think you are coming unglued, and losing your marbles, seeing that you have always refused their invitation with a kind of self-righteous arrogance before.

If your intentions are misunderstood and you are regarded as a “potential joiner” make your self clear. Tell them frankly, but smilingly, that you are satisfied with who you are and where you are. You are not seeking either personal identity, or “church identification” (whatever that is) but you are simply seeking to understand their approach to your Father, and you are interested in them as you are in all who love your Lord.

What you see and hear will probably “turn you off.” You may develop a feeling of pride and superiority and sit in the seat of the scornful thanking God that you are not as other men are. Do not let this happen. If you do, Satan has turned your good intentions into a personal destructive force. Search for the things you can commend as well as seeing those you cannot commend. But each place you go, enter with a prayer, “Lord, if there is someone here who needs me, lead me to that person. Let me touch his life, or hers, in such a manner that Christ, who is the Reality can shine through me.”

If you have been reared in “The Church of Christ” you may have a real trauma about even going to another place for a visit. This is a part of the legalistic approach, and it affects us exactly as it does a devout Roman Catholic, and for exactly the same reason. Of course, on that basis Jesus could never have left heaven and come to earth, and even had He done so, He could not have associated with those among whom He moved. All sectarianism is based upon fear, and that includes our sectarianism as well as any other brand.

If you are afraid to go listen to others for fear you may be misled, your real problem is not what they may advocate, but what you believe. You are afraid that your shield of faith may be penetrated, or that your sword is incapable of saving you in certain encounters. The tragedy of all this is that what you call faith is merely your prejudice, and it is true that mere prejudice can never stand up in encounter. If the sword of the Spirit is not able to resist some enemies it is not able to resist any! I grant you that your use of it may be inept, but if that is the problem you ought not to be too cynical and critical of your religious neighbors who are not too well-trained either. In our sheltered monastic existence, where we send out knights, whom we dub preachers, to battle dragons like the Jehovah's Witnesses, the rest of us couldn't kill a mouse in the castle with a broom. But Socrates said, "An unexamined life is not worth living," to which I offer my own paraphrase, "An unexamined faith is not worth having."

All attempts at reunion of the people of God must begin with association, not for debate but for mutual understanding. This is not easy for those who have been taught that segregation from others is proof of fidelity to God, and any association on a friendly plane is compromise. Any reversal of policy is difficult when the traditional procedure is assumed to be the will of God, but we must change if we are to be used by the Spirit. In my own life I have developed a personal strategy. I call it the ART of peacemaking, because it involves three things— Association, Recognition, and Teamwork. Let me explain.

I am resolute in my determination to inaugurate and practice association with all who regard Jesus as the Messiah and God's Son. Since this is my only creed, it is a good foundation upon which to stand with another while we try to explore the implications and demands of our mutual faith. In addition to mere association, I will recognize as a brother in Christ anyone who has been born of the water and of the Spirit. I will receive such a one as God received him— and me!

I do not receive one because he is a Baptist, a Methodist, a Mennonite, or a Church of Christ. To do that would be sectarian and I am opposed to all sectarianism, which is, in essence, simply the party spirit expressed. I receive him because he is in Christ. I am not so much concerned with what he is in. I am concerned with who he is in and who is in him. Since I must rely upon human judgment, as well as upon the word of God, I realize that I may make a mistake. But I would rather accept as a brother one whom God has not accepted, than to reject as a brother one whom God has accepted. That is but another way of saying that I want even my ignorance to be slanted toward mercy rather than the other direction.

In addition to association with all who believe in Christ as Lord, and recognition as my brothers of all who have become a new creation in what I believe to be the divinely authorized response to the good news about Jesus, I am driven to go one step further. I will engage in any work with others which I believe to be in harmony with the principles of righteousness. In plain simple terms this means that I will put my shoulder to the wheel and help in one particular with others with whom I cannot assist in anything else.

Let me be explicit! In case of a tornado tragedy, if the Mennonites are on the ground and alleviating distress in a well-organized fashion, I see no reason for me setting up a "Church of Christ Depot." I will serve in the soup kitchen and the clothing dispensary with the Mennonites. If the Presbyterians develop a good program for handling drug abuse among high school young people I will go into the schools with them, and appear on television with them, and throw my support behind them. I will engage in teamwork with anyone who seeks to exemplify the spirit of my Lord, even though I may think he is quite ignorant of a lot of things in the scriptures.

Disaster, hunger, drug abuse, cold, and age, are not "Church of Christ" problems. They are problems of the human predicament and all of us are caught up in them. I want to fight sin, and that means I must fight its effects. The human predicament is part of those effects, and anyone who seeks to openly fight them is fighting the effects of sin, whether he knows it or not. I fully realize that I may be labeled a “heretic” for my position, but that does not bother me one bit. The heroes of today were the heretics of yesterday. I am perfectly aware that all of the reforms ever carried out were the work of heretics, and I shall feel in good company.

There is one thing you must remember, however, as you read this. I am telling you what I think and how I propose to work. You need not think as I do and you need not work as I do, for me to love you. I am doing what I think my Lord wants me to do and saying what I think He wants me to say. I will be glad to see Him and find out if I was right about it, but I respect Him to the degree that no one else will ever be Lord of my life! God bless you all!

The Art of Peacemaking

Mission Messenger (May 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

To suffer for Christ also means to embrace the cause of unity within the body of Christ over against all forms of sectarianism and denominational prestige. It means carrying on our hearts and in our prayers the scandal of our divisions and working to remove them wherever possible.— Suzanne de Dietrich in Toward Fullness of Life.

I suspect that most of our readers know by now that I am a great admirer of the Greek language in which the new covenant scriptures were written. It was divine providence which gave us the revelation at the very time when this versatile tongue was the medium of verbal exchange throughout the Mediterranean world. It was a style of dress best calculated to adorn, exhibit and enhance the message from on high. Will Durant says, “It was a noble tongue, vigorous, supple, melodious, as irregular as any vital speech, but lending itself readily to expressive combinations, delicate gradations and distinctions of meaning, subtle philosophical conceptions, and every variety of literary excellence.”

To pick a favorite word from such a glorious army would be like trying to select one gem from a truckload of precious stones, yet I am sure that any small collection of mine would certainly include the word eirene. This word occurs ninety-one times, in 88 of which it is translated peace. Once it is rendered quietness, and once rest. Our feminine name Irene is a transliteration as is our English word irenic, which means peaceful or conciliatory.

It is one of the great terms used by the Holy Spirit, appearing in every one of the books of the new covenant scriptures, except 1 John. Paul uses it in combination with grace in the salutation of all his letters, using the additional word mercy only when writing to Timothy. When Greeks met, the customary greeting was “Grace.” When Jews saluted one another it was with “Peace.” Thus the apostle embraces both Jew and Greek at the very outset of each personal letter. Frequently he closes his epistles with a repetition of “peace.”

The corresponding Hebrew word was shalom. It conveyed the idea of wholeness, completeness or perfection. It has a variety of renderings, but generally there is a sense of completing a work, clearing away a charge by payment or restitution, or bringing a difficulty to a conclusion. It is in such a framework the Jews in an audience addressed by Paul would have understood peace.

We limit peace, as we do many other words, when we think of it as a mere cessation of hostilities, or a lull between battles. Peace is a state or condition in which a proper relationship is maintained so that tranquillity prevails. I once knew a husband and wife who lived under the same roof for three years and never exchanged a harsh word. They did not exchange a kind word either.

They were not on speaking terms. They slept in different rooms and avoided each other as much as possible. Their house was one of quiet, but not of peace. It was the quiet of the morgue or the cemetery. Just because they were not shouting or shooting at one another did not indicate peace. Both were churning with inner turmoil.

I am writing about peace because I think that our sectarian squabbles are a disgrace to the faith which we profess, and our divisions are a scandal of the deepest dye. The very existence of our warring factions and belligerent parties is proof of how far we have forsaken the ideal of “the Prince of peace.” In one Texas city I visited nine different kinds of “Churches of Christ.” As we talked in the offices it was obvious that the constituents of each group knew nothing about the others. I was the only man who had ever made it a point to visit all of them. I saw brethren in the Lord who lived in the same block and had never met.

There was not even a “restoration brotherhood” (whatever that is) in the city. There were nine separate and distinct “brotherhoods” and the members treated each other more like “hoods” than like “brothers.” Imagine men getting into nine different pulpits in one day in one city, all of them behind signboards bearing the name “Church of Christ” and bitterly assailing other children of God whom they had never met and to whom they had not once listened. Surely the devil has manipulated us into doing his destructive work. Why should he personally labor to destroy the children of God when all of them are paying men a salary to use their facilities with which to do it so effectively?

All we have done for a hundred years is to prove to the world that we cannot get along with one another in Christ. We treat those who have never made a profession in Jesus with greater politeness than we exhibit to a saint who differs with us over some minor point of opinion. Brethren who ate and drank together at the same table for years become victims of “clerical con men” who use the pulpit for rabble-rousing and turn them against each other until they begin to hate one another as a proof that they love God. Homes are broken up, families are ripped off, friendships are severed, and congregations shivered to bits over false tests of loyalty dreamed up and drummed up by front men who often profit financially from exploitation of human misery and anguish.

Our tragic divisions affect the whole world. Each faction, in a kind of unholy rivalry, sends “missionaries” to other lands, whose real mission is to line up adherents on some American-born issue. Natives who got along well as heathen learn to fight one another with gossip, innuendo and false accusations when converted to Christ. Exportation of our factional hangups and unwritten creeds poses a threat which will disrupt the whole Christian purpose. Surely such things ought not so to be!

What can be done? Because the situation is so seriously mixed up there are those who simply throw in the towel, throw up their hands, and give up! They feel frustrated and futile in any attempt they make. They have seen previous efforts come to nought and are convinced nothing can be done. I deny that kind of pessimistic prediction. I refuse to be discouraged or frightened. I am not only convinced something can be done, I am persuaded something will be done.

When schism is rampant peacemakers are needed. Peace is not an accident. It does not just happen. It does not result from chance. Peace must be made. It must be waged as war is waged. This calls for a strategy of peace as others develop a strategy of war. The word peacemakers occurs only once in the sacred scriptures, but there is a blessing attached to it. Jesus pronounced that blessing, so peacemakers operate under divine benediction. They are called the children of God. Those who set up divisions are sensual, having not the Spirit (Jude 19). Those who promote peace labor with the Spirit, not in opposition to Him. Let me suggest a few essentials to the strategy of peace.

DEFINITION OF PEACE

1. The first essential is to have an understanding of what we seek. To attack a prepared and defended position with no clear understanding of the objective to be gained may prove suicidal. Peace is not negative but positive. It is not passive but active. It is not lack of something, but something to fill a lack. It does not result from conformity of opinion or interpretation. It is not sterile or lifeless. It is a dynamic which provides power for united effort in the cause of righteousness.

It is not simple peace of mind, but “the peace of God which passes all understanding” (Phil. 4:7). It is not peace such as the world provides with pacts, programs, agreements or concordats. Jesus said, “Peace I leave with you; my peace I give to you; not as the world gives do I give it to you” (John 14:27). It is a fruit of the Spirit along with love and joy. Peace is the composure which comes from companionship with God, the calm begotten by closeness with the divine, the contentment produced by conquest of care. Peace is the inner conviction that one is a new creation, cleansed by the blood of Christ, sanctified by the Holy Spirit, and justified by faith in Jesus. It lifts the one who has it above the fret and worry about earthly things where he can accept himself as he is, because God accepted him thus. He has no rivals. He is unique. He can accept others where he finds them, standing with them on any truth they may hold and using it as a basis for leading them to a closer walk with God.

2. All peacemakers must begin with themselves. Since peace has to do with wholeness, completeness or maturity, a well-integrated personality must first be achieved. Sin fragments, explodes and disintegrates. Only Jesus can put us back together again. He alone can unscramble our brains, disentangle us from the thicket and put the pieces into the pattern of God’s design for us. One who has no peace within can never help others have peace without! The would-be physician must first be healed before he can help heal others!

In their commentary on Thessalonians, Hogg and Vine assert that peace is the result accruing from justification. I think this is correct. Paul says that “being now justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.”

Justification is the act by which God treats us as guiltless. We are not guiltless and we can never become so. But our absolute trust in and reliance upon the blood of Jesus places us in such a position that God can declare us free from guilt. This is not because of any work of merit upon our part but because of the atoning sacrifice of Christ.

A realization that God does not count our sins against us, nor impute them unto us, brings a freedom from guilt-consciousness. We recognize the restoration of a right relationship with the Father, and a sharing in eternal life. In such a state we can see the glory and majesty of a closer walk with God, of unity with the divine. With the love of God poured out in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, we crave for everyone a sense of unity and closeness. The disturbed and distorted community of believers needs to see an example of love which transcends artificial barriers, triumphs over differences, and is able to receive all of God's children without reservation.

3. Peacemakers must see division among believers for what it is— a sin against the authority of God as expressed in the word of God. We should not be one merely because of policy. We should not be united simply because of the effect it will have upon others. We should be one because it is commanded of God. Our schisms exist in defiance of divine authority. They are works of the flesh like adultery, drunkenness and idolatry. We should no more continue in division than we should in these things.

Division is an intolerable state. To condone it will condemn us; to defend it will destroy us. Nowhere does God's word pronounce a blessing upon division among the saints. Every time it is mentioned it is deplored and castigated. One who is a peacemaker in the kingdom is not merely trying to create a more amicable state of affairs. He is opposing an immoral, God-defying, Christ-denying situation. The devil has manipulated us into thinking that it is God's will that we come out from among the brethren as He told us to come out from among the heathen. Nothing can be further from the truth.

Peacemaking is often a thankless task. Men prefer to be divided. It gratifies ego and pampers pride. It provides an excuse for hostility toward others under a guise of faithfulness to God. It makes possible all kinds of discrimination and defends it as “the best way” to do the will of God. But it cannot be defended honestly. It is a sin, a tragic betrayal of the body of Christ, and a frightening commentary on human perversity.

CULTIVATION OF CONFIDENCE

4. Peacemakers must carry on their effort with undaunted faith. Faith is confidence, trust or assurance. One who is easily discouraged, or who allows the barbed shafts of criticism to get under his skin will never succeed in restoring order in the kind of situation which we face. There must not only be a strong and powerful conviction that unity is the will of God, but also that the Spirit working through us can alleviate the condition we face.

We must believe that no heart is too dirty for the blood of Christ to clean up, and no human mess is too bad for the power of God to straighten out. Actually, what this means is that the true peacemaker will see with an eye of faith a united church. There can be no creation that did not first exist as a mental image or concept. The one who accomplishes God’s purpose is the one who looks not at things that are seen, but at those which are unseen.

I have an inner vision of the saints working together in unison. It does not embrace a picture of every one under the same roof or of the same opinion. But it does include a recognition of all who are in Christ Jesus, working together, praying together, and sharing in the dissemination of the truths concerning Jesus. I refuse to allow any circumstance to dim that hope. No one can throw enough cold water to extinguish the fire in my heart. I shall die before my dream is fully realized but I shall work as if it were going to come to pass tomorrow. One reason I do not become uptight about it is that I am seeing it work now on a minor scale in many places. The party spirit is eroding away.

So there is no use of you trying to discourage me. The indwelling Spirit of God has erased the word discouragement from the wall of my heart. Satan's graffiti has been expunged. I do not intend to be turned aside by anything. The purpose, pleasure and will of God is to bring all things together in unity in Christ. I am involved in that purpose, pleasure and will. I do not intend to be deterred by falsehood, threat or innuendo. If you are sitting in the shade waiting for me to grow tired of trying to promote fellowship across our silly lines, you might as well get up, mop your brow and get with it! I am more convinced today than I have ever been of the rightness of my plea for the unity of all believers. I am not about to give up. Really, I am just starting!

I am fully persuaded that God's will should be done and I am absolutely convinced that it will be done. God is not the author of confusion but of peace. He does not want His children clawing and fighting one another. Whether I labor to fulfill His will is up to me. My hope of life depends upon me doing that will, but His will does not depend upon my life. I want to be a peacemaker because peacemakers are on God's side. They are called the children of God. I praise the Father for the lessening of every tension and the triumph of every irenic gesture or overture.

5. Peacemakers must be persons of prayer. And they must pray without doubting. They must never become cynical or skeptical. They must never allow external circumstances to drain away their trust or to dilute it to the degree that it is no longer dynamic. I have seen many people who started out to work for reunion among the saints give up the fight, fold their hands and quit. When I first began to plead for real restoration of the new covenant unity in Christ a great many young men tried to tie their own strings to the MISSION MESSENGER kite. When they found out that I was not the least bit interested in forming another faction they faded out of the picture. I never hear from them anymore. I am not a cat's paw to pull partisan chestnuts out of the fire for any group in the church. I belong only to Jesus Christ who is my Lord.

My own interest has not flagged. I place the outcome in the hands of God and leave it there. My task is to plant and water. God will give the increase. If the opposition throws up a roadblock I go around it. If an insurmountable impediment bars the way in one direction, I go another route, never losing sight of my real objective which is to achieve the purpose, will and pleasure of God— the unity of all things in heaven and on earth in Christ.

I pray without a question about God's hearing. And while I am tremendously strengthened by the ever-increasing number of those who pray for me, I would still go on if I had to stand alone. It is not a matter of my indomitable will, for I am weak, but my conviction that it is His infallible will, which keeps me pressing toward the goal. His purpose has become my purpose. His will has become my will. His pleasure is my pleasure.

Lately I have been immersing myself in the content of the letter addressed by Paul to "God's people at Colossae, brothers in the faith, incorporate in Christ." I am not one of God's people at Colossae. I am one of God's people in Saint Louis. But I am a brother in the faith and I am incorporate in Christ. I accept this letter, therefore, as speaking to my life and my needs. On this basis I ask God that I may "receive from him all wisdom and spiritual understanding for full insight into his will, so that my manner of life may be worthy of the Lord and entirely pleasing to him." I also ask that I "may bear fruit in active goodness of every kind and grow in the knowledge of God.”

I have especially been led through study and meditation to entreat God that “he may strengthen me in his glorious might, with ample power to meet whatever comes with fortitude, patience and joy.” The apostle encouraged the saints “to persevere in prayer, with minds awake, and thankful heart.” It will do little good to persevere in prayer if one has a mind asleep or closed. It will do no good to pray with an unthankful heart.

We are divided strife-torn and ripped off because we have faced every newly arriving situation with minds asleep. Every such situation has been elevated to a crisis condition. We have not so much acted upon such conditions as we have reacted to them. Frequently we have reacted first and thought about it afterwards. I want to face each development, not upon the basis of a previous traditional slant or stance, but in the light of the scriptures. That we have developed certain presuppositions as a part of our historical development can hardly be denied. Even when we affirm that “we speak where the Bible speaks” we do not always speak as the Bible speaks. We speak as the words are filtered through our “restoration movement” screen.

This creates several tragic problems. First, it stifles original thinking, and creates an atmosphere of stagnation. Men become afraid to express themselves about their real views and either keep still or drop out. They must play politics in The System or they will be driven out and ruined. Every person who is “in on the know” can cite numerous cases where Church of Christism has operated to produce spiritual “blood purges” and brutally treated some of the finest people who were part of the movement.

Secondly, the closed-mind status freezes ignorance at the current level. I hold that God revealed to man all of the divine thought essential to human welfare, happiness and wholeness. I do not think we have probed the depth of that revelation or completely exhausted the mother lode. It is an unenviable species of arrogance for any generation to feel that “we are the people and wisdom will die with us.” It is hypocritical to urge everyone to study the Bible for himself and then shoot down those who do so and learn something we have not before discovered. I suspect you may say that with me the decision has been firmly reached as to the authenticity and genuineness of the sacred scriptures, but I am open to investigate any deduction drawn from the scriptures, which includes review and reinvestigation of my own fallible understanding.

I intend to continue to pray that the Father will help me properly relate to all of His children in a manner which is for their edification and growth. I will move among all of them regardless of their hostility toward each other. If I am reviled I shall try not to revile in return. I will not seek revenge but always leave a place for divine retribution. I am resolved not to pay back evil for evil, and so far as it lies within me to live at peace with all men. In the New English Bible translation occurs the beautiful gem of truth: “The wisdom from above is in the first place pure; and then peace-loving, considerate and open to reason; it is straightforward and sincere, rich in mercy and in the kindly deeds that are its fruit. True justice is the harvest reaped by peacemakers from seeds sown in a spirit of peace” (James 3:17, 18).

The wisdom from above is first pure! Brethren with whom I grew up actually used this statement to cancel out everything that James wrote in this gloriously irenic passage. They interpreted it to mean that anyone who did not agree with our partisan projection was offering an impure doctrine, and since it was not pure in the first place, we should not seek even to try and be at peace with him. Instead we should challenge him, debate him, and even attack him verbally from the platform, allowing him no opportunity to present his own defense.

I do not believe the God of all grace was intimating that we should not be “peace-loving, considerate and open to reason” with one who did not see the millennial question, the instrumental music question, or the issue of cups, classes or colleges as we did. We sucked that kind of meaning out of our factional thumb. One does not become impure in doctrine simply because he does not see everything as we do. We are not infallible and our interpretation is not infallible. To lift out a statement about the heavenly wisdom first being pure and then use it as justification for boorish and unprincipled treatment of a brother who honestly disagrees with us is about as sectarian as you can become. But as Canon Farrar has pointed out, “Even out of this strong condemnation of contentious dogmatism, the universal misinterpretation of scripture has extorted an excuse — nay, an argument— for intolerance.”

The “wisdom from above” is contextually contrasted with wisdom that is “earth-bound, sensual and demonic.” The passage begins with a question, “Who among you is wise or clever?” James declares that real wisdom is manifested by wise behavior and a proper attitude. “Let his right conduct give practical proof of it, with the modesty that comes of wisdom.” He then zeroes in on the man who thinks he is clever and who resents others. “But if you are harboring bitter jealousy and selfish ambition in your hearts, consider whether your claims are not false and a defiance of the truth.”

This is plain! Regardless of how much wisdom one thinks he has amassed, if it leaves him bitterly jealous and selfish, instead of modest and humble, he needs to review his claims to see if he is not off the track. The kind of wisdom which produces jealousy and selfishness, does not come from above. It is earthly in origin, sensual and demonic. James puts his finger on the basis for most disorder and schism when he writes, “For with jealousy and ambition come disorder and evil of every kind.” I am persuaded that more of our divisions are promoted and prolonged by preacher jealousy and selfishness, and by clerical ambition than by any other factor. If these could be utterly eliminated most rifts would be healed and we would all be working together before the year ends.

In contrast with earth-bound wisdom which produces jealousy and selfish ambition, is “the wisdom from above which is in the first place pure.” That is, it produces pure and wholesome motivation, untainted by base selfishness. The first thing such wisdom does is to purge the heart of earth-bound considerations of greatness and power, of sensual desires and lust for control, of demonic struggle for eminence and dominion. Although it is true that the wisdom from above would be doctrinally correct and infallible, the consideration here is the motivation and attitude which it creates.

One who would be an instrument of peace must first be pure or free of political considerations, “and then peace-loving, considerate and open to reason.” I thrill to the description of heaven-sent wisdom of which James writes, “It is straightforward and sincere, rich in mercy and in the kindly deeds that are its fruit.” That is beautiful! It spells out what I would like for my weak and unworthy life to be. But it is the next sentence which makes my heart palpitate with real joy. It defines true justice, and in these days especially that clarification is needed.

“True justice is the harvest reaped by peacemakers from seeds sown in a spirit of peace.” There must be proper seed, a proper spirit of planting, and a reaping time. The seed of peace brings forth fruit and the harvest that is gathered in is true justice. The implication is that only peacemakers will fill their baskets with such fruit because they alone will plant the seed. I would like to go up and down the land like a new Johnny Appleseed, leaving the seed of peace deposited wherever I find a place. And I would like to know that long after my departure, others will gather the fruit of true justice.

We will not get too many peacemakers. The field is not crowded. There is room for another. There is room for you. Start where you are, make peace with God, make peace in your family circle, make peace in the community, make peace in the congregation. Resolve never to create another faction. Do all you can to alleviate the distress caused by those already started. To be a peacemaker is to be called a child of God. I eagerly pray that you will become such a person today!

The Spiritual Eclipse

Mission Messenger (May 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

A few days ago I was reading from the translation of apostolic letters made by that versatile Anglican, J. B. Phillips. I suspect I am favorably influenced toward his version to some extent by the fact that when Phillips had finished his rendering of the letter to Colossae he mailed a copy of it to C. S. Lewis. That literary worthy not only encouraged him to persevere but supplied the title “Letters to Young Churches” which Phillips adopted for his compilation of the epistles.

I am somewhat moved by the final statement in the “Translator’s Foreword” written in 1958, when the new covenant scriptures had been collected into a single volume bearing the title The New Testament in Modern English. Phillips writes, “Not the least of my gratitude is evoked by the assurance that has grown within me that here in the New Testament, at the very heart and core of our Faith, Christians are far more at one than their outward divisions would imply. From this unquestionable evidence of fundamental unity I derive not only great comfort but a great hope for the future.”

I like to read the letter to the Christians at Ephesus as Phillips translates it. It is especially good in dealing with “the divine secret” which had been “hidden to past generations of mankind.” As Phillips puts it, “The purpose is that all the angelic powers should now see the complex wisdom of God’s plan being worked out through the Church in conformity to that timeless purpose which he centered in Christ Jesus, our Lord” (3:10, 11). Even the most unemotional reader cannot escape being stirred by such poignant terms as complex wisdom, timeless purpose and centered in Christ.

Really, there are few of us who think of the church today in any such categories. Most of the brethren have no consciousness of angels looking over the ramparts of glory and observing what we do in working out the complex wisdom of God’s plan. The way we act it will take the angels a long time to get even an elementary education, and they need to be careful and selective because a lot of what we do is not at all a part of the wisdom of God’s plan. I’m not so sure that a lot of us think of ourselves as proceeding in conformity with a timeless purpose. We are too caught up with all of the nitty-gritty and trivia which belong to the things that are seen and which will pass away! What has happened to us?

I did a lot of preaching in the dust bowl area of the midwest during the days when cruel driving winds relentlessly eroded away the topsoil from fields which should never have been put to the plow. One day I stepped from the train “away out west in Kansas,” when the dust in the air was so thick that visibility was not even a hundred feet. As I stood on the station platform and the train began to move away, a figure appeared out of the gloom and introduced himself. It was the brother with whom I was to stay. He proved to be quite a wag, and when we got in the old Jalopy and headed out into the haze, he said, “What do you think of the eclipse?” “Eclipse?” I asked, wondering if I had overlooked some planetary phenomenon. “Yeh,” he replied, “the earth is coming between herself and the sun.”

That is what I think has happened to us. The church has come between herself and Christ. We have obscured the sun of righteousness, and reversed the prophecy so that “they which sat in light have seen great darkness.” In many places God’s purpose is no longer conceived of as centered in Christ, except in sermonic platitudes. It is centered in the organization we have contrived and pass off as the church for which Jesus died.

All of you have no doubt heard of the man who formed a company to probe for oil. The company spent a million dollars and drilled one hole to prodigious depth, but when they installed a shiny modern pump they got just enough fuel to keep the machinery operating. We have programmed, planned and promoted the church until now we have a sophisticated institution selling salvation at a pretty high financial rate, and most of the finance is spent keeping the machinery running. In many places the church exists chiefly to keep itself in existence. It is the perpetuator of tradition, the promulgator of the status quo.

We do not know what heaven has going for us. We are unaware of “the magnificence and splendor of the inheritance promised to Christians, and how tremendous is the power available to us who trust in God” (Ephesians 1:18, 19). A couple of years ago the news media carried a story about the discovery of the corpse of a woman in a dingy tenement in New York. The people in the community knew her as a recluse. She was always attired in rags which she apparently never changed. They saw her, dirty and unkempt, salvaging items of food from garbage cans in the rear alleys behind stores and restaurants. When they did not see her for several days they reported her absence to the authorities.

When the police broke down the door they were greeted with an almost unbelievable sight. Old newspapers, dusty and musty, and yellow with age, were piled in rows as high as one could reach. Only a narrow passageway led to the back of the room where the pitiable figure lay dead upon an old army cot. The mortician who prepared the body for a cheap casket found concealed in the tattered clothing, bank deposit books with more than a half million dollars recorded. Search of the premises revealed fifty dollar bills stuffed at random between the newspapers with no apparent order or system. The woman was an heiress whose developing sense of greed and fear had driven her to a lonely death.

The church today is surrounded by the news. The glad tidings of heaven, the triumphs of yesterday, the demands of the present, these are all piled about us. And we are heirs. "Here is the staggering thing, that in all which will one day belong to him we have been promised a share" (Ephesians 1:11). But we can withdraw from the teeming world about us, and we can die in our loneliness, subsisting upon scraps, and dreaming of what it once was, what it used to be like.

Certainly we had no idea that in our huge building programs and in our devising of promotional apparatus we were going to chain ourselves to places and things until we could not move even though where we were and what we were doing no longer had any relevance to life. And the very upkeep would throttle us when changing patterns of life left us stranded, cast up on the beach and deserted by the very patrons who once went along, apparently just for the ride.

Recently I read of a man who acquired a baby leopard. The cub was so cute and playful that neighbors brought their children over to pet and fondle it. But it grew larger and had to be restrained inside an expensive enclosure. The cost of meat made it almost prohibitive to feed it, but the zoo would not take it. One day when the owner went inside the pen, the big cat went berserk. He was barely able to fight it off after claws and fangs had cruelly lacerated his flesh. Of course, the church is not like that, but what started out to be a harmless experiment has sometimes become an organizational giant which it is difficult to feed and nourish.

I think we become victims of our own traditions. We confuse these with God's will and stubbornly resist change, fearing that to alter our way of doing things would be to forsake the will of God and walk in the path of perverseness. This causes us always to treat symptoms and not the disease, to pick out pimples and neglect the cause. The story is told of an elder, who announced one Sunday morning, "There's been a lot of grumbling lately that we are in a rut and ought to change things. All right, today we are going to change. Instead of having three songs before prayer and one after, we are going to have two songs before prayer and two after. I hope that will stop the complaining that we always do everything the same way."

I know of a body of men who spent thirty minutes in a sober hassle over whether they should start at the back of the auditorium, or the front, in passing the plates to collect the offering. In attempting to settle that momentous question they took almost as much time as the president did to deliver his state of the union message to the joint houses of Congress. It is possible that most of us cannot realize how inconsequential some of our "major decisions" seem in the ripped-off world where our lot has been cast.

I was listening to my car radio not long ago and tuned in to a daily program sponsored by a local Church of Christ. The speaker began in a vivacious manner. "Welcome to a program that is different! It may be the only program to which you will listen today that is truly distinctive. Do you know what makes it unique? Undoubtedly you would discover it for yourself, but let me tell you in advance. The gospel songs to which you will listen will be sung without the use of instrumental music. You will admit that this makes the program different, really different from any other. And that makes it scriptural!"

I had just listened to a speaker from a Baptist background who had taken the words of 1 Peter 1:18-21 and expounded them with compassion mixed with deep conviction. With a sense of directness which spoke to my heart he conversed about the redemption achieved not by material wealth, and about the resurrection of Jesus from the dead that our hope and faith might be in God. I felt a real sense of relationship to the one “who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifested in these last times for us.”

As I listened to my brother talk about the tremendous distinctiveness of singing a cappella, I wondered what hope would be conveyed to those in the ward of the cancer hospital from which I had just come. It is possible that we are concerned with defending our distinctiveness and proclaiming our peculiarities, until we have no time for, and little interest in sharing the grace of God. Perhaps we are in an eclipse and the church has come between the new creation and the One who created us unto good works that we should continue in them!

What Lack We Yet?

Mission Messenger (May 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

This is the title of a book compiled by J. D. Thomas, and consisting of forty-seven manuscripts presented by invitation of the editor. The “we” in the title designates what Brother Thomas in his preface refers to as “the brotherhood,” and the brotherhood embraces only Churches of Christ which do not use instrumental music in conjunction with the public praise in song. However, that brotherhood is obviously composed of various factions, parties and segments, since men representing divergent groups who regard each other as apostates, liberals, traitors, and other things too numerous to mention, appear within the same covers.

I hail the attempt of Brother Thomas to provide a forum for men of various views to express their opinions. It is refreshing to see someone with such a degree of fairness. And it is great that men who would not sit upon the same platform with one another can appear between covers of the same volume. It is interesting that every person, without exception, would be branded as a “brother in error” by someone else in the book. And they would all be right! So the book may be a little more revealing than was intended by the editor.

There must be a lot wrong with a “brotherhood” if it requires 320 pages to tell what it yet lacks. And if it can be a “brotherhood” with such widely divergent views as are expressed, it is obvious that unity in diversity is the “in thing” at last among a people who have always practiced it as ardently as they have denied doing so. I have another question. If we are the people who “speak where the Bible speaks” how does it happen that we lack so much? How much can we lack and still be what some of the writers fondly call “the Lord’s church”? When do we lack enough to cease to be that church? Who determines what we can lack and what we must not lack?

It is quite apparent that our lack does not involve mere “spiritual peanuts.” A respected brother who taught eight years in Lubbock Christian College, and who has preached extensively in Texas and Oklahoma, writes that we lack a proper understanding of sin, of the person of Jesus, of how Jesus saves, plus some other pretty basic things. If he is right, we are not much better off than “the denominations” as our brethren tag other folk who hide behind “unscriptural signboards” but may not lack as much as we do.

Unless we read such volumes merely to re-arrange our prejudices I think they ought to make us a little more humble. Of course, a lot of brethren will not read the whole book but will only turn to the “loyal brethren” to see what they have to say. Those who do that lack a lot more yet than they realize. I suggest that some of our gung-ho radio performers tread lightly. If they get the dander up on some Baptist preachers, they are liable to get up and read this book on the air and show how far off we are by our own admission.

We have been challenging, debating, attacking, going to Christian colleges, attending lectureships, reading brotherhood journals, and generally bragging that we are the one and only “New Testament church,” established in 33 A.D., with Jesus as our head. If we still lack a book full of things, we probably should be a little more charitable to other honest folk who also lack a few items. This is part of the theme of Roy Osborne in the volume. As usual, he gets the real message across.

I am part of the “we” of Brother Thomas, but I am also part of a bigger “we” than that. I no longer confine my concept of the body of Christ to the fragmented non-instrument “Church of Christ.” The latter does not have the former in its organizational box. Every person on this whole wide earth who has been born again is in the “we” I am in, and we all lack a lot. That is the reason all of us need the grace of God in order to make it. Praise His name!

Discerning the Body

Mission Messenger (June 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

There are two places in his letters where Paul seems to place extra stress upon the fact that there is one body. He mentions it in other connections but not with the emphasis he employs in Romans 12:4, 5 and in 1 Corinthians 12:12-27. In both cases the subject is introduced in a direct context of spiritual gifts, or charismata, a matter which we will examine later.

We do not ordinarily employ what he wrote for the purpose which he had in mind. In post-apostolic times another condition has arisen which we deem to be more pressing than the one with which Paul dealt. I am not too certain our judgment upon this is unassailable, but that is the way it is. As a result we use the apostolic affirmations concerning the one body to bring under condemnation the fragmentation into various sects of those who claim faith in the testimony that Jesus of Nazareth is the Son of God, and the Messiah of whom the prophets spoke.

It is true that Paul was confronted by both schisms and heresies (or sects) in Corinth, but the problem was different than it is now. In his day, the parties, while exalting leaders around whom they crystallized, still came together in one place, although their factionalism made it impossible for them to eat the Lord's Supper in the true sense, seeing it was intended to be a public demonstration of fellowship. In spite of the rifts over leaders it was still possible to distinguish the body of believers from the pagan world.

The historical development which complicates our own times has presented a wholly divergent problem. We are no longer an underground movement, at least in the western world. When the faith won the victory over political powers, and then sought to promote itself by political methods, great changes were wrought for the worse. The substitution of the miscalled "Holy Roman Empire" for the pagan Roman Empire was a tragedy. The substitution of that empire for the kingdom of heaven was a catastrophe.

It was inevitable that revolt occur, and it is altogether probable that God, who watches over our affairs, raised up Martin Luther to effect the divine purpose and begin the process of renewal. It is no problem for me to regard the monk of Erfurt as an instrument in the hands of God. Revolutions not only upset the existing order but they establish a precedent and even lay the groundwork for succeeding protest movements. Political revolutions often result in the formation of new nations, states and governmental entities, and religious revolutions frequently produce new sects gathered around their peculiarities and distinctives.

I think there is a difference between a cult and a sect. A sect is composed of those who tend to hold to foundational truths upon which the Christian faith is predicated. There may be a distorted sense of values in which undue emphasis is given to a fact, or an opinion relative to a fact, but sects, as we know them, and particularly as our fathers knew them, accept the basic and elemental truths as enunciated in God's revelation as normative and authoritative.

This is not the case with the cults. Because of the nature of religious division, and also because they draw their constituency primarily from the sects, there is, of course, a tendency for cults to exhibit some of the characteristics of the sects. Likewise, a great many of the sects demonstrate some of the attitudes particularly attributive to cultists. Still I think there are real differences between Jehovah's Witnesses, Mormons, and Christian Scientists (for example), and Baptists, Methodists and Presbyterians.

For one thing, the cults all have a source of authority additional to the sacred scriptures. The Mormons hold that the Bible is full of errors, and have God saying in the quaint frontier language of Joseph Smith, "Wherefore, because that ye have a Bible ye need not suppose that it contains all my words; neither need ye suppose that I have not caused more to be written" (2 Nephi 29:10). So the Mormons have come up with three more volumes of "sacred books" including The Book of Mormon, Doctrines and Covenants, and The Pearl of Great Price. I have read them all and that is more than some Mormons can say.

The Christian Scientists have Science and Health and Key to the Scriptures, about which someone has said, "It is like Grape Nuts, neither one nor the other." Influenced by Phineas P. Quimby, Mary Baker Glover Patterson Eddy, to give all of her husbands proper acknowledgment, came up with the volume which launched that highly authoritarian structure known as "The Christian Science Church."

The Jehovah's Witnesses will deny to high heaven that they have any other source of authority than the Word of God, but anyone who has carefully read their New World Translation knows it is not an objective rendering of the sacred text into the English of our day. It is a prejudiced, warped and twisted production into which The Watchtower Society has intruded its peculiar ideas, to be palmed off on the unsuspecting and spiritually illiterate as the will of God.

It will be objected by some of my readers that the creeds of the various sects constitute another source of authority additional to the revelation of God. Because Alexander Campbell and his contemporaries inveighed against the creeds of their day, and rightly so, we have reared up a generation of heirs who repeat the strictures without knowledge of what they oppose. Most of the written creeds and formal confessions of faith were never regarded as an extra source of authority at all. They affirmed the completeness and authority of the new covenant scriptures.

The greater part of them echo the sentiment contained in the Discipline of the United Brethren in Christ, which says, “We believe that the Holy Bible, Old and New Testaments, is the word of God; that it contains the only way to our salvation; that every true Christian is bound to acknowledge and receive it with the influence of the spirit of God, as the only rule and guide.”

Our pioneer fathers opposed creeds because they were divisive in that they crystallized opinions and froze research, and created parties and factions which became inflexible. The Latin credo means simply, “I believe.” Any man who believes anything has a creed. The sin lies not in writing out one’s personal creed, but in ceasing such writing. One who continues to study and grow must change in his apprehension of divinely-revealed truth, and must not be chained to errors in his past opinions.

When Alexander Campbell debated N. L. Rice on creeds, the proposition read, “Human creeds, as bonds of union and terms of communion, are necessarily heretical and schismatical.” That is true.

It is human creeds imposed as a basis of fellowship which creates parties and schisms. We are now living in a wholly different age than the one in which that debate was held. The various sects of our day seldom make a human creed either a bond of union or a term of communion. The problem which we face is not so much one of authoritative opinions, as of spiritual illiteracy. There are some signs that we are moving into a new era of Biblical study and examination, and this will herald the decay of rigid sectarianism.

We need to make a distinction between the cults which create an additional source of authority, called by the German writer Hutten “a Bible in the left hand,” and the sects whose members respect the Bible as the revelation of God, but who, because of culture and circumstances, are ignorant of its teaching. Our indiscriminate and intolerant accusations of and our actions toward our religious neighbors will not work the glory of God. I propose to go anywhere that God opens up a door of opportunity through the Spirit and share my feeble insights with any who love my precious Lord. And I shall go in love, not “breathing out threatenings and slaughter.”

THE PLACE OF JESUS

Another difference between the cults and the sects which have arisen among believers is that the former inevitably devalue Jesus, as the Christ, and as our sole mediator between God and man. Mormons hold that Adam was God, and Eve was one of his celestial wives whom he brought with him into the Garden of Eden. As Brigham Young stated it, “He is Michael, the Archangel, the Ancient of Days . . . He is our Father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do.”

As to Jesus, James Talmadge writes in Articles of Faith, “Among the spirit children of Elohim the firstborn was and is Jehovah or Jesus Christ to whom all others are junior.” John Henry Evans in An American Prophet writes, “As for the Devil and his fellow spirits, they are brothers to men and also to Jesus and sons and daughters of God in the same sense that we are.”

Jehovah’s Witnesses are no better! It is their position that Christ was the first creature produced by Jehovah and was his Chief Executive Officer. Previous to his coming to earth he was identified as Michael, and in Jude 9 the reference to Michael was related to Jesus in his pre-human state. Jehovah's Witnesses, as is well-known, deny the physical resurrection of the body of Jesus. Judge Rutherford speculated that God may have hidden the body away to exhibit to people in the millennial age. The Witnesses teach that Jesus has now again taken the name of Michael, and that he exists as a spirit creature.

If that sounds a little far out, tie into Christian Science and see if you can make heads or tails out of it! Mrs. Eddy wrote that Christ was an idea. "The Virgin-mother conceived the idea of God, and gave to her ideal the name of Jesus." It is a little difficult for me to believe that the angel of God appeared to Joseph and told him to take Mary and her idea and flee into Egypt. But perhaps we should remember that Mrs. Eddy said, "The spiritual Christ was infallible; Jesus, as material manhood, was not Christ."

I am opposed to both cults and sects, but I know the difference between those who deny the elemental truths of revelation and those who cling to them while allowing themselves to be fragmented and segmented into parties over the interpretation of some peripheral matter. I do not believe that any party or sect is the church of God, and I do not believe that the church of God is a sect.

Sects were formed when men exalted opinions and deductions of and from the scriptures above the scriptures themselves. Brilliant and devout men who read the Word reached conclusions about implications or inferences and propounded these with such force and regularity that men began to plead allegiance to these things and exalted them to terms of communion or fellowship, and parties were formed to propagate, protect and preserve their views. Sects are not created by propounding the scriptures but by promoting distinctives and peculiarities. All sects are historical developments which have arisen in time as men gained prominence by emphasis of certain ideas.

It is believers in Christ who are separated into sects and that there are Christians among the sects I have not the least doubt. One may be in a sect without being sectarian, and he can be sectarian without being in a sect. Sectarianism is a spirit or attitude toward truth and others, and a man is sectarian before he forms a sect. If he were not he would never form a sect. Sects divide those who ought to work together and labor as a unit for advancement of the rule of heaven over the domain of human hearts. They set those who should be an advancing army against one another and fracture into warring tribes those who should conduct themselves as brethren.

Wherever my Father has a child I have a brother or sister, and I intend to recognize as my brothers and sisters all of God's children regardless of the theological corral in which they are caught up. I think there is a way in which we can all exhibit that oneness which is a divine gift to us in Christ, without giving up a single truth we have ever held. I would not unite with any person upon this earth if the terms of such union required the surrender of any truth, or of any principle which I sincerely regarded as truth. Conversely, I would not demand of any person that he relinquish anything he deemed to be truth in order to be one with me. Any person who would sacrifice one thing he held to be truth in order to be one with me, would prove thereby that he would prefer my favor to the blessing of God.

I must be as eager in defending the liberty in Christ for others as I am in demanding it for myself. If I deny the right of another to approach the revelation of God for himself, I make my insistence upon that right for myself a farce. But if I urge another to study the word personally and then deny him the right to reach his own conclusions, I make liberty a laughing-stock and imagine my own interpretation to be infallible and binding upon everyone.

As I view it, no historical movement in our time embraces all of the saved who are in Christ Jesus. Calling such a movement “Church of Christ,” “Church of God,” or “Christian Church,” does not alter the fact. There are a number of parties designated “Church of God” and they do not even recognize one another. The same thing is true of those using the designation “Church of Christ.” The segment of the historical reform movement which does not employ instruments of music in its public praise service is one of the most divided on the contemporary American scene. All of the warring factions are composed of good men and women, but their plea for unity in the religious world has no appeal except to those who are ignorant of their own frightful fragmentation.

One cannot long be a Christian only if he subscribes to the exclusivist particularities of any sect or party. The very act of becoming a defender of such peculiarities as terms of union or communion, or as tests of fellowship, makes him a particular kind of Christian. In my own case, caught up in the beauty of the plea for all men to be merely Christians, and Christians only, and thinking at the time that the church had to be denominated or named, I cast my youthful lot with “The Church of Christ.” I soon learned all the tricks such as spelling church with a small “c,” but I also learned that I was expected to be a “Church of Christ Christian,” which I now realize is as sectarian as claiming to be a Baptist Christian or a Mennonite Christian. Hyphenated Christians are the inevitable result of the party spirit, regardless of the matter around which the party coalesces.

I thank God who has delivered me so that I can be what I always wanted to be, a Christian only, nothing more, nothing less, and nothing else. This presents some problems to those “Christians only” who think that only those who gather behind a certain signboard can qualify. But I praise God that I now trust in the Savior and not in one of the official “signs of the times.” I have not changed my mind about the convictions I held. I still hold them. But I have changed my mind about the extent and constituency of the family of my Father. I have certainly changed my thinking about fellowship and brotherhood.

We are fortunate to live in a day when creeds are losing their hold over men. Religious formulae no longer command implicit allegiance. Traditions exercise no real power to hold men confined in partisan structures. This is a propitious time to plead for renewal through recovery of the apostolic proclamation, purpose and power. One whose only creed is Christ has an open door to enter in and plead for unity based upon the apostolic testimony.

I am firmly committed to going anywhere that the Spirit opens up an effectual door to share my faith, hope and knowledge. If a Roman Catholic convocation does not want to hear me, its officials had better not invite me. If the World Council of Churches does not want to hear my views, they should not issue an invitation. I will not only go and speak, but I will go and listen, for learning is never a one-way street. I will cut across sectarian barriers, climb over sectarian walls, and batter down sectarian obstructions.

I am opposed to all sectarianism. I am opposed to our own party spirit as well as that of others. I want not only to be in Christ but I want to be identified with Him. I want to proclaim peace as He did. I want to proclaim it to those who are afar off and to those who are nigh. With me, Jesus is Lord. He is Lord of all. He has broken down the walls. He has removed the partitions by His blood.

Let the religious parties cease to call themselves churches. They are not churches at all. There is only one church. There never was but one. There never will be another. The church is the community of the called out ones. Every person on this earth who has been called out of the dominion of sin is in the church. Every saved person on earth is in it. There is no such thing as the Baptist Church. There is no such thing as the Methodist Church. There is no such thing as the Presbyterian Church. There is no such thing as a Church of Christ, existing as a separate party and not containing all of the ransomed and redeemed. No exclusivist organization is the ekklesia of God. The body of Christ is not an earthly organization. It is a heavenly organism.

In this strife-torn world of ours the children of God are scattered. There are Christians in the sects, divine offspring separated and severed from each other by dogmatism, tradition and teaching. I love them all. I deplore their division. I detest the Great Deceiver who has driven wedges to split us. But our condition is post-apostolic. The twelve did not face it, and while they expressed principles of unity they did not directly regulate our conduct and action in such a situation as we confront. We must prayerfully study and carefully apply the principles, always realizing there is no ideal solution which will immediately erase centuries of coldness and unconcern.

Before I leave this phase of my discussion I want it known that I am resolved never to be a party to, or encourage another division among the saints. It is silly to think we can unite by dividing. It is absurd to argue that we can best serve God by acting contrary to His word. It is ridiculous to stand up and plead for one body while trying to create others composed of men and women who exist in haughty arrogance apart from God's other children. My approach will be that stated by Alexander Campbell in his "Debate on Human Creeds" with the eminent Presbyterian, N. L. Rice. I think it is one of the most significant statements I have ever read, and I make no apology for quoting it.

"It is not the object of our efforts to make men think alike on a thousand themes. Let men think as they please on any matters of human opinion, and upon 'doctrines of religion,' provided only they hold the head Christ, and keep his commandments. I have learned, not only the theory, but the fact, that if you wish opinionism to cease or subside, you must not call up and debate every thing that men think or say. You may debate anything into consequence, or you may, by a dignified silence, waste it into oblivion. I have known innumerable instances of persons outliving their opinions, and erroneous reasonings, and even sometimes forgetting the modes of reasoning by which they had embraced or sustained them. This was the natural result of the philosophy of letting them alone. In this way, they came to be of one mind in all points in which unity of thought is desirable, in order to unity of worship and of action.” I heartily concur with this statement.

THE PURPOSE OF PAUL

I have taken a long route “around Robin Hood’s barn” in order to arrive at the place where I can resume what I started out to do. I shall say again that most of our brethren use the apostolic expressions relative to the unity of the body to draw a line of demarcation between their own religious community and what they refer to as “the denominations,” which have come into existence historically through other circumstances and by the efforts of other human religious thinkers and leaders. The passages were not written in such a context.

Paul was not contrasting “The Church of Christ” with other parties made up of believers in the same Christ. He was asserting that there is one body to encourage all who were in it to function in harmony and as a unit. Divergent gifts were not to be used without regard to other gifts. Each was to complement and supplement the other. Consider, for example, the well-known passage in Romans 12:4-8.

“For as in one body we have many members, and all the members do not have the same function, so we, though many, are one body in Christ, and individually members one of another. Having gifts that differ according to the grace given to us, let us use them: if prophecy, in proportion to our faith; if service, in our serving; he who teaches, in his teaching; he who exhorts, in his exhortation; he who contributes, in liberality; he who gives aid, with zeal; he who does acts of mercy, with cheerfulness.”

The use of the physical body to illustrate the nature of the spiritual body of Christ is a fortunate choice. Some of my readers will recall an article of mine a few years ago in which I took the position that nothing in the material realm can ever perfectly illustrate something on a higher plane. At the time I pointed out certain differences in the physical and spiritual bodies. But the Spirit selected an apt analogy for our edification in the area which Paul discusses.

The body of man and the body of Christ are both divine creations. Both were intended to fulfill a divine purpose. Both have been abused by man and often diverted from the intent of the Maker. But there is no more apt illustration of an organism functioning as a unit than the human body. It is a grand demonstration of unity in diversity. It has many members but they are diverse from one another. It has many gifts and many functions, but the gifts and functions are divergent. If there were no diversity there could be no body. This is the argument of the apostle himself in 1 Corinthians 12:19, “If all were a single organ, where would the body be?”

In one body we have many members. The word for member is melos. It occurs 34 times but is never once used in conjunction with an organization or institution in which one holds membership. I do not think the Greeks even had a word for such kind of membership. The word melos means a limb or organ. It is used to designate a functioning part of a living and vital organism. It is always employed in the scriptures in direct relationship to a body.

We freely talk about “members of the church,” but no apostle ever used such an expression. You will search your concordance in vain to find even a semblance of “church membership.” As we use the expression, we generally think of the church as an organization in which one has secured and holds “membership.” My arm did not become a member of my body by applying for membership. My eye is not a part of my body because it has been placed on a membership roll. It does not appear under “e” in a card file. You cannot call up a secretary and say, “Run through the roster and see if my left leg is a member in good standing.”

If you will pardon me, I would like to suggest that it is sort of inane to ask “Of what church are you a member?” Such a question reveals two things. It demonstrates that you think there is more than one church, and it also reveals your own sectarianism. Moreover, it illustrates that you use the word “member” as no holy apostle ever used it. It appears that Alexander Campbell was right when he included in his “Synopsis of Reform,” the recapture of the vocabulary of the Holy Spirit.

Every time the word member is used it refers to an organ in a body, and the body of Christ embraces every individual on this earth who is in Christ Jesus. There is not a saved person in the world who is not in the body, and any group, segment or splinter, which does not embrace every one of the ransomed and redeemed is too small and restricted to be the body. The moment you admit that there are saved persons outside the group with which you are affiliated you admit that such a group is a sect. You may argue to high heaven that you are not in a sect but your argument will not alter the fact. This does not mean that you have to be a sectarian, although it could very well mean that it will be more difficult to not be one.

A sectarian is one who thinks the grace of God is limited to the party with which he is identified. He may think it was the grace of God which created the faction, and, what is even worse, he may think that the grace of God is now dependent upon and mediated by that party. If he designates the party “The Church of Christ,” he will almost certainly feel that way. Trapped by his own semantics he will probably think that if you are not in a party which calls itself “Church of Christ,” you are not in Christ.

Members of such parties always resort to all kinds of tactics to help them ignore or forget their historical origin. Factions which had their birth a few years ago as the result of an unseemly public squabble will inscribe on the cornerstone of their earthly temples— Established 33 A.D. Sermon outlines cleverly ignore all that has happened for a couple of thousand years and go back and tie on to Pentecost and make a good case for the work of the apostles. The error is in the assumption that what we have evolved is identical with what the apostles planted. Many of the brethren have an idea that the one body was a train which disappeared in a tunnel in the days of Constantine and did not come out until 1809 when it again appeared chugging and puffing with good Presbyterians acting as engineer and fireman, shoveling in the coal to get up steam and keeping it on the rails until they could turn it over to us.

Nothing would surprise the apostles more than to be brought back and forced to attend at “The Church of Christ” some Sunday morning. They would not recognize it as having any relationship to any previous experience. Paul would probably get a bang out of a sign reading “Church of Christ— Romans 16:16.” At the time he wrote that “the Christian communities send greetings” there was no 16:16, and he never gave “book, chapter and verse.” If Peter and John went up to one of “our temples” at “the hour of prayer,” they might promise God that if he would forgive them for coming this time, they would never do it again.

All of this does not upset me the least bit. I can “discern the Body,” now that the scales have fallen from my eyes. I know that while it is the ekklesia of God it is not circumscribed in the last quarter of the twentieth century by that indigenous American institution “the Church of Christ” which grew out of the attempt by humble Presbyterians to “unite the Christians in all of the sects.” Baptism is not a divine rite granted only as a term of admission to “The Church of Christ,” and God has not given a special copyright on it to our movement. “By one Spirit we are all baptized into one body,” but that body is not limited to a historic movement calling itself “The Church of Christ.” Church of Christ baptism, Baptist baptism, and Church of God baptism are all in the same category as far as I am concerned. I am glad that God ignores them all and receives into one body every sincere immersed believer who validates his faith in Jesus by this action, regardless of the sectarian intention of the human administrator.

All members have not the same function. But they all have some function. In the physical body there are no useless organs. God designed the body and He did not include any members which were parasites and just going along for the ride. I have lived long enough to see some pretty important changes in the thinking of anatomists and physiologists. When Darwin started “monkeying round” and wrote The Origin of Species in 1851, and The Descent of Man in 1871, he laid the groundwork for a lot of speculation. I hit town less than forty years after the last book and by the time I was in school a lot of people were trying to prove that Darwin was correct in reverse by making monkeys out of themselves. A lot of them were well qualified to start with.

I heard a lot about vestigial organs which were once essential to lower forms of animals but which had been outgrown by man as he further developed. Country surgeons would remove such organs at the drop of a hat if they could enter you in a hospital. That wasn’t easy because hospitals charged about four dollars per day. Things have changed. Modern medical science has determined that while we can exist without some parts of the body we cannot exist as well. And while a lot of anatomists are still evolutionists, and vice versa, Darwin has been laid on the top shelf in the closet and pushed back into a dark corner. A lot of things which used to be blamed on apes are now credited to sin.

I don't think a lot of what Paul said about functioning members of the physical body has ever penetrated the consciousness of some of the members of the spiritual organism. If your arms and legs did not do any more than some of the Lord's arms and legs you couldn't even make it to the table. A lot of them do not. I am glad the members of my body don't whine, complain and take on about the others like a lot of members of the one body whom I know. If they did I would have to eat Bufferin like I now eat lima beans, one of nature's great gifts.

As the old covenant penman wrote, "Once I was young, now I am old," but I have never known one of my arms to become offended at the other one, and drop off on the way to the post office because it just could not stand associating with its companion. What if your tongue had to go to your feet every couple of weeks and quote scripture to them and exhort them to get up and get moving? Suppose one of my hands got miffed at the other one because it received mention in the bulletin, when everyone knew that the miffed one actually did more than the unmiffed one? What if one of my ears "unhooked and took out" as a rural brother expressed it when one of the elders went over the hill?

I recognize there is a difference. The members of my physical body function together as an organism because they are all directed by the same head. They do not pool their resources and hire the tongue to work out a program at which they can grumble, nor do they have to listen to that linguistic member lay down the law to them once a week in order to fulfill his contract. It could be that we have been so anxious to develop a system which will outshine that of the Baptists and Methodists down the street that we have organized ourselves for the sectarian rat race, and a lot of our rats just don't want to run. Maybe we should get out of the partisan rat race altogether and run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus.

Did you ever notice how Paul introduces the Roman passage dealing with the one body? He does it by urging all of us to think. He tells us how to think and how not to think. Unfortunately, a lot of us get the instructions scrambled and end up thinking as we ought not, and not thinking as we ought to. Since the instruction grew out of the apostolic grace we should get our eyes uncrossed and look at it again. "For by the grace given to me I bid everyone among you not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think, but to think with sober judgment, each according to the measure of faith which God has assigned him." With this, he plunges directly into the subject of body function, with the words, "For as in one body we have many members."

The way to recapture the ideal of God is by thinking. It is not by having someone think for us, or for the body. Please note the two expressions "every one among you" and "each." It is good to have "rap sessions" and "sharing sessions," but if I want to supply what is lacking in my own life I am going to have to sit down and think through the situation for myself. I do this a great deal. Sometimes I do it while on a plane flight. Sometimes I do it while driving by myself. Many times I do it at night while lying in bed, or early in the morning before I arise. Thomas á Kempis wrote in The Imitation of Christ, "If thou may not continually gather thyself together, do it some time at least once a day, morning or evening." I like to gather myself together. It certainly beats "coming apart at the seams."

It is very important that I do not value myself too highly. All of the members of the body are valuable. The way to avoid schism or discord in the body is not to give special attention to the more presentable parts who do not require it. "But God has so adjusted the body, giving the greater honor to the inferior part, that there may be no discord in the body” (1 Cor. 12:24, 25). I should not devalue myself, or undervalue myself, for that is no more correct thinking than to think of myself more highly than I ought to think. If I have a morbid air of disparagement I cannot work with others. If I have an exalted sense of personal importance they cannot work with me. An under-inflated balloon cannot ascend, an over-inflated balloon will burst. My role must not be to work people but to work with people!

The term for “sober judgment” literally means “out of a desire to act wisely or with prudence.” My thinking must have a goal as well as a motivation. A lot of people are like the statue of The Thinker. They sit with chin in hand as if carved out of rock but never get up and do anything. The purpose of thinking is to inspire proper action. It was the French writer, Paul Bourget, who said, “One must live the way one thinks, or end up thinking the way one has lived.”

Paul declares that each must think “according to the measure of faith which God has assigned him.” We do not all have the same measure. The faith here referred to is not that which comes from hearing the word of Christ. It is not the faith which justifies or saves. Instead, it is the gift or assignment of God to enable one to use any gift which God has bestowed, whether we designate it a natural or supernatural gift. God does not make such a distinction.

GIFTS OF GRACE

Every gift of God brings with it a responsibility. No gift is purposeless. Gifts and functions are inseparable. Every ability must result in an activity comparable to that ability. Responsibility is simply the ability to respond. God not only supplies the gift, and through it assigns the function required of us, but He also supplies the power, the inner measure of faith required to fulfill that function. But the gift, function and power must be voluntarily employed. All are available through God's grace, but that grace does not compel.

That is why each one of us must think. If God forced us into a pattern, or turned on the power and set our wheels in motion, we would be machines. But machines are both thinkless and thankless. That is why I am not too "hep" on folks who get in a big dither when everyone starts praying at once, and the confusion is punctuated by shouts, and they jump around and flutter their hands, and roll their eyeballs, and claim they can't help it. I've found out that a lot of them can be turned off when "the shouting and the tumult dies" about as easy as they can be turned on when the pump is primed and the chain is pulled, or somebody turns the crank. We need a lot of pretty sober thinking about our gifts and functions.

My physical body would not be serving the purpose for which God created it if I went into an emotional frenzy and jumped up and down as if I had a hornet up my pant leg, and all my members were quaking and shaking as if they had the Saint Vitus' Dance. My eyes serve their function, not by rolling around in frenzy but by seeing needs and taking them to heart. My mouth serves its function not by yelling, shouting and screaming like a banshee, but by speaking unto men to edification, exhortation and comfort. If the members of the body of Christ are to think in sober judgment, it is my judgment they will serve the cause better by acting like the members of the physical body of Christ when He was among us on the earth.

Although Jesus possessed the Spirit without measure, there is no indication that He shouted and screamed and frothed at the mouth, or lay down and kicked on the floor, or engaged in any kind of religious antics. Instead, "he went about doing good." I think the spiritual body of Jesus is to carry on the work He inaugurated while in the physical body. We are now His eyes, his hands and his feet on earth. We are to act in the spiritual body as he acted in a material body. His methods were so gentle and unobtrusive that they would not break a bruised reed or extinguish smouldering tow. It was distinctly said “He will not wrangle or cry aloud, nor will anyone hear his voice in the streets” (Matthew 12:9). That means He did not yell until people outside the building could hear him. He did not even take a brass band along “to get their attention,” nor wear them out with “special music” until they were too tired to listen when He finally got up to speak. Maybe we ought to take to heart the admonition to “think with sober judgment” about some of the tactics that are used today.

There is a beautiful expression occurring in Romans 12:5. Paul must have liked it because he used it again in Ephesians 4:25. In the first place he employed it to emphasize that we are a unit because we are “individually members one of another.” In the second place he used it to encourage the saints to quit lying and to speak the truth “for we are members one of another.” There was about as much difference between Rome and Ephesus as there is between Washington and Los Angeles. But the colony of heaven in each place was the same. It was composed of the fellowship of the called-out ones, created after the likeness of God in true righteousness and holiness.

They were not only members of the body of Christ, but members one of another. They were not simply tied together but they were knit together, intertwined as members of a divine organism. No one belonged only to himself. No one could simply do his own thing. True, they were still individuals, but they were “individually members one of another.” I am not sure that those of us who have cut our eyeteeth on “rugged individualism” can even understand or appreciate the force of the word “another” in the expression “one of another.” We are so hooked on the “one” and so high on individualism that we cannot see the “another.”

There is an expression in 1 Samuel 25:29 which better dramatizes the relationship I sustain to others of God’s redeemed than any other of which I know. It was used by Abigail who made an eloquent plea to David, “The soul of my lord will be bound in the bundle of life with the Lord thy God.” God has reached out into the field of the world and gathered in the waving grain. He has bound me in the bundle of life with every other person in the universe saved by grace. So closely am I bound with them the world cannot tell us apart.

We are members of one body and members one of another. I am linked with the whole company of those who believe, regardless of where they are. This is the Lord’s doing and it is marvelous in my eyes. I expect to demonstrate the oneness of the Spirit openly and overtly. I am not “a secret disciple for fear of the Jews.” I am for Jesus publicly and I intend to publicly receive and recognize every child of God. I am sick and tired of the whole sorry sectarian scheme of things and I intend to have no part in it, God being my helper!

I am glad Paul wrote what we designate Romans 12:3-8. I am thrilled that he told us we need to think, and informed us how to do it. I am happy that he made it clear that we have divergent gifts and functions. We are not all the same. We are not assembly-line saints. We are not products of a divine cookie-cutter. We are not robots or automatons. The fact we cannot do what others do is no excuse to evade doing what we can do. We are not called to duplicate others but to imitate Jesus.

“Having gifts that differ according to the grace given to us, let us use them.” This is the admonition given in Romans 12:6. The word for gifts is charismata. It is the word from which we get the term charismatic which has been so much in vogue the past several years. The charismata, or gifts of grace, are enumerated. Paul mentions seven of the gifts— prophecy, service, teaching, exhortation, contributing, giving aid, and rendering acts of mercy.

It is for this reason that it seems a little silly to talk of any era as “a charismatic age.” There is no such thing as a charismatic age for the simple reason that there is no such thing as a non-charismatic age. The body has always functioned through charismata, or gifts. I’m constantly running into someone who shows his ignorance by saying “I’m charismatic!” Aside from the questionable usage of the word, which I overlook for the moment, it is ridiculous to think because someone has a charism he is different from others in the body. Paul implies that “every one of you” has a gift.

It is sort of tragic that people get betrayed into limiting the terminology of the Spirit to a specific experience and immediately conclude that others who have not had the same experience are still in the spiritual woods and lost in the sticks. Most of those who identify themselves as charismatic are thinking of what is called “speaking in tongues,” although the saints in Rome would never have known from Paul’s list to them that this was one of the charismata. Even if he had mentioned it to them they would never have guessed everyone was to have it, since Paul said, “Having charismata that differ.”

I wouldn’t be surprised but what a congregation that busied itself using the charismata he did mention would be in fairly good shape. The seven items seem quite practical, and if the gifts were used in the framework of the rest of the chapter we could capture the community even if everyone spoke only English. I have no intention of denying, or even questioning, the experience of any of my brothers or sisters, but I want to go on record as saying that if it does not lead them to function in harmony with the other saints who prophesy, teach, exhort, contribute, extend aid and perform acts of mercy, they should take a second look at the experience.

It seems to me that if there was an obligation of those who had the seven gifts in Rome to use them, there was an obligation on the part of the congregation in Rome to provide a framework and atmosphere in which they could be used. It would seem a little presumptuous upon the part of Paul to insist that “every one among you” exercise his gift and then condone setting up a system in which they could not be used.

I hold that the purpose of the congregation of saints is to encourage the development of every member to his fullest or maximum potential. Any congregation which stifles or sublimates any gift God has bestowed upon any person is acting in opposition to God’s purpose or design. To make any gift useless which God has given to use, is to frustrate the grace of God.

The congregation is not created to erect temples of brick and stone, or to make a name for itself. It is not created to save the world. The church is not a savior. It has to be saved. “Christ is the head of the church, his body, and is himself its Savior” (Ephesians 5:23). The church is a fellowship, a family circle in which each person is to grow up to maturity in Christ.

When congregational shepherds meet together to discuss needs they should plan to utilize every gift possessed by the saints. This is the reason the apostle writes about the one body. He was not providing a club for restoration movement debaters to use in clobbering Baptists, Pentecostals, or Presbyterians. His thesis was that since there is but one body, and all are members of it, they should function together and in harmony.

The Baptists are not “another body” as Paul used the term body. The Presbyterians are not “another body” as he used the term body. The Mennonites are not “another body” as he used the term body. They are not bodies and they are not churches. They are sects and it will not serve God’s purpose to create another sect in the hope that we can make it bigger and better by arguing and debating everyone into it.

What we must do is to provide an opportunity for every child of God on this earth to develop the gift with which God has blest him. We are not in the business of encouraging Baptists, Pentecostals or Presbyterians, but members of the one body. If there are members of the one body in these sects, and I certainly think there are, we must strengthen their commitment to the Lord Jesus Christ. But to do that we must be Christians only. I mean really and truly. There is a temptation to be Church of Christ Christians, but if the devil catches us on that hook we will be as sectarian and exclusive as any other sect.

The one body in Saint Louis contains within it every member whom God has added to it. I do not know them all. It is not necessary that I do, much as it would thrill me if I could. But “the Lord knoweth them that are His.” I do know that while the Lord added them to one body, a lot of them added themselves to something else. In our mixed-up and fragmented world it is difficult not to do that. There are always plenty of people around trying to “line you up” or get you into their partisan corner. The air is full of “Come with us,” or “Take your stand.” But I will not be moved by cries of “Lo, here” or “Lo, there!” I am not going to line up with any party or sect!

If we would all stay just where God placed us and never allow anyone to enroll us in a crusade to propagandize for some peripheral matter, regardless of our opinion about it, we would be better off. But there are some pretty shrewd operators around, writing tracts, speaking on radio stations, and plugging for converts to their personal campaigns. It is hard to stay out of their clutches and go down the freedom road.

We may be talked into thinking that the most important thing in the whole universe is to be right about “the thousand year reign.” Or, we may be conned into thinking that we must take a stand on the method of financing a television program, or having a kitchen in the basement of the meetinghouse. And when we take a stand and conclude that our stand is God’s will for us and every other person on this mundane footstool, we will conclude that those who do not see this earth-shaking question as we do are outside of God's will, and have crucified the Son of God afresh and put Him to an open shame.

Our brainchildren are like our fleshly offspring. They are the most precious things on earth. Our fleshly children may appear spoiled brats to the neighbors across the street, and our brainchildren may seem like wild fanatical notions to other folk who prefer their own, but to us they are dearly beloved. I cherish my own thinking of course, but I would no more impose it upon others than I would dump my children on the neighbors.

I expect to keep my children to myself and I will do the same with my opinions. I may occasionally get out the pictures of the children and show them to the neighbors but I do not expect them to get them enlarged and framed to hang in their family rooms. When I express my opinions, as I have some of them in this article, it never bothers me if my readers do not hail them as the greatest writing since the days of Alexander Campbell. It would bother me if they did, but it would bother Alexander Campbell a lot more if he knew it.

I am going to be myself. I am going to belong to Jesus, and only to Him. I am not going to get uptight and lean out of the upstairs window and fire both barrels at some brother who looses a journalistic broadside at me. I am in the one body and that's enough for me. Our unity is in Christ. It never was anywhere else and never will be. I expect to live in that body while I live and die in it when I die. I am happy, contented, and overjoyed while I wait for the glory that shall be revealed. Why not come along?

No Discord

Mission Messenger (July 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

The best illustration, of the unity we have in Christ Jesus is that of the body, and the fullest exposition of this illustration is found in 1 Corinthians 12. This chapter is one of a remarkable triad in which Paul deals with the use and abuse of gifts bestowed by the Spirit. It is interesting to remember that if the Corinthian saints had not become hung up on gifts, especially the gift of various kinds of tongues, these three chapters would probably not have been written. If they had not been penned we would have been without the beautiful thirteenth chapter and would not have known that love is the more excellent way. None of us are glad the Corinthian disciples became embroiled in confusion but I am pleased that God took advantage of their chaotic state to reveal some of the most beautiful truths I have ever read.

The King James Version begins the section with the statement, “Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant.” The word gifts is in italic letters. This signifies there is no word for it in the Greek text. It was added by the translators because they deemed it to be essential to make good sense in the reading. I think the context justifies insertion of the word “gifts” but Paul is actually talking about “spirituals” and the term may apply to anything which God has bestowed through grace, and may include all of the information divulged about the body and its nature. The body itself is a gift from one standpoint.

It is clear from Paul's preliminary statements that there are some things that are one, while there are other things that are varied and different. It is thus by the will of God and not as a result of caprice. There is only one Spirit, but the gifts of the Spirit are diverse. There is only one God, but the workings and operations which He authorizes are many and varied. There is one Lord, but the services for which He empowers are many. There is one body, but the functions performed by its organs are not all alike.

Nature itself is one grand demonstration of unity in diversity. The human body, as the highest creation in the natural realm, is a showcase of this fact. The spiritual body of Christ is the most profound exhibition of all. Unity in diversity is the divine order in the whole universe. One who tries to inaugurate conformity in what God has made diverse, sins as certainly as he who would seek to separate and divide that which God has made one.

The Spirit manifests himself in different ways to different persons. Gifts are not given indiscriminately. They are bestowed upon those who can use them. And they are not to be used selfishly, but for the benefit of the body. We are interrelated and there must be a correlation of our efforts. We must follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another (Romans 14:19). "Let everyone of us please his neighbor for his good to edification" (Romans 15:2). A gift without other gifts is virtually useless. The body without functional gifts is paralyzed and helpless.

The design of the body is to provide for the functioning of the gifts; the purpose of the gifts is to provide for the functioning of the body. The gifts are not the members, nor are they essential to the members becoming such. The gifts are enabling grants or powers providing for the easier and better fulfillment of the functions to be performed by the members. When properly utilized they make possible the fulfillment of the divine responsibility accruing from membership in the body.

We live in a realm of the physical and material, and in that realm Jesus works through members who are physical. Without members there would be no body, and without a spiritual body there would be no meaning to the work of Christ in the world. Rival bodies would only multiply problems rather than solve them. The situation would be greatly aggravated if such rival bodies all thought they were created by God and truly represented the divine purpose upon earth. The tactics employed by purely political parties are bad but they would be worse if such parties held the view that heaven established them to bring everyone on earth under their immediate partisan influence.

God only created one body. Regardless of the diversity of gifts and functions, and the gifts and functions are so many and varied we have probably not comprehended them all, there is but one body. Research institutes are working day and night in all parts of the earth in an attempt to understand the human body. That body has been here since Adam, and still we do not know all there is to know about its constitution. The spiritual body of Christ, as the new creation, has only been here since Jesus returned to the Father. We no doubt have much to learn about it, and as true scientists, we should be humbled by our remaining ignorance.

But we do know there is only one body. Jesus is not a freak or monstrosity. He is not a head with several bodies. "For as the body is one and has many members, and all members of the body, though many, are one body, so it is with Christ" (1 Cor. 12:12). This does not say "So it is with the body of Christ," but "So it is with Christ." Christ and the body are inseparable and indivisible. When you see the body you see Jesus. When the body is at work, Jesus is at work.

It is, therefore, important that I discern the body and never forget that it is one. Satan will seek to influence me into thinking that the body is fragmented because of the parties and factions formed by men, but I must look beyond these and realize that what men do can never undo what God has done. Those who are joined to Jesus as head are one body, and they are one body because they are joined to that one head. And so long as they are joined to Jesus they are one body regardless of external circumstances created by historical developments.

There may be racial and ethnic problems which indicate division. There may be social distinctions which still prevail and would seem to belie unity. But we are one in spite of them. “For by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body— Jews or Greeks, slaves or free— and all were made to drink of one Spirit.” Unfortunately, caught up in controversy over what is designated as “the baptism of the Holy Spirit,” we frequently become involved in the debate to the extent that we forget what the apostle was trying to prove.

Regardless of what is implied in the words, “by one Spirit we are all baptized,” there can be no disputing the fact that “we were all baptized into one body.” I take this very literally. I do not think that any person who is baptized under the motivation of the Spirit is ever baptized into anything except the one body. Those who immerse such a person may think they are baptizing him into a sect or party, but when one humbly and sincerely submits to the claim of Jesus upon his life, God overrides and overrules the sectarian intent and brings the earnest penitent believer into relationship with the head, even Christ. That is why grace is so marvelous and magnificent. It foils and frustrates the schemes of those who would divert a newborn babe into something less than the majestic family of God.

The institutional church which we have managed to create and regiment by our own human philosophy has a poor record in its history of dealing with racism. That is especially true of the “church” in any land where human slavery was once a way of life, and the flesh of men and women was bought and sold on the auction block. Any people ultimately suffer for the crime of treating persons as things or chattels. When such action is justified by quoting scripture to sustain it, the crime is augmented. To make it appear that the God of the universe is a respecter of persons and sanctions our sin is to imply that heaven is on the side of iniquity.

God is not a God of the Jews only. He is not a God of the Greeks only. Neither is He the God of the free only, nor of the slaves only. God knows nothing about “black churches” or “white churches.” Only sinful men separate and segregate His children for whom Christ died. The Spirit introduces them all into one body and sustains them all. “All were made to drink of one Spirit.” We prove we have been drinking at another fountain when we make racial and social distinctions. We are one in Christ!

For the body does not consist of one member but of many. If the foot should say, ‘Because I am not a hand, I do not belong to the body,’ that would not make it any less a part of the body. And if the ear should say, ‘Because I am not an eye, I do not belong to the body,’ that would not make it any less a part of the body. If the whole body were an eye, where would be the hearing? If the whole body were an ear, where would be the sense of smell?

It is impossible to conceive of a body which is made up of one great big eyeball. Even if you could concoct such a mental image such a body could not continue to exist. Without hearing it would be run over by a fire engine or struck by a train. Not one of the senses is expendable. Sight and hearing are both essential. So is the sense of smell. The organs cannot transfer their functions or gifts. If one “flacks out” the function ceases. You can no more do my work than you can hear with your eye or smell with your ear.

Fortunately, in the physical body the organs do not become jealous of one another. I have never had an eye sulk on the job or threaten to strike because I smelled a rose with my nose. Neither of my ears has ever picketed my body, or carried a sign “Unfair to audio members” because I put all my food into my mouth. It seems never to have occurred to them that I should put a peanut butter sandwich or a bowl of chicken noodle soup into my ears.

It is only in the spiritual body that members think because they are not allowed to do everything they should quit doing anything. They start grumbling and murmuring that the body is just for preachers. Some who are as ambitious as they are unqualified want to quit if they are not selected as bishops. They look upon the presbytery as an honorary political office rather than the hardest and most difficult function in the community of saints. They conceive of themselves as “running for office” rather than running with patience the race set before all of us.

I know men who are fairly affluent and who can buy about anything they want. The result is they want to be prominent among the saints and throw their weight around. They feel themselves about three rungs higher on the spiritual ladder than the rest of the disciples and they do not want to participate in what they consider menial tasks. They prefer to flaunt their talents and be acclaimed for exercise of their gifts. They are not so much concerned with walking in the light as they are with performing in the limelight. If they are publicly teaching they are all “gung ho” but if they are sitting in the class they yawn and look at their wrist watches periodically. It is all they can do to sacrifice their valuable time and sublimate their superior talent while humble brethren are trying to develop theirs. Men such as these need to go to the Great Physician and let him put them through the spiritual clinic. They need a prescription of equal parts of humility and long-suffering to be taken after each meal and just before retiring.

I have never had to pamper and brag on one of my eyes to keep it seeing. I have never had to pat an ear on the back and say, "That was a terrific job of hearing you just did, and you are every bit as good as my nose. I wish it could smell like you can hear." Neither of my hands has ever called me up on Saturday night to say, "I just wanted you to know I'll not be with you tomorrow." "What's the matter this time?" "Well, I don't feel like I'm really wanted. No one pays any attention to me. I work my fingers to the bone and I am ignored when the announcements are made. So I think I'll shop around a little and find a body where I feel more at home. Get someone else to take my place."

If the members of my physical body reacted like those in the body of Christ I'd "fall to staves." That is what is happening to many local manifestations (called congregations) of the body of Christ. Some of them consist of petulant, infantile, peevish and morose individuals who have never gotten past the spiritual incubator stage. They have to be petted, babied and coddled to keep them from throwing a whingding of a tantrum when things don't go their way. I know an old sister in Kansas who gets "bugged" every time she does some little trivial thing and the members do not all rush to the telephone and call her up and brag on her. Every time I see her she says, "I don't know what they'll do after I'm gone." Well, I know what they'll do, but I am not about to tell her!

But as it is, God arranged the organs in the body, each one of them as he chose. If all were a single organ, where would the body be? As it is there are many parts, yet one body.

I love that statement. So far as I am concerned it knocks the theory of evolution off of its usurped throne and banishes it to the primordial ooze from which life was supposed to have struggled into being after a few hundred million years. We arrived either by creation or by chance. So far as I am concerned if we did not come by creation, the "chances" are we would not have come at all. And if we did there's no telling what shape we would have been in when they knocked the side out of the crate and turned us loose.

This passage affirms design, order and arrangement. And it is divine! I like that "As it is!" "As it is, God arranged the organs in the body." That is why my ears stick out and my eyes are in sockets. If it had been left to chance my eyes might have stuck out where my ears are and when I cried I would have gotten the back of my shirt collar wet. Chance might have turned my nose up the other way and I would have drowned in the first rainstorm. I am glad God arranged it.

There were two creations. In the first man was made out of dust. In the second a body was made out of men. In the first men had members, in the second men were members. But in both cases God arranged the organs in the body and He did as He chose. That's a good thing. If he had left it to a vote like the Baptists used to do you might have lost out when they tallied the ballots and turned out to be an eye or chin detached from the body. There are many parts to the body but there are no parties in it. The Holy Spirit creates the parts but the factional spirit creates parties. There is as much difference between them as there is between Christ and Belial.

The eye cannot say to the hand, "I have no need of you," nor again the head to the feet "I have no need of you." On the contrary, the parts of the body which seem to be weaker are indispensable, and those parts of the body which we think less honorable we invest with greater honor, and our unpresentable parts are treated with greater modesty, which our more presentable parts do not require. But God has adjusted the body, giving the greater honor to the inferior part, that there may be no discord in the body, but that the members may have the same care for one another.

This introduces the opposite to the picture painted in verses 15 and 16. There the members who felt inferior were critical of those whom they deemed superior. They wanted to drop out because they could not function in the same way as others. Here those who are arrogant and supercilious deny any need of others whom they do not regard as essential to their welfare. But God says one cannot say to another that he is not needed. This does not mean it is physically impossible to verbalize such an idea. But the nature of the body as God has arranged it is such that there is an inter-dependency of the members which is so essential and unique that one member cannot divest himself of the need for others.

There are three kinds of parts mentioned for special concern— weaker, less honorable and unpresentable. In the physical body there are some parts which are always kept concealed or covered in public, some which are occasionally covered, and others which are exposed and not covered. Weaker parts are reassured in that they are designated as indispensable. They are not unnecessary because they are weak. The less honorable parts are actually invested with greater honor, while the unpresentable parts are treated with greater modesty. One does not buy an expensive suit to cover his hands or face.

Do you think there is, at least a subtle condemnation of the growing tendency toward nudity in this argument of the apostle? Are we seeing a return to the heathen disregard for modesty and proper shame since we have become again a pagan culture in the western world? Is the cry of revolutionary youth to “let it all hang out” a symptom of the blatant disregard for the guidelines of ethical and moral conduct enjoined by the new covenant Scriptures? The apostle regards some parts and organs of the body as unpresentable, that is, in the social circle. Does not undue exposure actually deny this admonition to treat such parts with greater modesty?

I hope you will not get uptight about my little stroll down a bypath. Certainly I realize the apostle was not giving a dissertation on dress nor zapping streakers and other crazy faddists. The real point is that no one in the body of Christ is unimportant and we must take special interest in those who think they are and bestow more time and honor upon them. This is probably the most difficult thing we have to do, and most of us utterly fail. We do not want to be around those whom we deem to be inept, bumbling, uncommunicative persons. They make us feel uncomfortable and ill at ease.

Generally we speak to them in passing and brush them off and hurry away to talk with someone whom we esteem to be brilliant, outgoing and able to enhance and polish our own image. In the analogy of Paul that is like powdering your face and forgetting to put your clothing on. The secret to avoiding discord in the body is to give greater honor to the inferior parts. If a top echelon associates together and ignores the “lesser members” the “lesser ones” will drop out, form an underground movement and plot how to get rid of the “big boys.” More congregations are split by forming cliques than anything else. This results primarily because we have ceased to be a family and have become “big business.”

In a lot of places if you are part of the “in group” you can do anything, but if you are not you can’t do anything. If you are one of the presentable parts you’ll get invited to play golf with the preacher and a couple of elders, if not, you can stay home and play tiddlywinks. But do not lose heart. When time comes to “make up the budget” you’ll suddenly become important and the brethren will visit you. I know one man who had never really been “accepted” until he casually let drop a hint that he was thinking of making a will and leaving his farm to the congregation. In the following three months he had elders dropping in to visit him that he didn’t even know were elders.

It really isn’t all that bad everywhere. There was a young couple of my acquaintance who were led to Christ in a large congregation. Not having been reared in the church, and not knowing how to act, they took Jesus seriously. Both the man and wife had advanced scholastic degrees and they were not “dumb clucks” if you’ll pardon the description. One night they read where Jesus said, “When you give a dinner, don’t invite your friends or your relatives or rich neighbors, lest they invite you in return, and you be repaid.” Then they read on, “But when you give a feast, invite the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind, and you will be blessed, because they cannot repay you. You will be paid at the resurrection of the just” (Luke 14:12-14).

They talked about that for a couple of hours before they retired and finally reached the conclusion that they had been given good jobs and a comfortable apartment to enable them to practice just what Jesus recommended. Out of this grew their own little private project which they came to call “sharing with the sheep in the shadows.” The brother explained it to me. He said that in a congregation such as theirs most of the people were always in the center of things, chatting and joking and back-slapping before and after the meetings. The ones who felt left out stepped in and sat down in a remote place or hovered on the fringes of the crowd.

They began to take these home with them. They did not fix anything elaborate because they never knew who would come, or if anyone would. She laughingly remarked that Jesus talked about “giving a feast,” so she thought of assorted cold cuts and potato salad as God’s feast. They evidently thought of me as a likely candidate for one who couldn’t pay so they asked me home with them on Sunday. They also had a couple of long-haired boys who had recently been found and rounded up by the Shepherd. There was also a woman from out of the city whose husband was in a local hospital, and an elderly widow who was virtually alone in the world. All of us were singularly blessed, although I got a bang out of the two boys who had never been around people like ourselves and unto whom “church talk” was sort of like an unknown tongue.

I know of a man whose only son was killed in an automobile crash on his way back to college after a term break vacation spent at home. The father assuaged his deep grief by helping boys in the congregation to find themselves. He has become a real friend and counsellor to a number of them. They know they can talk anything over with him and they trust him because he never violates a confidence. Several whom I know would probably have become spiritual drop-outs but for his genuine concern.

I guess I am a little like Jesus in that I get “bugged” by self-righteousness more than by most other things. I do not even like my own brand. A short time ago a crew of ripped-off long-haired kids came into my life and I began to work with them. One by one they were immersed into Christ although every one of them had a history of former drug addiction. A brother who has had it pretty easy in this affluent society, but who still gripes about it, asked, “How are you making out with the hippies?” I replied, “I haven’t seen one since 1965. What are you talking about?” He said, “These long-haired, sad-looking specimens that you have been meeting with.” I said, “Those are not specimens, they are children of God. You are talking about my brethren in the Lord.” He couldn’t let it go by without one more thrust “They look to me like something the cat dragged in.” I couldn’t stop either. I replied, “They look to me like someone the shepherd brought home.” Anyone who can’t tell a cat from a shepherd ought not to be too critical.

God’s ideal is for the members to have the same care one for another. That is the real secret of harmony. You can deliver dissertations on unity from the sanctity of the pulpit until Jesus comes, and it will mean nothing until the saints start caring. The question is not what is the world coming to, but when is the church coming to? Our immediate task is not to get the world out of its chaos but to get the church out of its coma. I have seen whole congregations changed by one person who cared what happened to others. H. D. Ward wrote, “It is a truth which stands out with startling distinctness on the pages of the New Testament, that God has no sons who are not servants.”

We show our concern for Christ by our care for one another. Regular attendance at religious exercises can never compensate for lack of exercise of genuine compassion. As Billy Sunday put it, “Going to church will no more make you a Christian than going to the garage will make you an automobile.” I do not recall who it was who made the wise observation that “We have too many saints in stained glass windows and not enough of them in shoe-leather.”

Perhaps there is no more poignant description of our mutual relationship in Christ than the statement, “If one member suffers, all suffer together; if one member is honored, all rejoice together.” This is not limited simply to those whom we see and greet on Sunday mornings. Our relationship in Christ is not circumscribed by time and place. It is not external. It is not limited to those in physical or geographical proximity. It also includes those like Jesus “whom having not seen we love.”

If a member of the body is wounded in Vietnam I feel the pain in my own body. If a husband loses his wife in Great Britain I share his grief. We should never be disturbed or feel bothered and put upon because someone in the loneliness of his loss sits down and writes us page after page describing the former relationship and the passing on of his loved one. We should feel honored that he looks to us for a sympathizing heart and a compassionate outreach. In such an atmosphere of sharing, his sorrow is assuaged and he finds strength to go on. Suffering is easier borne if someone shares it with us. We should look for opportunities to help. There is a Chinese proverb which says, “It is better to do a good deed near at home than to go far away to burn incense.”

It is probably easier to share suffering than honor. In our human predicament, with selfishness not wholly crucified, we can shed a tear for one who is deprived of that which is dear to him. In the case of special honor which comes to another we are liable to feel deprived ourselves and be led to envy rather than to rejoice. Such an attitude indicates that we are using the body relationship for personal gain and our motivation is all out of joint. We must pray for a sense of intimacy which will weld us together indissolubly so that we may not look upon our own welfare but upon that of others.

All of this sums up to the fact that we are one in Christ. We are one by an act of God rather than by our own personal action. We are in the fellowship because we have been called into it. We are together because we have been brought together. The body is not our creation, but God's creation. We best serve the divine purpose when we serve in harmony and strive to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow wrote, "All your strength is in union. All your danger is in discord." In the dark days of the American Revolution Benjamin Franklin uttered the memorable words, "We must indeed, all hang together, or most assuredly we shall all hang separately." Someone said, "Coming together is a beginning; keeping together is progress; working together is success."

In the one body we do not function together because it is the best way, for it is the only way. There is no other. Refusal of the members to work does not simply distress the body, it destroys it. I am glad that the apostle Paul used the human body as an illustration of the spiritual. We all have a body and we are all aware of what happens when members get out of joint or become paralyzed. If we truly love Jesus we will not become dissidents or drop-outs from the spiritual body.

We must all resolve firmly that we will never be a party to division in the body of our Lord, and we must all resolve just as firmly that we will work to repair those divisions which have already occurred. If we are to flow together the impediments which separate us must be removed. It is possible for us to demonstrate to the world that we are one in Christ but it will require the efforts of all of us to do it!

A Startling Proposal

Mission Messenger (July 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

It was Thomas Carlyle, the famous “Sage of Chelsea” who wrote: “Reform like charity must begin at home. Once well at home it will radiate outward, irrepressible, into all that we touch or handle, speak and work, ever kindling new light by incalculable contagion, spreading in geometric ratio, far and wide, doing only good where it spreads, and not evil.”

Although many of my readers will doubt it, and some will even dispute it, I think the opportunities for promoting the oneness for which Jesus prayed, are greater than they have been for many centuries. We seem to be drawing closer to another “fulness of the times” and there is an air of expectancy beginning to manifest itself which betokens only good if we can fan it into flame. We need courageous and dynamic leadership throughout our land to act as a catalytic agent to bring the scattered forces of the faith together.

I should like to see “Churches of Christ” supply the incentive to answer the prayer of Jesus for the oneness of all believers with new and daring approaches which will capture the attention and imagination of our day and focus them once more upon Jesus as the Lord of the whole life, and of this shrinking world of humanity. There are reasons why I think the brethren may have a greater hope of success than any other group on the contemporary scene. Because this proposal may seem so odd and far out as to provoke only laughter in some quarters, let me point out to you some of those reasons.

1. We began as “a project to unite the Christians in all of the sects,” as Alexander Campbell stated it. To reaffirm the validity of this labor of love under God would represent no departure from our position, but a return to it. Of all the historic groups still extant we should have the greatest incentive to cross over lines, remove walls and ignore barriers. This was our goal. It was our hope and our aim. We, of all people, should be thinking, planning, promoting and practicing unity in Christ.

2. We have historic ties with many of the sects still in existence. It was Presbyterians who launched the restoration movement in Cane Ridge, Kentucky; and Presbyterians who led out in Washington, Pennsylvania. But there were Methodists, like James O’Kelley, and Baptists like Elias Smith and Abner Jones, who preceded the Presbyterians, and who began the tributaries which flowed into the mainstream of the restoration ideal.

Our ties with the Baptists were so close that Alexander Campbell called his first journal The Christian Baptist. The reformers actually became identified with the Redstone and Mahoning Baptist Associations. Contrary to popular belief, it was the Baptists who thrust out the reformers. Alexander Campbell wrote: “After the Mahoning association appointed Mr. Walter Scott as an evangelist, in the year 1827, and when great numbers began to be immersed into Christ under his labors, and new churches began to be erected by him and other laborers in the field, did the Baptist associations begin to declare non-fellowship with the brethren of the reformation. Thus by constraint, not by choice, they were obliged to form societies out of those communities that split upon the ground of adherence to the apostles’ doctrine.”

It would not represent a reversal of policy but a resumption of it, if we sponsored another “Great Awakening” and sparked another “Cane Ridge Revival” in which men of divergent theological views could come together to proclaim the Christ. It was out of the very warmth resulting from the original Cane Ridge that devout and learned Presbyterians resolved to write The Last Will and Testament of the Springfield Presbytery, in which are included these words: “We will, that this body die, be dissolved, and sink into union with the Body of Christ at large.” Who knows but what, under the impetus and dynamic of the same spirit, other such testaments might be written which would gently consign other sectarian bodies to oblivion.

3. We do not need to secure permission from, or clearance by, a synod, central commission or hierarchy. Being congregational and autonomous, and not subject to control from any headquarters, each body of saints is free under God to propose and pursue any approach which is deemed scriptural and appropriate to resolving the problem of the sectarian spirit in its own community. Obviously, no one approach can be universally applicable, and brethren should prayerfully, fervently and eagerly implore the God of all grace, who is more interested in the unity of His people than anyone else, to give them insight into the course upon which they should proceed.

Groups of believers which have historic ties with “established churches” whether they be Roman, Anglican, or later Protestant associations, would find it more difficult to encourage unity on the basis of the sin of schism and the death of the sectarian spirit. The restoration movement has no real historic debts to “sects” or “isms” and the brethren are free to go forward without having to protect the rear or pay tribute to opinions which have crystallized into creeds.

Liberty can best be exemplified by those who walk in it, and it was liberty which helped to lead men from their confining littleness. Alexander Campbell wrote: “Such is the measure of light and liberty which I now enjoy under Jesus Christ, that I could unite in all Christian communion and cooperation with all the baptized believers in all the sects in America, so far as their opinions are considered; provided only, that they hold the head, Jesus; believing all the facts attested concerning him, and are obedient to his commands. And farther than this, we humbly conceive christian union, communion, and co-operation can never legitimately extend.” (The italics are those of Alexander Campbell.)

4. Historically, our brethren already have to their credit the actual union of two groups into one. It represented a reversal of the divisive trend of sectarianism when the Reformers and the Christians came together at Lexington, Kentucky, on New Year’s Day in 1832. There were great differences between them, but they resolved to regard them as in the realm of opinion, and not to advocate them as conditions of fellowship. One prominent historian, M. M. Davis, writes: “Love was the leading element in this glorious consummation. The people first became acquainted with each other; this acquaintance ripened into friendship, and this friendship into love. No amount of argument and information and exhortation in the absence of love could have wrought such results. Pieces of steel thrown together will touch each other, but they will not unite: but melt them, and they become one common whole.”

Dr. Robert Richardson wrote of this union that “the world was stirred as it has not been since the days of primitive Christianity.” What would happen in our generation if the heirs of those who effected this wonderful demonstration of the power of God to unite men of divergent thinking were to become the real unitive force among all who believe in Jesus through the apostolic testimony?

We need to have “another Lexington” to give renewed hope to our own age.

5. We have recaptured many values which are basic to any step toward uniting the Christians among the sects. Our people are not generally spiritually illiterate. The importance of the knowledge of the word of God has been stressed among us and we have a fair sense of recognition of the authority of Jesus over our lives on the basis of God's perfect revelation. Any unity which is brought about in answer to the prayer of Jesus must be achieved with those who believe on Him through the apostolic proclamation or word. We are in a better position than most religious communions to bring into any honest and open discussion of the problem of disunity among believers in Jesus a genuine scriptural foundation.

6. A sincere attempt to understand all believers and to promote a real thrust for unity may better come from us than from most others. We have been the most exclusive people in many communities, and have created an image of a hostile, arrogant and combative group with our hand against every man, and every man's hand against us. If we reverse our attitude and confess our error in allowing Satan to use us to divide rather than to unite, it will give the greatest impetus toward eventual unity since the days of Campbell and Stone. It will be a little like the conversion of Saul of Tarsus, whose radical change undoubtedly helped to bring about the spread of the Good News throughout the whole Gentile world.

7. In a few places the brethren have already demonstrated that it is possible to create a favorable atmosphere for further discussion with the entire religious community. I know of two congregations, both of them non-instrument Churches of Christ, which host monthly breakfasts for men of the community, particularly for the preachers. The sisters prepare and serve the meals and both meetings have been well attended by Catholic and Protestant clergy for several years. Although the discussion at both places is informally about the word of God, there has been no real investigation of what I am writing about, but the time may not have been ripe for that. I am not at all sure that "the clergy" will achieve a great deal in the field of real unity.

They may actually consider that it poses a threat to their financial security and that may be as true of “our clergy” as of others. No real movement for unity will ever be effective which does not involve the “grass roots” but the fact is that the “common people” in all of the sects, including our own, are sick of strife and saddened by schism and ready to “flow together” on the foundation of God’s precious word if permitted to do so.

There will, of course, be all kinds of objections to this bold suggestion that “Churches of Christ” actually take the lead in setting up meetings which will seek to involve the Christians in all of the sects, but most of these will result from traditional patterns of exclusivism, emotional hang-ups, or unnatural fears that truth will suffer in any encounter with error. But these are the very things which have created divisions and it is time to renounce them lest they perpetuate a state of affairs among believers which is intolerable to Him in whom we believe and “whom having not seen we love.”

1. It will be said that we should first settle our differences inside the restoration movement before we begin to project the dynamic of unity into the wider world of believers! Why? The restoration movement is not the body of Christ, and never was. Are believers in a movement which grew out of the consecrated thought and efforts of Scotch and Irish Presbyterians any more precious to the God of the universe than believers who grew out of the thought and efforts of Martin Luther, John Calvin and John Wesley?

Is it not possible that our real problem has been that we have waded too long in the shallows fishing for crawdads when we should have launched out into the deep? Can we let the city burn down and be destroyed while we continue to rearrange the furniture in our own living-room? Perhaps in the wider discussion of those things which have caused the greater chasms we can find an answer to the erosion creating little ditches in our own backyard. We need to rejoin the human family in its search for reality in Christ Jesus. As He came to bring the leaven of His presence for good to all, so must we.

2. It will be said that other believers will be suspicious of us and of our tactics and will regard any move we make as simply another ruse to gain access and proselyte. We must recognize the validity of this objection, regrettable though it is. Our approach to other believers in the past does not present a very creditable performance. We have openly and publicly attacked those who honestly differ with our understanding of the will of God for our lives. Sometimes the attacks have been crude and boorish. Our only approach to differences has been division and our only approach to division has been debate. We have no doubt driven from us as many as we have led to the Master.

But we cannot continue to act as troublemakers in a world which desperately needs peacemakers. While God is opening up a door unto us we must not continue to slam it shut in His face. It is time for a genuine reformation of attitude. We must be cast in the role of positive thinkers rather than negative. We have some real values to share and we should break the traditional bonds which enslave us and penetrate the whole religious complex with our witness.

3. It will be said that any attempt to relate to the whole sectarian world to inject a dynamic of peace will result in compromise. This need not be so at all. It overlooks the fact that the religious world is sick of its own sectarianism and is seeking a solution. It also represents a false concept that association betokens endorsement and that any verbal exchange of views must result in adoption of mistaken ideas. Our problem is that we have adopted and accepted a stance which is without scriptural warrant but which will condemn us to talk to ourselves about other people rather than talk to other people about ourselves, and the ideals which we hold.

We need to break out of our shell and assume the task which God has ordained for us. The world will not be won to believe in Christ until those who believe in Christ in the world are one. We hold enough in common with other believers to use as a foundation upon which to stand as we communicate. There are millions who believe that God raised up Jesus from the dead and made Him both Lord and Messiah. Their confession of this momentous fact represents my only creed. I should be willing to meet with anyone to discuss the implication of this momentous truth and the implementation of the Lord's will for our lives.

I am personally convinced that "Churches of Christ" in many localities could spark the greatest renewal of interest in the kingdom of heaven that has been since the days of Martin Luther. Because of cultural conditions in our day, much more favorable than those in Luther's day, it is my conviction that any genuine reformation would sweep the whole religious world and result in one of the greatest triumphs for the King in the annals of the faith.

When I speak of the "Churches of Christ" in this connection I have in mind the congregations of believers which do not employ instruments of music in conjunction with their public expressions of praise. For reasons I need not disclose as a supplement to those already mentioned, I think these disciples are in the most strategic position of anyone on earth in this final quarter of the twentieth century to spark a movement which could rapidly spread throughout the earth.

I want to see the brethren who "sigh for Jerusalem" catch a vision of what could be done and "launch their Mayflower, and steer boldly through the desperate winter sea, nor attempt the Future's portal with the Past's blood-rusted key." We have wallowed long enough in the slough of despond. It is time to start once more the ascent of the mountains of faith. Our fathers who crossed the "Jordan" had "Jerusalem" as their goal, but their heirs mistook Jericho for the city of the Most High.

Let us again shoulder our packs and begin the trek toward God's ideal, proclaiming the only hope of renewal, that which comes from recovery of the apostolic proclamation, purpose and power! The nineteenth century restoration movement made great strides in its inception. If we are to have a twentieth century renewal movement we must hurry. Time is running out! Let us take the lead in touching the life of every person who loves the Lord Jesus! For this we have been called to the kingdom!

The Apostolic Commission

Mission Messenger (July 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

Now the eleven disciples went to Galilee to the mountain to which Jesus had directed them. And when they saw him they worshiped him, but some doubted. And Jesus came and said to them, "All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to me. Go therefore and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all that I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, to the close of the age."

This is the final paragraph of the account of the Good News as penned by Matthew, a former imperial customs-officer at Capernaum, who abandoned his office and political appointment to follow Jesus of Nazareth. The quotation is as it appears in the Revised Standard Version, and it is an improvement over the rendering given by the scholars selected by King James to produce a revised version which he could authorize to be read in Anglican churches, of which he claimed to be the titular head.

The King James Version has Jesus saying, "All power is given unto me," but the original for power is exousia which properly refers to delegated authority. Universal authority belongs to the God of the universe. He bestowed it upon His Son when he was raised from the dead. The reign of Jesus is not timeless either as respects its commencement or termination. It will continue only until he has subdued all his enemies. The last one to be destroyed will be death. “God has put all things in subjection under his feet” (1 Cor. 15:27).

“Make disciples” is far better than “teach” as found in the King James Version. The original is the word for enlisting, enrolling or signing up students. It was a recruiting word, a term for soliciting and securing students to be taught in a scholastic institution.

On the night before his betrayal, Jesus informed his disciples that after he was raised up he would go before them into Galilee (Mark 14:28). Accordingly, the angel at the empty tomb told Mary Magdalene and the other Mary, to inform the disciples that they would see him in Galilee. On the way, Jesus met the women and said, “Go tell my brethren to go to Galilee and there they will see me.”

The eleven went to the mountain in Galilee which Jesus had previously pointed out as a meeting place. We do not know why he chose to give his authoritative instructions in Galilee, but it was familiar territory for the eleven, all of whom were Galileans. Jesus was born in Judea, and the only Judean among the apostles was Judas Iscariot. The last word is a form of Ish Keriath, meaning “man of Keriath,” a city in Judea. Judas was no longer with them.

There are a lot of conjectures about what Jesus said to the apostles upon this occasion, and a good deal of hazy thinking, as I view it. It is generally designated “the great commission,” but no inspired writer ever so referred to it, and the expression is certainly unscriptural, although it is not anti-scriptural. It is almost universally assumed that it was given to the church, and that we still operate under its terms, but a little calm reasoning will show that this assumption is without warrant and groundless. The church could not carry it out if it had been given the responsibility.

The fact is that it was given to individuals, the apostles, and they completely fulfilled it during their lifetime, as special ambassadors to every nation under heaven. It was the second commission given to them. The first was also given in Galilee. It was limited in scope because Jesus was not yet in authority. He was operating under authority. Since he was sent “only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel” (Matthew 15:24), he said to the apostles, “Go nowhere among the Gentiles, and enter no town of the Samaritans, but go rather to the lost sheep of Israel” (Matthew 10:5, 6). They accomplished that mission. “And they departed and went through the villages, preaching the gospel and healing everywhere” (Luke 9:6).

The second commission was given to the same group of men. The church is no more under it than under the first. The church had not even been planted when the apostles received the two commissions. Jesus had been raised from the dead before the second was given, and with universal authority he could direct his ambassadors to enroll disciples or followers from all nations. In order to do this they would need the ability to speak foreign languages which were new to them. God never commissions anyone to do a thing without empowering him to do it, so the ambassadors were empowered to address any people in their language.

Jesus associated intimately with the apostles whom he had chosen for forty days after his resurrection. He assured them they would receive the necessary power for universal testimony. He said, “You shall receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you; and you shall be my witnesses in Jerusalem and in all Judea and Samaria and to the end of the earth.” This was spoken only to the apostles and never to anyone else. Accordingly, when the Holy Spirit came upon them they received the power to equip them to communicate verbally with and to enroll disciples of all nations. “Devout men from every nation under heaven . . . each one heard them speaking in his own language” (Acts 2:5, 6).

The command to the ambassadors was to “Go into all the world and proclaim the good news to all creation.” Mark, who according to Eusebius, the father of church historians, wrote “the memoirs of Peter” said, “And they went forth and preached everywhere.” Jesus told them to go, and they went. The apostles had to fulfill their commission during their lifetime or they did not fulfill it at all. I am as firmly convinced they carried out the second commission as I am that they carried out the first.

When Paul wrote to the Romans, he affirmed, “So faith comes from what is heard, and what is heard comes by the preaching of Christ.” Then he asks, “Have they not heard?” His answer is, “Indeed they have, for their voice has gone out to all the earth, and their words to the ends of the world” (Romans 10:18). When he wrote the Colossians he specifically said the gospel had been preached to every creature under heaven (1:23). All the earth! The ends of the world! Every creature under heaven! This represents completion of the apostolic commission.

It had to be thus because Jesus declared that the gospel should be “preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations” before the destruction of Jerusalem and the end of the Jewish system of worship (Matthew 24:14). The God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob had selected Jerusalem as the center of His worship. The temple had been built at his authorization. His Shekinah, or glory, rested there. He was unwilling for all this to be destroyed by alien hands until every nation had ambassadorial notice that the rule of heaven had been established and the king had proclaimed, “Neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, shall men worship the Father.”

Jesus gave full instructions to his followers about what to do when Jerusalem was besieged by the Roman armies. In answer to the question of the apostles, “Tell us, when shall these things be?” he replied, “And the gospel of the kingdom will be preached throughout the world, as a testimony to all nations; and then the end will come.”

E. M. Zerr in his commentary says, “The end means the end of Jerusalem, as the climax of the war. That event occurred in 70 A.D., and the Gospel was to have been offered to all nations of the (civilized) world by that time. Hence the great commission of the apostles was fulfilled in the first century.”

B. W. Johnson, commenting on the statement of Jesus, writes, “The gospel was preached throughout the Roman empire, the world of the New Testament, before A.D. 70.” He says the end refers to the end of the Jewish state. Albert Barnes calls it, “The end of the Jewish economy. The destruction of the temple and city.” J. W. McGarvey, in his Commentary on Matthew and Mark has an explicit note which you should read in full. He says the end referred to the destruction of the temple, and that the gospel had been preached in all the world before that event. This has always been my position since I began the study of Matthew 24. I have read nothing to influence me to alter it.

To summarize, let me repeat again that the commission under consideration was not given to the church, but to the apostles as individuals. We do not operate under it, because it was fulfilled by those who were charged with it. Only those who were empowered to speak all the languages of the earth could go into all nations and proclaim the good news. I am quite convinced that the apostles could speak in other languages than those they had learned, and that these were new tongues to them. I am just as convinced that no one today can communicate with people in all languages, dialects and tongues, directly and without assistance. The apostles were unique. They were ambassadors of the King and I respect their authority as received from Him. As a matter-of-fact I am built upon them as a foundation with Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone.

The Delivered Faith

Mission Messenger (August 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

For quite some time I have been wanting to write about the letter which Jude sent to “the called who are beloved in God, and kept by Jesus Christ.” My reasons have been varied and fluctuate from day to day as I meditate upon what is contained in the twenty-five verses into which we have sliced the letter like so many pieces of luncheon meat for sandwiches.

I suspect that one reason I wanted to write on the letter is that few others do so. It is small and squeezed in between the three letters of John and his account of the apocalyptic visions on the island of Patmos. Jude is sometimes treated like a little boy at a parade, pushed into the rear row where he has to peer between the big people to see the honor guard stepping it off. Actually, of course, Jude is one of the “big people” and deserves a lot better billing than he receives in a lot of places.

Jude needs to be studied because of the way in which he deals with a crisis situation. He implies that he had been quite eager to write another kind of letter altogether, and may have been doing that very thing when he was made aware of a situation which impelled him to write the one we now have. I’m not sure he ever wrote the other one, but it does not make a great deal of difference. The one he did write is a tremendous one and the four-fold appeal it makes to believers is so rich and full I cannot get it off my mind.

Letters which are written in the heat of circumstances which cry aloud for action must not be easily dismissed. Perhaps a mother sits down to write her son an account of what has been transpiring around the old homestead when she receives word that her husband, the boy's father, has been involved in an automobile accident and is in the hospital. The few words she hastily scribbles down are not at all what she had planned to write.

Perhaps a soldier sits down in his room in a foreign barracks on a Sunday afternoon to write the folks back home when the alert sounds and the shouting and fire of the enemy is heard downstairs in the street. His letter will be a different one than he originally intended. That is what happened in the case of Jude. His is not a serene little letter of thanks such as Paul wrote to the Philippians. It is an air mail, special delivery, with directions for dealing with an emergency.

I like to read it because it deals with the gigantic problems faced by the infant community of the redeemed. They make our little squabbles seem like heated debates over whether to use Dixie Cups to serve the Kool-Aid at a local farm club meeting. The early saints had to contend with massive attack by giant evils. We are in danger of being nibbled to death by ducks, or of being run over by snails.

The fact that we shift into high gear and "vroom" around the track so wildly over some of the petty and trivial issues occupying our attention is proof of how far we have fallen. The devil does not need to call in the heavy guns if he can bowl us over with cream puffs or knock us cold with ping-pong balls. Some of the things over which our brethren get excited and rush into print are about as important as arguing how many pinto beans you can get into a pint jar.

It was different in the days when Jude wrote. Satan signalled for the artillery to be brought up and the kind of opposition which the saints faced was something else. A lot of our brethren are not really using the sword of the Spirit anymore. The kind of war in which they are engaged can be fought as well with a dull paring knife. A lot of sermon outlines are like chasing butterflies with a peashooter. They seldom hit anything and when they do, it doesn't make much difference anyhow. Many of the saints are hardly conscious that there is a war on. They are living in peaceful coexistence with Satan and are so busy clobbering one another they think of the preacher "as their enemy." Sometimes that is nearer right than otherwise.

I take a lot of genuine comfort from the fact that a faith which, in its infancy, could survive an attack of giants will probably survive a bombardment of dwarfs. It would seem logical to conclude that if a herd of shaggy mammoths could not trample you under when you were a baby, you will probably survive against a swarm of guinea pigs when you've grown up. And most of our attackers today resemble termites more than they do eagles.

In any event, if you do not have a special television show that you just have to watch in order to survive, I want to share with you some of the things which run through my mind when I read what Jude wrote. This time I will use the rendering in the Revised Standard Version. It seems to be as good as any other and a whole lot better than most. As you read what Jude wrote you will probably remember that his little letter had a difficult time getting into the canon of new covenant scriptures at all. It was kept dangling and its right to be included was argued and debated, and even until the fourth century it was classed among the "doubtful" books. Finally, it won its deserved place and that is why I can now analyze it with you.

William Barclay wrote, "There have indeed been times in the history of the church, and especially in the revivals of the church, when Jude was not far off from being the most relevant book in the New Testament." Of course, when Barclay uses the word “revival” he is not talking about getting a high-powered evangelist to come in and shake the members and get them up and walking for a few months before they retire again. It is because I think the world could be on the verge of another great revival or reformation that I would like to study Jude with you.

A lot of folk think that I am a little balmy when I talk about another great reformation. They think that when Martin Luther and Alexander Campbell died, that the Holy Spirit said, “Well, that’s it!” and folded his tent and abandoned the scene. I don’t buy that. I am pleading for renewal through recovery of the apostolic proclamation, purpose and power. It is useless to dream of renewal upon any other basis. Our task is not to hew out cisterns but to return to the fountain. It is not to regale ourselves with thoughts of new sources of power but to return to the revelation of the Spirit. Unless we recover the dynamic of yesterday, we will not be able to face the demands of today, and for us there will be no tomorrow.

WHAT IT’S ALL ABOUT

Jude, a servant of Jesus Christ and a brother of James, to those who are called, beloved in God the Father and kept for Jesus Christ. May mercy, peace and love be multiplied to you.

Jude identifies himself in two ways, describes the state of those he addresses in three terms and invokes a multiplication of three things upon them. He says a great deal in three dozen words. Jude was first and foremost a servant of Jesus Christ. That sounds good, but we have watered down the word “servant” until it does not signify the relationship Jude describes. We think of a servant as one who comes in the morning in time to wash the breakfast dishes, works eight hours and then goes home after having put the clothes in the automatic dryer, unless it is Thursday which is a free day.

But the word used by Jude is doulos. That means a slave. It always speaks of a master-servant relationship, and not of an employer-employee situation. In a metaphorical sense doulos refers to one who surrenders absolutely and completely to the will of another. A household servant is hired, but a slave is bought. It is difficult to be a servant to another but it is infinitely harder to be a slave and know you can never “do your own thing.”

In the final analysis, the whole thing is a matter of will. A man can say to God, “Not my will but thine be done.” Or he can say, “Not thy will but mine be done.” He cannot say both. The first is the foundation of the obedient life. The second is the basis of all sin in the universe, starting with the first one. If one seeks to be his own master he has a fool for a slave. He who wills to submit to God must submit his will to God. Unless Jesus is the Lord of everything, He is the Lord of nothing in your life. I wish I had always realized that. You do not get Thursdays off if you are His slave. You do not get Sundays off either. The one who wants “off” has probably never been “on.”

Almost every commentator mentions that Jude is self-effacing and willing to be known by his relationship to his more prominent brother. Andrew was a little bit like that. Not long ago someone mentioned him as being a “second fiddler” to his brother, Peter. There is nothing denigrating about being introduced as the brother of one who is faithful to Christ. It is an honor to me to be associated with anyone who truly loves the Lord. I do not have to play on the varsity. I am perfectly content to be a “second-stringer” on the spiritual team or I will sit on the bench if I can just have Him for my coach. I will carry water for the other players if He will allow me to be on the field.

I like the way James describes what is involved in being a slave of Christ. Such a person is called. He is beloved in God. He is kept by, or for the Lord Jesus Christ. It is one of the many paradoxes of scripture that we are slaves but free! We are called, cherished and confined in Christ. I never read things like this without having an inner sense of exultation and genuine joy.

I am not here because I sneaked in under the tent. I was called. I heard the call and I knew I had to answer it. I came in through the front door. I know the very day that the call got through to me! I know how miserable I was until I said “I’m coming!” I know what a burden was lifted off when I came. All of this is important to me. I came because I was invited. I am not here because I was appointed to fill an unexpired term, or as the result of someone’s influence peddling. I was elected! I am not in interim service, but I am here for the duration. I’m not quitting until I graduate!

It was quite awhile before I knew that the word for “called” was used at least three different ways originally. It didn’t throw me when I learned it and I wasn’t upset by my previous ignorance. I didn’t go back out and ask heaven to repeat the call. I simply began to implement the divine purpose for my life as I learned it. I intend to do that until the “Great Call” comes through with such a clear channel that I will know it’s for me and I will start walking down into the shady valley. I know a boy who has been baptized three times trying to answer the call and he is not satisfied yet. Every time he gets a new insight he thinks it is another call. He has the telephone receiver mixed up with a yo-yo string, and he is trying to bounce himself into the kingdom.

Men were called to fulfill a special responsibility or render a service to the community in ancient Greece. The same word was used to summon a man as a guest to a feast or banquet. Finally, it was employed to call one to judgment, to appear before the tribunal. The Holy Spirit commandeered the term and invested it with a spiritual significance as He always does.

I realize that everyone who answers the call is volunteering for service. It is service for life. That is why it seems a little ridiculous to try to get some of those who have been called to “volunteer for full-time service.” There isn’t any other kind. God has no part-time slaves, and no couple of days per week workers. No one is called as a decoration.

I am here to serve and I love it. I am also here for the feast and I love that also. The whole bit is one glorious good time, and I mean it. What a thrill it is to fork out a huge slice of love, garnished with the relish of joy and peace. I mean this is like Thanksgiving Day seven times a week. I’m glad I wasn’t out when the invitation was delivered. I never intend to be out again.

I’ve been called to serve and to share in a feast, but I have also been called to judgment. That does not worry me since I have learned that I do not have to dig around and take a briefcase of my own good deeds and dump them out on the judge’s desk as “Exhibit A.” I’ve got my identity card with my name engraved on it by grace. It is signed by the One who settled for my sins with His own blood. He is now my advocate, pleading my case. I am not trusting in my own righteousness but in His. I do not intend to reject Him, leave Him or stray from Him. I need a Savior and I have one— the only One!

I am beloved in God. That’s the basis for the call. And that one fact gives meaning to life. It accounts for all that is done. It explains the divine patience which is inexhaustible, the longsuffering which is incomprehensible except on the ground of an amazing depth of compassion. Leave the love of God out of it and life becomes a ball of knotted string which defies unraveling. Love is concern, a deep and vital concern for persons which assumes their burdens and appropriates their needs and freely gives to meet them without scolding or reprimand.

W. R. Nicholson says in his Popular Studies in Colossians that love is “the bond which holds all of the other graces together.” Ragnar Bring writes in his Commentary on Galatians that “love is the perfection of everything spoken in Scripture.” A. E. Brooke says, “Human love is a reflection of something in the divine nature itself.” William Barclay writes in The Letters of John, “Love has its origin in God. It is from the God who is love that all love takes its source.” By being beloved in God I have been made a sharer in the very life of God.

I am also kept for Jesus Christ. The King James Version has “preserved.” Like a lot of words, the original term has an interesting history. It is tereo, which meant to watch. Out of this grew the idea of guarding from loss or injury by keeping an eye upon. It was not so much a matter of preventing escape, for which the Greeks had another word, but more a matter of maintaining or holding fast. To use a homely illustration, I can still remember my mother saying when someone brought us a quantity of fresh fruit, “I’ll have to make preserves out of it to keep it from spoiling.” Peach preserves represent peaches put into a condition in which they can be maintained for use.

That is what God has done for me. Left to myself I would become rotten and spoiled. But the care of God has been extended and I am preserved in love to be used by Jesus Christ. I am no longer in the natural state, the carnal state. I am now a partaker of the divine nature. I am on God’s pantry shelf and I bear His label. I have been plucked from the world’s berry farm and put in the divine container “fit for the Master’s use.”

Mercy, grace and peace! Mercy is the divine attribute which enables God to receive us in spite of the weakness and infirmity of our humanity. It is extended, not to those who deserve but to those who do not. Those who are perfect require no mercy and the fact that all of us require it is proof of our imperfection. It was mercy which put the robe around the shoulder of the prodigal and shoes upon his feet. It was mercy raised to the superlative degree which then placed the Father’s own ring on his finger. Mercy does not stop with merely making us comfortable. It also makes us rich.

Grace is not so much God giving us something to meet our need as it is God giving Himself to share our lot. It is God moving into the earthly dimension, corrupted as it is by sin, and making life worth living by giving life worth. Grace is not paying us off or giving us what we have earned. It is handing out a gift which is so magnificent that it cannot even be contemplated in the realm of recompense. Grace is God opening up His arms and clasping us close, not because of what we are, but of what we can become in the everlasting arms. Anyone who talks about what we must do to merit grace reveals his ignorance of the nature of grace. That which is merited is not grace. Jonathan Edwards, the old Puritan proclaimer, said that “Grace is but glory begun and glory is but grace perfected.” He also said, “As grace is first from God, so it is continually from him, as much as light is all day long from the sun, as well as at first dawn or at sun-rising.”

Peace is the harmony with God which results from His bestowal of justification and our acceptance of it through faith in the righteousness of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is the beating of the human heart in perfect time with the divine. It is being in step with God and in tune with the infinite. It is freedom from fear, walking without worry, and attainment without anxiety. Peace is not the calm which follows the storm, it is the courage which makes the storm impossible. Peace is the quiet spirit which can honor God by life or death, and is willing to live or die by His orders.

I want to share with you the best statement I have seen concerning the meaning of grace and peace. It is from the pen of William Hendriksen, former Professor of New Testament Literature at Calvin Seminary. He writes, “Grace is God’s spontaneous, unmerited favor in action, his sovereign, freely-bestowed loving-kindness in operation, and its result, peace, is the conviction of reconciliation through the blood of the cross, true spiritual wholeness and prosperity.” Perhaps you ought to read that again, and then lean back in your chair, close your eyes, and let it trickle and seep down into your soul.

I share with Jude the hope that these three magnificent qualities be multiplied unto you. I would not have them dispensed with meager hand or doled out as if they had to be measured. As he wanted them multiplied to his readers so I want them abundantly bestowed upon mine. In this day I eagerly trust that my readers will also be readers of Jude. It is far more important that you read what Jude said than to read what I say about what he said.

THE DELIVERED FAITH

Beloved, being very eager to write to you of our common salvation, I found it necessary to write appealing to you to contend for the faith which was once for all delivered to the saints.

The term “very eager” has to do with diligent or earnest application to a task. That is why the King James Version renders it, “when I gave all diligence to write unto you.” Now this can mean that Jude had planned to write about the salvation which was shared by the called ones, and was actually engaged in doing so when he received information which caused him to alter his plans and write this letter to meet a desperate emergency.

William Barclay looks at it that way, and translates the passage, “Beloved, when I was in the midst of devoting all my energy to writing to you about the faith which we all share, I felt that I was compelled to write a letter to you to urge you to engage upon the struggle to defend the faith.” If this is correct, it will explain the urgency which the letter seems to fairly breathe out. There is a grave difference between a calm treatise about something which we share in common and need to appreciate, and a warning about impending disaster. This little epistle is like the break in a television schedule, made ominous by the voice of the announcer, “We interrupt this program to bring you warning that a tornado has been sighted ten miles west of this city and to urge you to take proper precautions.” There is the same difference between the letter of Paul to the Philippians and the letter of Jude that there is between the chimes of the town clock striking the hour and the sound of the siren on the fire engine churning its way down the street.

Sometimes a crisis can change our whole way of life and the manner in which we react to that crisis may be more important than our original idea. When Ida Scudder was a girl in Northfield Seminary in Massachusetts she was emphatic in her declaration that she would never live and serve in a foreign country as her parents had always done in India. But before she graduated a letter came from her father informing her that her mother was seriously ill and asking for her to return to India immediately. In a single night there, three native men— a Brahman, a Muslim and a Hindu— came to knock on the door of the mission compound, each of them pleading for a woman doctor to save the life of his wife. These calls in the night drove Ida Scudder to become a doctor and to start the Christian Medical School which trained hundreds of young native women to become nurses.

In his address to the United Negro College Fund Convocation, in Indianapolis, Indiana, April 12, 1959, John F. Kennedy said, “When written in Chinese the word crisis is composed of two characters— one represents danger and the other represents opportunity.”

If Jude was engaged in compiling material about the salvation common to all in Christ Jesus, we do not know if he ever finished, or ever returned to it, but the little letter he did write has encouraged millions to resist the erosion away of the faith and to stand fast for it. I find myself thrilled that Jude was eager to write of our common salvation. A brother recently called to my attention how difficult it is to interest modern saints in conversation about spiritual matters. If three or four brethren are talking and you inject a serious note about the common salvation, they either clam up or quickly change the subject.

They will join in if you are criticizing a brother or finding fault with the congregation, and will chew on morsels of gossip, but there is no eagerness to continue exhorting or edifying one another.

Regardless of what else we share in our precious Lord we can be thrilled that we have a salvation which belongs to all of us. We might differ in ethnic backgrounds and in social status, but we are one in that salvation which is the gift of God by grace through faith. I am a lot like Jude. I am eager to write about that wonderful state into which we have been called by the Good News. It is my strength and my song. I am happy that you partake of it, like I do, as a recipient of His mercy. But if I am to review what Jude wrote I must follow where he leads.

His letter was an appeal. It was an exhortation. He uses the word parakaleo, which, in the King James Version is rendered beseech 43 times, comfort 23 times, exhort 19 times, entreat 3 times, and by a few other terms. The word literally means “to call to one’s side,” that is, to summon for a task or function. It conveys the idea of entreating or beseeching one to engage in an action or effort. I am fully convinced that when such circumstances exist as those confronting Jude, I am obligated to answer the call or summons he issued. I am one of the called and beloved. I share in that glorious salvation. I am obligated to answer the entreaty and so is every other person who is among the called ones.

For what did Jude entreat the beloved? The answer is simple. “To contend for the faith.” Since that is the duty of every one of us, what is involved in it? The original word is a big one—epagonizesthai. Do not let it frighten you. Notice that it contains the word “agonize,” which is from agon, a contest. We are now on a clear course toward understanding what is meant. The word was used to describe a wrestling match in the Greek games. When a challenge was flung out, someone stepped forth and accepted it, and the two of them grappled with each other until one was vanquished. Sometimes the challenge was issued on the basis of integrity or civic pride and to refuse to fight was to surrender to shame or disgrace.

The saints are encouraged by Jude to pick up the glove flung down by a blatant challenger. To do so is to accept an invitation to a contest, not of skill but of perseverance and endurance. There will be no gong to end the struggle. It is a battle which must end in victory for one and defeat for the other. There will be no place for a truce or compromise, no cessation of hostilities. This is hand-to-hand combat. It is a struggle for survival. One does not “agonize” playing tiddlywinks or pitching horseshoes!

What is the issue? “The faith which was once for all delivered to the saints.” What is the faith? It is here that men have been guilty of tragic error, as a result of which they have engaged in deadly combat with the wrong persons, and have slaughtered friends instead of foes. Some have assumed that the faith consists of the compilation of new covenant scriptures and have postulated that one is not in the faith who does not understand as they do every minute point of doctrine. In the final analysis this means that to be in the faith is equivalent to being aligned with the particular party, faction or sect growing up around a specific deduction from or interpretation of some scriptural matter. Anyone who does not conform to the official interpretation is accused of being a liberal, a traitor to God, a heretic and an apostate, even though his life exhibits much more of the fruit of the Spirit than do the lives of his accusers.

The new testament canon does not constitute the faith about which Jude writes. The new covenant scriptures had not yet been written and certainly not compiled into a single volume. It would be three centuries before the very epistle Jude was writing would be given canonical recognition and win an undisputed place. The new covenant scriptures had not been “once for all delivered,” but the faith had. Those to whom Jude wrote and who were beloved of God were in that faith before they ever saw an apostolic letter.

This in no sense denigrates the scriptures. It does not say anything derogatory about their authenticity, genuineness or authority. It never defeats God's purpose to place His revelation in proper perspective. Certainly the new covenant scriptures reveal the faith to us. We would know little about it without the scriptures. They are not the faith, but the window through which we see the faith. They are the vehicle through which knowledge of the faith is transmitted to us in this generation, but there is a difference between a vehicle and that which it conveys. When I was at the Palace of Versailles I saw the ornate carriages of the kings, but I did not think I was seeing the kings. Our faith is actually a person. Jesus is our faith as He is our peace, our wisdom, our sanctification and our redemption. Our faith is our absolute trust in Jesus as God's Son and Anointed, and the scriptures constitute the testimony of that faith.

Recognition of this distinction makes a great deal of difference, and it is lack of such recognition which has caused us to "fall out by the way," and become a welter of warring and bickering sects. Men erroneously think they are "contending for the faith" when they engage in heated debate over some scriptural passage or intellectual apprehension of a controverted matter. One is not contending for the faith when he engages in debate over whether instrumental music in expression of public praise is acceptable to God. He is not contending for the faith when he argues the pro or con of a method of supporting a radio or television program. He is not contending for the faith when he engages in an argument about the millennium or the charismatic movement.

Men may debate such questions all of their lives and never once contend for the faith, or they can contend for the faith all of their lives and never once debate about such subjects. One can contend for the faith once for all delivered and take either side of such questions, for the simple reason that the faith has no relationship to such matters. In the days of Jude the saints in Christ differed about circumcision, the eating of meats and the keeping of days, but such discussions as they had were not confused with contending for the faith, until Peter got the two mixed up in Antioch. Such things are not a threat to the faith, troublesome though they may be, unless ignorant and unstable persons confuse them with the faith and substitute arguments about them for contending for the faith. Jude did not summon the beloved to debate one another over the meaning of his sentences or the implications of his statements. I do not think he ever envisioned the called ones clobbering each other and justifying it by quoting his statement to “contend earnestly for the faith.” We have come a long way when we take the letters intended to keep the saints from being divided over unscrupulous and unsavory characters and use those letters to split the body of our Lord into splinters and shiver it to smithereens!

We can tell what the faith is for which we are to contend by finding out what is espoused and advocated by those with whom we are to “agonize.” Any honest person who reads what Jude says can readily determine that he is not advocating that we belabor one another in Christ over opinions, interpretations, deductions and inferences from the apostolic writings. Nothing could do more damage to the peace and serenity of the beloved in God than to twist and wrest the statements of Jude to justify the partisan gladiators who seek publicity for their peculiarities in the forensic arena. The rag-tag wrestling matches to which we have been subjected over every little piece of trivia disgrace the very faith which we profess to defend.

The faith was delivered to the saints. It is not something they invented or concocted. It is not something they discovered or arrived at by research. It is not a philosophy, a compilation of laws or a compendium of ethical precepts. The faith came. It is historical. It entered into the time-space spectrum in which earthly man dwells. There was a time described as “before faith came” (Gal. 3:23) and a time designated “after faith came” (Gal. 3:25). Faith came by the will of God. It came at “a time appointed by the father” (Gal. 4:2). Faith is both a gift and a response to that gift, and both the gift and the response are personal. Faith is news, good news, and that news was delivered, not in the form of a book, but in the form of a baby. The word was made flesh and dwelled among us. The faith was enfleshed and remains with us in our bodies, dwelling there as in temples of deity.

The faith was delivered once for all. It was a one-time experience for the world. It will not be repeated. The faith is unchanging. It is enduring. It is eternal. The event in which it was embodied, and the message in which it is to be conveyed, are not subject to recall, amendment or alteration. The faith was proclaimed fully and completely on the first Pentecost after the resurrection of our Lord from the dead. Not a word was ever added to the faith. Each generation must re-affirm the event, but the event remains the very core of the faith. Each generation must re-proclaim the message, but the message dare not be altered to suit the whims of any culture or race. As Paul put it, “I would remind you in what terms I preached to you the gospel, which you received, in which you stand, by which you are saved, if you hold it fast.” The gospel is the same! The terms are the same! The salvation is the same! The gospel is the proclamation of the event. It is as unchangeable as the event. The faith was once for all delivered to the saints. The re-proclamation of the saints must never change!

THE SECRET INTRUDERS

For admission has been secretly gained by some who long ago were designated for this condemnation, ungodly persons who pervert the grace of our God into licentiousness and deny our only Master and Lord, Jesus Christ.

Here we learn the reason why Jude wrote this letter under such pressure. The company of the saints was being infiltrated by fifth columnists who were bent on destruction of the faith. They were clever and avowed saboteurs whose objective was to undermine the whole plan of God and make out of it nothing but a smoking wreck. These men were not clever plotters on the outside. They were already inside scattering poison, planting incendiaries and getting ready for the take-over. And they had come in cleverly disguised to wreak their damage. Once when George Washington realized that some of those in his forces were sympathizers with the Tory cause he issued the order, "Put none but Americans on guard tonight." When the cause of Christ is in danger only those who are in allegiance to Jesus should be entrusted with grave responsibility.

The King James Version says these "crept in unawares." Barclay says they "wormed their way into the Church." The Authentic New Testament says they "managed to creep in." The New Testament in Modern English says "they crept in stealthily." Canon F. W. Farrar says "they slunk in." All of this indicates an undercover action. It was deliberate and intentional. These men knew what they were doing. The community of believers was fair game for their insidious mission.

The word for their means of gaining access is one of those intriguing Greek terms with a history connected with it. It is pareisduein, and it was used to portray a great many cunning and stealthy intrusions, generally with an ulterior motive. It was employed to describe the means by which an undesirable alien who had been banished or exiled, slipped back into the country under the cover of night while wearing a disguise. It was used to describe the action of one who infiltrated a political party with the evident purpose of creating chaos and fomenting distrust, much like the "dirty tricks" perpetrated before our last national election. It was also used to describe an agent or spy who intruded himself into a military camp of a nation to disrupt the morale of the soldiers and undermine discipline.

My reason for spending so much time on proper identification of those whom Jude regarded as enemies of the faith once delivered, is because of the childish and immature projections made by the brethren with whom I have always been associated. To them, every child of God who questioned any traditional partisan inference or explanation was an enemy of righteousness. The quickest way to become a heretic in their sight was to faithfully study the Word of God until you learned something new. Every honest and conscientious deviation from the factional norm was considered rebellion against God. In the extreme legalistic stand to which most of the heirs of the restoration movement finally gravitated every child of God on earth was regarded as a heretic by some other. To debate those who differed over some of the trivia which obsessed us was to “contend for the faith.”

It is absurd and silly to even suggest that sincere brethren who do not agree with us over some of the deductions we have made from the word are in the same class of persons about whom Jude wrote. We have been betrayed into a kind of self-righteousness which is more damning than the things about which we inveigh. We have reduced the kingdom of heaven in the eyes of many from the marvelous and universal reign of our blessed Lord into a minor fiefdom of narrow and intolerant individuals with whom “fellowship” can only be maintained at the expense of integrity and by abdication of the right to exercise your own rational powers. We have chosen foes worthy of our own mediocrity.

The infiltrators with whom Jude was concerned were the kind of men long ago designated for the condemnation which would be deservedly theirs. The word used was employed among the Greeks for a public notice warning certain characters they would not be allowed inside the city environs under penalty of death. It was used by the Romans for a public notice of proscription, which was affixed on a temple column or in the forum, and which specified the name of one who was being banished and listed his crimes. Many of you have seen a replica of signs posted in frontier and border towns, warning horse thieves, card-sharks, bunco-artists, and known criminals that they would be summarily hanged if arrested inside the community limits.

Through the prophets God has posted ample notification that the kind of men Jude describes would not be tolerated. They would be cut off from among the people. Moreover, He gave a demonstration of divine judgment upon angels who sinned, the ante-diluvian population, and the wicked inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, to name a few. Those who fell in the same category could expect a like fate. This does not mean that long ago God determined that these individuals would become what they were, but rather, that any person who was that type would suffer condemnation.

What kind of men were these against whom Jude warned? They were ungodly men. And they manifested their ungodliness in two ways. They perverted the grace of God into licentiousness. This does not mean that they merely took advantage of the grace of God to practice vice. That would be bad enough. But they perverted God's grace itself into immorality. They not only suggested that grace condoned immorality but that by unrestrained sexual indulgence and deviation they fulfilled the purpose of God. Barclay uses the expression "blatant immorality" because he says the original suggests utter loss of a sense of shame and decency.

In addition, these denied the only Master and Lord, Jesus Christ. A great many modern commentators think that these vicious and harmful men were Gnostics because of their attitude toward license in the use of the body, and toward Jesus. It is easy to believe this is so because of the nature of this destructive philosophy and because of the method employed to insinuate its adherents into the camp of the faithful. If these were Gnostics we can understand more fully the urgent need to "contend earnestly for the faith.”

Many older commentators tend to think Jude was referring to the Nicolaitans, a sect which apparently advocated that liberty constituted license to gratify lust and passion without moral restraint. This would present no real contradiction since the Nicolaitans seem to have laid the foundation in the congregations for the inroads of Gnosticism. It is not necessary that we know the particular brand-name borne by these men. We know what they promulgated and promoted and we know the danger involved.

The infant communities of believers were surrounded by threats upon every side. False accusations were hurled at them and they rested under a cloud of suspicion which could break out in frightful persecution at any time. Danger lurked so close that Paul could write that he died daily and stood in jeopardy every hour. In our day, and especially in the western world, the crude and barbarous attacks upon the persons of believers are barred by law. In the beginning it was often the legal authorities who led the persecutors.

The change in climate may lull us into a sense of security in which we conclude the faith is safe because we are. We may think that the enemy has retired because we have. Nothing could be farther from reality. “The wisdom of the passing age” as Paul refers to the specious philosophy which is always present and always dedicated to diluting and weakening the divine witness, is ever active. The danger to revealed truth may be more acute in a time when men are not required to die for the faith and thus not be called upon to make the supreme choice. Those who are deceived by relativism may think there is nothing worth dying for, and this inevitably leads to the conclusion there is nothing worth living for.

In a certain sense the Gnosticism of yesterday has been replaced by the Humanism of today. Of course there are differences. Some of them are great. But there are also likenesses, and the effect upon the faith once for all delivered is the same. To deny the divine breakthrough in the flesh, to repudiate the atonement and reconciliation achieved by the cross, and to scoff at the thought of the resurrection which brings hope to men doomed to die, is a frightful and cruel thing, regardless of the guise under which the perpetrators appear.

Like the apostle of old I want to be “set for the defense of the gospel” (Phil. 1:16). It is the gospel of my salvation which enabled me to be sealed with the promised Holy Spirit, my guarantee of the inheritance until I take possession of it (Eph. 1:13, 14). That gospel is God’s dynamic to make whole every person who trusts in it with obedient surrender. The gospel is the historical fact of Jesus and what He accomplished for me, and will accomplish in and through me. I regard as an enemy every theory which ridicules the cross of Christ and every thesis which rejects the resurrection of my Lord from the dead.

I am summoned to do battle against every such foe at home and abroad, by tongue and by pen. I intend to wage relentless war on whatever ground the enemy chooses, because truth is never allowed the luxury of selecting the battlefield. It goes where the foe chooses to take his stand. I want to be in the thick of the fray, to hear the clang of weapons against each other, and to experience the sweat and grime and dust of the combat field.

That is why I have little time to devote to childish arguments among the king’s troops in the mess hall or lolling about in the shade. I have no time to chase brotherhood fireflies while the real enemy is at the gate. I can distinguish the faith once delivered in the presence of celestial angels from the opinions of those who have nothing better to do than irritate and aggravate one another by working out all of the angles.

We face a real enemy. It is not merely an enemy of “The Church of Christ” or any other historical party crystallized around an ideal voiced by men, but an enemy of the faith once delivered to the saints. The faith itself is being assaulted, and the battle must be fought by all of the saints, by those who have been washed, sanctified, and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and in the Spirit of our God. I recognize no rivals among those who have been born again and are now a part of the new humanity. "Some indeed preach Christ from envy and rivalry, but others from good will. The latter do it out of love . . . the former proclaim Christ out of partisanship . . . What then? Only that in every way, whether in pretense or in truth, Christ is proclaimed; and in that I rejoice."

Christ is proclaimed! In every way! No man who proclaims Christ as King of kings and Lord of lords in this universe is my enemy, although he may count himself as such. But the enmity and hostility will be in his heart. It is not in mine. There is no room for it! Anyone who, without reservation or qualm, subscribes to the once great mystery of the faith, expressed in the terms, "He was manifested in the flesh, vindicated in the Spirit, seen by angels, preached among nations, believed on in the world, taken up in glory," is fighting on the side I am on. I will stand by his side while he contends for the faith once for all delivered.

The faith is historical fact. Therefore, it is not negotiable. There is no ground for compromise. No peace pact can be entered with those who deny it. When I meet with those who reject the advent of Jesus in the flesh, or who dispute His claim to be the Son of God, or His right to be Lord of the universe, I meet to fight and not discuss possible terms of peaceful coexistence. My oath of allegiance to the King makes me the sworn enemy of every system of thought which would topple Him from His throne or effect a coup for a take-over by any rebel force. I intend to slug it out with the enemy as long as my lungs can gasp air and my heart continue to beat. I want to die with the armor buckled on, the shield of faith held high, the sword cleaving to my hand, and my face toward the walls of the New Jerusalem.

If God wills, I shall continue, in our next issue, with a discussion of the little letter written by Jude, which may be regarded as God's battle-axe flung into the faces of traitors seeking to storm the fort manned by the defenders of the faith. We hope you will again be with us as we make the exploration.

Yesterday's Wisdom

Mission Messenger (August 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

A number of years ago I delivered a series of radio talks which were later bound in book form under the title Proven Proverbs. The book is long since out of print, but I glance through it occasionally and am always reassured by the fact that its messages are as timely now as when I first gave them. I had been reading through the wisdom literature of the old covenant scriptures and meditating upon the gems of lore enunciated by Solomon, Hezekiah, and others, and copied down for posterity by the royal scribes. At the time I could not resist doing the radio presentations in which I demonstrated that the wisdom bestowed upon Solomon qualified him to become an adviser and counsellor of the ages. Wisdom does not die with its promulgator.

Solomon came to the throne in a time of change. The wars which had beset the land and exhausted its finances for so many decades had generally culminated under David and a period of peace had been inaugurated. With dreams of kingdom-expansion flooding his mind, Solomon resolved to make Jerusalem, the capital city, a showplace of the earth. He began an inner-city slum-clearance and civic face-lifting project and under his Works Progress Administration, built the magnificent temple with skilled craftsmen imported from other countries. They also constructed for him a downtown military museum in which the shields on display in the arsenal section were all of pure gold.

As a part of his strategy he formed an extensive harem made up of princesses from the royal families of other nations, and for each he constructed a palatial residence where the gods of their native lands could be enshrined and worshiped. The king also formed the first Israeli navy and used the ships to promote an import trade which brought exotic Oriental items for sale in bazaars of Jerusalem. The international traffic required ambassadors, translators, business executives and diplomats which had never been developed in an agrarian society where the simple ideal of every man was to “dwell under his own vine and fig tree.” Under the impact of world trade a great transformation took place and the rural way of life gave way to an urban culture, a change which always produces certain characteristics and calls for a whole new approach to survival, which becomes threatened on every hand.

It is not at all far-fetched, as I view it, to think of the first nine chapters of Proverbs as a kind of orientation workbook prepared by the diplomatic corps for the initial preparation of young men applying for jobs in the Department of State. Beginning with chapter 10, you will read a collection of wise sayings, generally unrelated to each other and representing the kind of encapsulated philosophy with which kings of the day sought to instruct their subjects. The practice is still in vogue in the East as witness the little red book containing “the sayings of Chairman Mao,” proverbs chanted incessantly by Chinese Communist youthful militants and revolutionaries.

One of the interesting features of “the workbook” is its warning of dangers in the city to which an unsuspecting small-town youth would be exposed and in which he might become involved if he were not careful. The very first one deals with street gangs, consisting of muggers and young hoodlums who do not scruple to murder, and who entice by saying, “We will rip-off every kind of place and person and fill our apartments with loot. Join up with us, man, and we'll give you an equal share in the swag" (1:13, 14).

Prostitution presented a real problem and was probably increased as the population of the city became more cosmopolitan and people came from far-off lands where sexual perversion and deviation were linked with worship of the gods. The young man who did not want to forfeit his dignity or lose his chance for advancement is cautioned to stay out of the red-light district and avoid passing the door of a harlot's house (5:8). The problem of the wife whose husband is a commercial traveler, and who becomes jaded and fed up with the monotony of city existence and who decides to go out on the town creates another hazard. As the New English Version puts it, "The prostitute can be had for the price of a loaf, but a married woman is out for bigger game."

The tendency to sleep late and to take the day off and stay in bed is given pretty rough treatment, and it is implied that one who turns off the alarm and snuggles down in the sack again does not have as much sense as an insect (6:6-11). Other things discussed are the need for keeping your cool and not blowing your stack under pressure, of staying off the bottle and not getting talked into becoming a social drinker, and especially of resisting the plea of another to co-sign his note for a loan at the bank (6:1, 2).

Because the book of Proverbs is so explicit and helpful I sometimes get the urge to do another book in which I again use its advice to zero in on some of our modern hangups. The Bible is not dated at all, but the one who does not read it or who disregards it, is dated. He does not know where it all is, and he is missing the real values of life. If you really want to get your head screwed on straight I suggest you use the divine lug wrench.

A Necessary Reminder

Mission Messenger (September 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

Last month I began an analysis of the brief letter penned by Jude to the beloved, as he addressed the recipients of it. It is my hope you will read what I wrote in my introductory article. If you do you will find that Jude was sounding a call to action, exhorting the brethren to contend for the faith which was once for all delivered to the saints. The faith, which is the message about Christ, and actually the message which is Christ, was in danger from clever manipulators who denied “our only Master and Lord, Jesus Christ.”

I am interested in the approach Jude made to the problem created by ruthless intruders who converted God’s grace into an excuse for vicious immorality while at the same time denying the very foundation of the faith, the historical identity of Jesus Christ as the Son of God. He refers to God’s judgment in connection with three other historical events— the destruction of the Israelites in the wilderness, the casting down of the angels who sinned, and the visitation of wrath upon Sodom and Gomorrah and the neighboring cities. Let me share with you a few of the thoughts which I derive from this.

1. God is a God of history. He not only makes history, but He works in the context of history. He knows what is going on in the earth and He holds men responsible unto Himself for their conduct and actions. We require a constant reminder of this in our messed-up age of humanism and relativism.

2. God is a God of wrath as well as a God of love. We need to take account of both the goodness and severity of God. Indeed, God's untinctured love of the pure and righteous must make Him hate evil. The greatest proof of how He regards sin is found in the price He was willing to pay to place his stamp of condemnation upon it in the flesh. The idea that God is an antiquated grandfatherly type saying "Naughty! naughty!" when His children engage in iniquity is a caricature with no basis in fact. God is not senile!

3. It is valid to refer to the accounts of God's actions in the world as described in the old covenant scriptures, as a warning to profligate characters in our generation. The idea that those scriptures are a compilation of Jewish folklore or a collection of myths is so much poppycock. It is as ridiculous as it is false. The regard of Jesus for the scriptures, and His endorsement of them, should provide the frame of reference in which the disciple of Jesus places those scriptures. I do not get red in the face, swallow hard, or gag, when someone asks me if I accept them. I have no hesitancy in saying that so far as I am concerned "holy men of God spoke as they were motivated by the Holy Spirit." I accept their testimony as true.

4. The fact that Jude employs three such drastic examples of divine judgment to illustrate how God regards those who deny the faith once delivered is proof of what a serious crime it is in divine sight, to reject the testimony related to the divinity of Jesus. The Israelites refused the leadership of God who delivered them from enslavement. The angels revolted against God who had exalted them. The citizens of Sodom and Gomorrah reveled in their sexual deviation and carnal abuse. Such refusal, revolt and revelry were all characteristic of the individuals with whom Jude was concerned, and he "lowered the boom upon them" as dangerous elements to the cause of God.

Now I desire to remind you, though you were once for all fully informed, that he who saved a people out of the land of Egypt afterward destroyed those who did not believe.

Sometimes in our day, brethren are reluctant to remind us of those things with which we have been familiar for years. But we need to have our minds refreshed about matters of which we may be fully aware. It is possible for us to become complacent and indifferent and forget the lessons which things are intended to teach. Those who ignore the mistakes of others tend to reproduce them in their own lives. We may laugh at someone who makes an inglorious fall by tripping over a toy in the middle of the living-room rug, and later sprawl all over the place by doing the same thing. Peter declared that he intended always to remind the brethren of things they already knew even though they were firmly fixed in the truth they had received. He felt it was right for him to stir up their memory as long as he lived (2 Peter 1:12, 13). Jude felt the same way. He was not going to try out new and novel recipes.

I think it would be a good thing if every community of the redeemed would have a periodic mind-stirring course in what the apostle Paul called “the things which were written aforetime.” The ignorance of the old covenant scriptures is appalling. A lot of folk have been swept in on waves of emotionalism and subjectivity and much of what the apostles wrote has little impact because modern readers have so little knowledge of the examples they cite. I know people who can reel off the names of the players on their favorite baseball team and even give their current batting averages, but they couldn’t name the books of the New Testament if their lives depended on it. Certainly a magnificent chapter like Hebrews 11 will lose much of its power when read to those who know nothing about the characters to which allusion is made. I am glad Jude could say that those to whom he wrote were fully aware of what he was talking about. You need not be ashamed that you have heard it before if it is God’s word. No apology is needed for familiarity with the message from heaven.

The case of Israel is a good illustration of the fact that God may deliver people from a state of slavery and yet destroy them when they become stubborn and rebellious against His will. The mere fact that He brings them out is no indication that He must bring them in if they revolt against Him. It is not enough to hear His voice calling us to leave an intolerable condition but we must continue to be under the divine will until we reach the promised land.

I've got some pretty good friends who think that a child of God cannot so sin as to be eternally lost. They are hooked on what debaters used to designate "Once in grace, always in grace." In more erudite theological circles it is called "the doctrine of eternal security." I think it ought to be dubbed "the dogma of eternal security," because, if you disagree with them they get all unstrung and think you are about two-thirds pagan. A lot of folk are that way about their deductions. They even love deductions on their income tax forms.

I don't accept their rationale, of course, but I am really not "bugged" by it too much. I am used to people getting red in the face and white around the gills, and regarding you as "a brother in error," if you don't buy their interpretations. If I had to make a choice I'd rather one would think you could not fall from grace and live up to it, than to think you could and be constantly trying to prove it. I know some who both believe and practice it!

But I think my friends I first mentioned are bothered about what happened to Israel. Here were God's people, saved by the divine hand and able to sing the song of deliverance and triumph, but still they did not make it to the promised land. I know the answers that have been contrived to explain it. I have listened to the verbal quirks, quibbles, turns and twists made in debates. Anyone who has a presupposition to defend has to squeeze out of some tight spots and is liable to be caught with his hand in the cookie jar. In any event, I think that one who wills to accept Christ can will to reject Him, and if he does so he has had it. I don't think God puts a blow-torch to the human will or forces one to leave it on the front porch when he comes into Christ. His children are willing, but not will-less!

God will not save those who stubbornly resist or those who deliberately rebel. This was an important thing to be remembered by those to whom Jude wrote. To engage in a life of immorality and to deny Jesus is to walk contrary to all we have learned about faith and holiness. The ungodly men who had stealthily crept in were blatant revolutionaries against God. To follow their leading would bring divine retribution. The writer to the Hebrews, referring to the same occasion in the life of Israel, writes, "Take care, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil, unbelieving heart, leading you to fall away from the living God" (Hebrews 3:12). One who is saved by faith can never quit believing. To fall away from the faith is to fall away from the living God!

And the angels that did not keep their own position but left their proper dwelling have been kept by him in eternal chains in the nether gloom until the judgment of the great day (verse 6).

The rebellion of Israel in the wilderness was akin to the revolt of the angels in heaven. Jude urges that this be remembered, indicating that the ones to whom he wrote were familiar with the circumstances to which he refers. In our own case we can only take the scriptural statements and fit them together and from them make certain deductions which seem best to explain and tie together the information available unto us.

There were angels who sinned (2 Peter 2:4). Their sin consisted of resisting God's authority and going beyond His will in assertion of their own. They did not stay within the limits of their proper authority but abandoned their dwelling-place.

When someone does not keep his own position, trouble is going to result. Battles have been lost and armies defeated because someone did not keep his position. Professional football teams have been trampled under by the opposition because someone did not keep his assigned position.

God did not spare the angels who did not keep their own position even though they were celestial beings. He threw them out of heaven and into Tartarus, an abiding place for unclean or evil spirits until the final judgment. Here they are chained or bound in darkness awaiting the great day of final doom.

Of course, there is more to it than this and the Jews of Jude's day had recorded lengthy traditions which formed the basis of interminable discussion. My own view is that the being who came to be called Satan or the Devil, masterminded a plot which was intended to take over control of the heavenly region. He enlisted in the attempted coup a number of other angels and war resulted. Michael and the angels faithful to God fought against the Devil and his angels and vanquished them. They were cast out and flung down to the nether region of darkness. A description of the celestial conflict will be found in Revelation 12:8, 9.

It is my personal view that this transpired before the creation of this planet. That the angels existed before the earth was made is evidenced from the fact that Job records they were present for the event and that they sang together and shouted for joy. Moreover, Satan was ready as soon as God placed man under the first restriction, to seduce the primeval pair to deny God and to enthrone self. Regardless of the paucity of the evidence available unto us there can be no question that when Jude wrote, the demons were bound in eternal chains awaiting their condemnation on the Great Day.

But why mention this example? To me the reason seems obvious. The malignant teachers of whom Jude wrote were lifted up in intellectual pride and arrogance. They were wise above what was written. They were defiantly denying the right of God to exercise authority in His own universe, and challenging the faith once delivered in the person of the One made flesh. They were seeking to do on earth what the devil and his angels sought unsuccessfully to do in heaven. Just as Michael and the holy angels were called to do battle to vindicate the right of God to rule, so the holy people are called upon to contend for the faith which asserts the right of Christ to rule.

The conclusion is inevitable. If celestial beings were not allowed to succeed in their devious plan certainly mere man will not be permitted to do so. Thus, this is another basis for realizing that the judgment of such characters is certain. It was foreordained in the attitude of God toward angels who attacked His sovereignty and refused to longer be subject to His will and purpose.

Just as Sodom and Gomorrah and the surrounding cities, which likewise acted immorally and indulged in unnatural lust, serve as an example by undergoing a punishment of eternal fire.

It is at once apparent why Jude referred to Sodom and Gomorrah, and the nearby towns. You will recall that there were five cities located in what was then the lush plain of the lower Jordan. Zoar was spared because of Lot's entreaty for a haven in which to find refuge, but Admah and Zeboiim perished in the holocaust of divine vengeance which hollowed out the valley so that it became the site of the Dead Sea.

The area was a cesspool of vice. Homosexuality was rampant. When Abraham recognized the inadvisability of trying to continue with his nephew Lot with their increasing retinue of servants vying with each other, Lot chose the verdant pastureland upon which these cities were located. Peter affirms that Lot was a righteous man who was greatly distressed by the licentiousness of the wicked. According to Peter, Lot both saw and heard enough that “he was vexed in his righteous soul day after day with their lawless deeds.” When the stench of their immoral behavior reached the nostrils of God and the agonizing cry of urban crime became unbearable he sent two angels to inform Lot of impending destruction and to urge him to flee for his life.

The men were invited with characteristic Eastern hospitality to share the home of Lot rather than to sleep in some quiet corner of a deserted street where they were certain of being assaulted and ripped off. When their presence in Sodom was known the men of the city, both old and young, surrounded Lot’s house and demanded that the foreigners be turned over to them that they could sexually abuse them, much as perverted felons in prison attack a new prisoner thrust into their cells. When Lot refused to surrender his guests, the infuriated homosexuals threatened to break down the door and attack Lot himself as a foreigner who had come to dwell among them. The angels struck the men with blindness but even this did not thwart or check their attempt to gratify their carnal and unnatural lust. The record says, “They wearied themselves groping for the door.”

There are times when the mass is so corrupting that salt cannot affect it and must be withdrawn for its own preservation, while the vultures take over. There is nothing to be gained in allowing a candle to burn itself out when the pall of darkness is so great that the light shines only upon the candle. Peter tells about the rescue of Lot when God visited condemnation upon the profligate urban areas, destroying them with fire, and making them an example to the wicked of what will happen unto them. His words are reassuring to those who must live in a world which lieth in wickedness.

Jude says that Sodom and Gomorrah “serve as an example.” They certainly did to the Jews. Nothing else that ever happened made a greater impact upon the Jewish mind than the cataclysmic destruction of those cities with fire rained down from heaven. Their fate is repeatedly alluded to by chroniclers and prophets as well as by Jesus himself. The horror of the scene is felt in the description of what Abraham saw. “He looked down toward Sodom and Gomorrah and toward all the land of the valley, and beheld, and lo, the smoke of the land went up like the smoke of a furnace” (Genesis 19:28).

It is not unreasonable to suppose that the men about whom Jude wrote also “acted immorally and indulged in unnatural lust” as is affirmed of the citizenry of the ancient cities. Certainly they perverted the grace of God into licentiousness (verse 4), defiled the flesh (verse 8), boldly caroused together (verse 12), and followed their own ungodly passions (verse 16). This provides an opportunity to lift up my feeble pen against the tendency in our nation, and even by some professed Christians, to water down and weaken the opposition against homosexuality and lesbianism in our day. Nothing can be more calculated to damn us to destruction than the kind of gobbledegook and garbage to which we are treated by some of the media. If the devil wants to flush America down the drain he can more effectively do it with the slime and hogwash to which we are being subjected than by any other means. That some who are disciples of the Master should be canned into keeping quiet, or even into speaking apologetically about the moral morass in which we find ourselves is almost incredible.

The word of God is plain. It warns us against deception, as if such a warning on such a subject is needed. “Do not be deceived; neither the immoral, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor homosexuals, nor thieves, nor the greedy, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor robbers will inherit the kingdom of God” (1 Cor. 6:9, 10). Do you think they will? Do you think they might? If you do, you are off base and you have your head screwed on wrong!

Paul says that women who exchange natural relations for unnatural, and men who give up natural relations with women and are consumed with passion for one another, commit shameless acts. There is a natural use of sex. Perversion of it is branded “dishonorable passion” (Romans 1:26). Such persons as engage in lewd and lascivious acts are given up by God “to a base mind and to improper conduct” (Romans 1:28). The fact that such a homosexual may pretend to be a preacher does not alter God’s view of either his mind or his conduct. To call such people “gay” is just about as silly as to talk about a pious devil. There are no gay homosexuals and no happy hookers. “The wicked are like the tossing sea, for it cannot rest, and its waters toss up mire and dirt. There is no peace, says my God, for the wicked” (Isaiah 57:20, 21).

The word of God decrees, “You shall not lie with a male as with a woman; it is an abomination” (Leviticus 18:22). The original Hebrew for abomination refers to something to be loathed or despised. Anyone who encourages or condones homosexual acts is encouraging an abomination. The Glide Memorial Church in California, composed of homosexuals and with a homosexual pastor is an abomination. It is a little Sodom dressed up with religious garb and decorated with ritualistic performances to make it respectable. But it is not respectable, it is a warped yardstick by which a crooked world measures itself.

A state legislature which enacts a statute providing for and licensing homosexual “marriages” between consenting adults is simply approving and licensing an abomination. Such a homosexual union is not a marriage and no amount of sophisticated reasoning can make it so. That we will fall for such panderer’s pap, and open such a Pandora’s box of sexual evils, is proof of how far the mighty have fallen, and how far down the road to hell the cocktail set has led our nation. That’s the way I feel about it and I just wanted you to know. On the university campus I am constantly hearing wild, pie-eyed philosophers who spout the humanistic, relativistic, non-moral approach to life. I say to you as I say to them, “No matter how thin you slice that, it is still bologna.”

Yet in like manner these men in their dreamings defile the flesh, reject authority, and revile the glorious ones. But when the archangel Michael, contending with the devil, disputed about the body of Moses, he did not presume to pronounce a reviling judgment upon him, but said, "The Lord rebuke you."

Peter calls these same men false teachers. He says they even deny the Lord who bought them and declares they presently occupy the same position formerly held by false prophets. In the old covenant scriptures the prophet was associated with "the dreamer of dreams" and the people were warned against such a visionary who would come and say he had a revelation from God in a dream and seek to seduce the people to go after other gods and serve them. The command to Israel was as severe as it was specific. "But that prophet or that dreamer of dreams shall be put to death, because he has taught rebellion against the Lord your God" (Deut. 13:5).

The saints in all ages have been plagued by flighty fanatics and fallacious fanciers who imagine God has singled them out in the universe to bring some special message to the world. Many of these are harmless rhapsodists who are mentally disoriented, but some are dangerous. These latter delude men by writing "other scriptures" and claiming an inspiration which they do not possess. The first deserve pity and compassion, the latter censure.

Since God has revealed his will for the kingdom presided over by his Son, and that will was announced by the twelve emissaries who were called, chosen and commissioned for the task, I do not believe he speaks to men today through dreams, visions and trances. So far as I am concerned the apostles were uniquely the divinely-authorized ambassadors to the world. I accept their testimony as being that of the Holy Spirit. I categorically reject as having any spiritual significance the mental meanderings of Joseph Smith, Mary Baker Eddy, or any other self-proclaimed prophet of our day.

The dreamers with whom Jude had to do were especially vicious, assertive and arrogant. They manifested this in three ways. First, they defiled the flesh. The Gnostic theory that all matter was inherently evil led to two especially dangerous extremes. Since nothing really mattered but the spirit, nothing that was done physically mattered. Thus, one could engage in any kind of sexual abuse and gratify physical passion without concern for control or moral inhibition. Again, it was argued that grace was manifested to cover all sin, and the more sin the greater would be the grace. Thus grace was converted into an occasion to sin. It seems incredible to us today to even think of this kind of senseless trash being dumped upon communities of the redeemed but that is because we no longer live in the world of idolatry and pagan philosophy with which the called out ones were once surrounded. At that, it was not much different than some of the claptrap which we hear today.

Secondly, the filthy dreamers who claimed to possess special knowledge unavailable to the common saints, rejected authority. It was because of their boasted superiority that Jude calls our wholeness in Christ “our common salvation.” The ungodly persons who perverted the grace of God into licentiousness claimed to be free from all authority, and rode roughshod over all restraints. They claimed to have insights reached by special knowledge not even vouchsafed to the apostles through revelation.

One historian says the Gnostic speculations developed in the second century “into the most monstrous system of philosophy so-called which the human brain has ever conceived.” Tertullian saw the danger to the faith which was once for all delivered, when he wrote, “Away with all attempts to produce a motley Christianity, compounded of Stoicism, Platonism and dialectics. Possessing Christ Jesus, we want no curious disputations; we want no philosophical inquiries, after once enjoying the gospel.” Anyone who claims to be “wise above that which is written” is a wolf at the door and a viper in one’s bosom.

Thirdly, the infiltrators of whom Jude wrote reviled the glorious ones. The King James Version says, they “speak evil of dignities.” The New English Bible renders it “insult celestial beings.” The Authentic New Testament says “they speak slightly of dignities.” A footnote in the Revised Standard Version shows that the Greek word translated “the glorious ones” is literally “glories.” I am quite convinced that W. E. Vine is correct when he says the word refers to “angelic powers, in respect of their state as commanding recognition.” The meaning is that the false teachers actually poked fun at the angels and spoke derogatorily of celestial beings.

The Gnostic view that the angels were simply emanations from the divine energy, and that they (the Gnostics) were superior, as possessing a degree of knowledge to which the angels could not even aspire, caused them to speak slightly of them. It is especially appropriate for Jude to refer to this fact in conjunction with what he had just said about Sodom where the men of the city pounded upon the door of Lot’s house and demanded that the angels of God be turned over to them to humiliate and carnally abuse. It is bad enough to insult men who are our equals, but it is even worse to insult celestial beings. Peter says of these men that, “Bold and wilful, they are not afraid to revile the glorious ones.”

To show the consummate folly of mere men reviling higher beings Jude records that even Michael the archangel would not revile the devil, but turned him over to God to administer whatever reprimand his conduct demanded. In presenting this argument Jude does not quote from sacred scripture, but apparently draws upon an account in an apocryphal book The Assumption of Moses. Origen, who was born in Alexandria, Egypt, about 185 A.D., and whose name most of you will recognize, speaks of this book as being extant in his day. He says it contains this very account which Jude cites about the contest between Michael and the devil over the body of Moses.

The word apocrypha refers to that which was hidden as to source, and therefore adjudged as spurious. It does not necessarily imply that everything about an apocryphal writing is false, but rather that it did not proceed from the proper source. The Apocrypha refers to a collection of books not regarded or recognized as belonging to the sacred canon of scripture because they could not be proven to have been produced under divine inspiration. Sometimes these were called “bastard books” because their father was not known.

I see no reason for becoming upset that Jude quoted from an apocryphal book and used an illustration from it to make a point. Certainly the esoteric Gnostics would be familiar with such books. There is some evidence that they produced a few of them. The Assumption of Moses relates how God delivered the body of Moses to Michael to inter in a valley in the land of Moab opposite to Beth-peor. The devil made an appearance and demanded that the body be turned over to him, basing his contention upon two grounds.

First, the body deprived of the spirit was matter, and since matter was evil, and evil was his domain or jurisdiction, the body should be surrendered to him, to do with as he saw fit. Second, he argued that Moses was a murderer, having slain an Egyptian who was quarreling with an Israelite, and it was knowledge of this homicide which forced Moses to flee into Midian. It is implied that if Satan could have gained possession of the body of Moses he would have enshrined it and used it as an object of veneration, thereby causing many to regard it with idolatrous intent. However, Michael did not give in, and the sacred scripture says, “No man knows the place of his burial unto this day” (Deuteronomy 34:6). I am glad they do not, or tourists would all be showing you little rocks they had picked up in the vicinity and lugged back home.

The essential thing for us to remember is that, regardless of the details as to the source for Jude's report, he is making the point that blatant blasphemers can take a lesson from Michael. Even though he was an archangel and the devil was a fallen angel, Michael did not speak evil of him or throw his celestial weight around. Remember that, in the heat of contention and dispute Michael did not lose his angelic cool and engage in a railing accusation. Instead he said, "The Lord rebuke you." If it is wrong for an archangel to speak derogatorily of a fallen angel, it is wrong for a human being, regardless of how proud he may be of his professed wisdom, to speak evil of any angel. I am sure there must be a lesson in this for some of us but I'll let you dig it out for yourself!

But these men revile whatever they do not understand, and by those things that they know by instinct as irrational animals do, they are destroyed.

Our English word revile is from a term which literally means to despise. It is easily seen that it is from re and vile, and it has come to mean "to assail with abusive and contemptuous language." We have a word in our language which is spelled vilify. It is from the Latin and means "to make cheap." This is what we do when we defame, malign or slander. We should be willing and eager to give proper value to every person, thought or thing. To cheapen high ideals in the marketplace of thought is to eventually undermine the value of moral and ethical conduct.

It is bad enough to degrade what we understand but there are some who drift into the habit of adverse criticism and negativity until their whole life is colored and tinged by such an approach and they slander things they do not understand. It was this accusation which Jude makes against the characters about whom he warns. It is especially interesting because the Gnostics were boasted "know-it-alls" who claimed to be on the inside as to the mystical and mysterious. Frequently such persons deride what they do not understand rather than to admit their ignorance.

There are some things which we do not need to arrive at by reasoning or research. Such things we know instinctively, and in this respect we are like animals. These matters properly belong to the soul and not to the spirit. The soul, as here used, refers to the vitalizing or animating principle in the flesh, that which causes our lungs to expand and contract and the heart to palpitate. An animal has a soul but not a spirit, and rationality is a spiritual attribute.

The body (somo) makes one an animal, the soul (psyche) makes one a living animal, the spirit (pneuma) makes him a living human animal. Among the instincts which we share with irrational animals is that of the perpetuity of the species. This makes man a breeding animal. He possesses a sex drive in common with other living creatures. But because man can reason about what he knows instinctively he can fall lower than the other animals, and indulge in such carnality as no beast could or would imitate.

The sexual instinct is given to be creative and not destructive. We use the word “potency” which means power, to describe ability to engage in sexual congress and we label as impotent one who cannot exercise such ability. Power can be used constructively or destructively depending upon how it is employed. It is a commentary upon the so-called philosophers that they were ignorant of many things, and in those things they knew by instinct they destroyed themselves and those who came under their baneful influence.

Woe to them! For they walk in the way of Cain, and abandon themselves for the sake of gain to Balaam's error, and perish in Korah's rebellion.

Apparently those to whom Jude wrote were familiar with the old covenant scriptures. There is no intimation that the events herein recorded were couched in myth and legend as some of our more modern “Gnostics” would like for us to think. Cain, Balaam and Korah were treated as real historic figures, a view about which I entertain no doubt. There is no ground for doubt since I know plenty of Cains, Balaams and Korahs myself. The originals merely attest to the fact that human nature has not changed.

Comparing the false teachers to these three does not say much about their nature. Cain represents the practice of sin through jealousy. Balaam represents the teaching of sin through covetousness. Korah represents the encouragement of sin through rebellion. The enemies of the faith once delivered were jealous, covetous and rebellious. They were graspy, greedy and godless. Cain was shaken by fear, Balaam was slain in conflict and Korah was swallowed by the earth. The way of the transgressor is hard. Jude says, “Woe to them!”

It is now time to reaffirm one of my purposes in engaging in this little analysis of Jude. In my initial article last month I pointed out that a great many of my brethren are seriously mistaken in their identification of the faith once for all delivered to the saints. Betrayed by the party spirit into almost rabid defence of the peculiarity which gave their faction birth, they confuse peculiarity with the faith and conclude they are contending for the faith when they are merely debating a singular deduction, opinion or interpretation.

Such people brand as “false teachers” every person who disagrees with their particularity. They cannot be wrong and are therefore never false. Actually, each faction among us assumes that it has an infallible interpretation and that it is endowed with wisdom possessed by no one outside of its pale. This species of self-righteousness is the most dangerous enemy to the spirit of humility and understanding which ought to prevail among all of the saints.

Frequently it happens that the most dedicated and serious followers of Jesus are stigmatized as heretics and liberals, and brethren become their avowed enemies on borrowed testimony who have never read a word they have written. Their only crime is that of thinking. Their gravest “sin” is a refusal to be intimidated by editorial “hatchet men” who use every United States mail carrier as an innocent purveyor of poison pen literature. All of this stems from a false philosophy coupled with ignorance of what is involved in the faith for which we must contend. Let me suggest a few things for the consideration of honest minds and hearts.

1. No man denies the faith who believes with all his heart that Jesus of Nazareth has been raised up and made both Lord and Christ. Any person who has reformed his life and conduct and been immersed in the name of Jesus Christ upon the basis of his acceptance of that transcendent proposition is in the one faith. He is God’s child and he is my brother.

2. No one denies the faith once for all delivered by taking a position either pro or con upon the partisan issues which have been elevated to such prominence among us. Whether one regards instrumental music as justifiable or unjustifiable, whether he is premillennial or postmillennial, or whether he concurs or disagrees with the present method of supporting Herald of Truth, has nothing to do with his relationship to the faith.

3. No man is contending for the faith once for all delivered when he engages in debate on any of the aforementioned issues, or on any of the other factional matters which have fragmented, splintered and shivered us. One may earnestly contend for the faith and never mention these opinions, deductions, or human interpretations, and a preoccupation with such matters may hinder his diligent contention for the faith.

4. No one is a false teacher in the context of the new covenant scriptures simply because he may have formed a wrong opinion or given a wrong interpretation to some passage. He is a “mistaken brother” if the deduction he has reached is contrary to the tenor of God’s revelation, and in some respects all of us are in this category since we are limited by human fallibility. But no man is a false teacher merely because he expresses a view on instrumental music, charismatic gifts, the millennium, Sunday-school classes, or any other controversial matter in our feeble little circle of thought, even though such expression may be contrary to the dogma of the party “somewhats.”

More harm is done to the cause by labelling such saints “false teachers” than by any expression of their views, whether such views be correct or incorrect. Many brethren in the primitive congregations were seriously mistaken about a lot of things, yet the term “false teachers” is only used once by an inspired apostle. Peter said there would be false teachers among the congregations of the saints as there had been false prophets among the ancients. The word for false is pseudo, and the word pseudos refers to “a conscious and intentional falsehood.” A pseudo-prophetes is “one who, acting the part of a divinely inspired prophet, utters falsehood under the name of divine prophecies.” A pseudo-christos is “one who falsely lays claim to the name and office of the divine Messiah” (Matt. 24:24).

One cannot escape the fact that the word false as used in the sacred scriptures has to do with deliberate lying. It represents a conscious attempt to deceive by invention or fabrication. The only time the word “false teachers” is used, a description of their character is given. They were men who secretly brought in destructive heresies. They actually denied Jesus, the Master who bought them. They enticed many by their licentiousness. They caused the way of truth to be reviled. Because of insatiable greed they exploited the believers with false “words.”

To apply the term false teachers to humble brethren who disagree with some of our views and deductions is as sinful as it is absurd and ridiculous. It makes of us slanderers and false accusers. It causes us to speak evil of one another when we are specifically told that we must put away all “evil speakings.” The anomaly of the whole thing is that if being mistaken about the implication of a spiritual term makes one a false teacher, a lot of brethren are false teachers about “false teachers.” “They desire to be teachers of the law without understanding either what they are saying or the things about which they make assertions” (1 Timothy 1:7).

We have been betrayed by the party spirit, a work of the flesh, into the mistaken view that we are the authorized interpreters of the sacred scriptures because we are “the faithful brethren.” But there are now more than two dozen “loyal” Churches of Christ, with no two of them recognizing each other. In our mixed-up mess and messed-up mix, the faithful brethren in one group are the unfaithful ones to every other group. Every person among us is a “false teacher” to someone, and every one is a heretic to someone else.

Much of this stems from the fact that we confuse the faith with the letters addressed to those who are in it. The faith is the proclamation of the divine relationship available unto us through the atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is the action of God in human history by which reconciliation was made possible for those who were alienated through sin. The faith is not a written code. It is not a compilation of moral and ethical precepts. It is not even the completed canon of new covenant treatises and letters. These are all tremendously important and we could not live without them, but they are not the faith which came and delivered us from the child-conductor of law.

Certainly it is important that we search, probe and investigate the sacred writings.

We must embrace every truth contained in them as we become aware of it. No truth in the universe is unimportant. No truth that God has revealed can be unimportant. But all truths are not equally important. The body of truth, like the human body, is composed of many members, some of which are essential to being, and others of which contribute to well-being. The faith once delivered has to do with our relationship to Him who is the truth, as well as the way and the life. One can be in Him who is the Truth without comprehending every truth, else no human being could be in Him.

Until we come to a clear conception of this we will continue to divide and form a new sect to guard, protect, promulgate and defend every deduction which we make and which we regard as a truth to be bound on earth as we imagine it to be bound in heaven. It is always better to be right than wrong. It is never right to be wrong and never wrong to be right. But our life does not depend upon being right but upon being in Him who is the right one.

It is time that we daringly and boldly reassess both our stance and our slant. Surely we have more to contribute to the world visited by the Prince of peace than schism and division. If we are going to change for the better and sow the seeds of peace we should start now. Someone has said, "You cannot repent too soon, because you do not know how soon may be too late."

William Barclay wrote, "A church can be torn in two about the color of a carpet, or a pulpit hanging, or about the shape or metal of the cups which are to be used in the Sacrament. The last thing that men and women seem to learn in matters of religion is a relative sense of values; and the tragedy is that it is so often dispute and magnification of matters of no importance which wreck the peace."

It was Gilbert Chesterton who said, "Truths turn into dogmas the moment they are debated."

Letters I Receive

Mission Messenger (September 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

It was Voltaire who wrote in his Philosophical Dictionary, back in 1764, that mail is “the consolation of life.” It is quite apparent that he did not receive letters like some that come to me. Which reminds me that Sydney Smith said, “Correspondences are like trousers before the invention of suspenders; it is impossible to keep them up.” Sometimes I get a hundred letters per week and some of them are not much consolation.

The ones I get the biggest bang out of are from brethren who have just read their first issue of the paper. Some thoughtful soul subscribed for them and they start reading out of curiosity. Before they have gone very far they get their dander up and by the time they read the fourth page they are convinced that I am the antichrist because I think there are “Christians in the sects” as Alexander Campbell so aptly stated it. They launch a barrage of three or four pages of single-spaced material pecked out on the trusty Smith Corona, thinking that I will be fried to a crisp when I read the scriptures they quote out of context and misapply, as if that is what God intended. But “none of these things move me and neither count I my life dear unto myself.” I have been able to weather the attack of some pretty high-powered brotherhood flame-throwers.

There’s a good old brother down in Texas who would really prefer to like me if he was not afraid he would have to answer for it in the judgment of that great day. He writes about every six months. It takes that long for him to reach the boiling point because he operates on a slow-burning fuse. He reads everything I write and treasures it up against “the day of wrath,” but when I say something that falls like a spark in the flash-pan of his old spiritual muzzle-loader he points it in the direction of Saint Louis and lets loose a blast which rattles the windows and is intended to blow me to “kingdom come.” Like myself, he must have found learning to type a real chore, because he has apparently not learned about the shift keys and writes without ever using a capital letter. He operates solely in lower case. He is also very conservative in his use of paper and when he reaches the bottom of the sheet he keeps turning it back and typing over the last three or four lines. There isn’t an inch of wasted space on the entire page. It is completely covered with hieroglyphics interspersed with sundry admonitions and questions written in with a ball-point pen, such as “I dare you to read this!” and “Now, what do you think?”

Then, there is the leader of a small congregation of saints in the hills of Kentucky. A good many brethren in this generation claim to speak in an unknown tongue but he is the only one I know who writes in an unknown tongue. I always lay his letters back until I can wrestle with them at length since I am not possessed of the gift of interpretation. Ordinarily I can do a fair job deciphering and pretty well get the gist of the epistle so I can answer it, although occasionally I miss it as far as Mom did years ago when she let loose a rock at a stray dog in our backyard and killed our turkey gobbler.

If you think male critics are “tough cookies” you ought to read the occasional letters I get from some of my sisters in the Lord who think I have lost my spiritual marbles and gone off the deep end. They demonstrate beyond doubt that Rudyard Kipling was right when he wrote, “the female of the species is more deadly than the male.” Women have such a subtle and gentle way of taking the hide off of you by saying such things as, "I have been praying that you would regain your mind and return to sanity before it is too late." Nothing bugs such a sister more than to imply that the party with which she is affiliated may not be "the one holy, apostolic and catholic church of God on earth," to the exclusion of all others. It is even worse if she was a Baptist when she married and had to be "converted to the Church of Christ" in order to have any peace here, or hope of glory over there. I have learned never to argue with such a member of the distaff side of the human family by correspondence. You will end up writing a stack of letters a foot high and never make a dent. So I simply write polite acknowledgments and go on loving all of my sisters and turn them over to God who knows what makes them tick!

I suspect the best thing that ever happened to me was to learn that one does not have to agree with me to be received of God and recognized as a child in the majestic family. Right there and then I saw that I could receive people as God did and recognize them as my brothers and sisters whether they agreed with me or not. We are not brothers because we see everything alike but because we have the same Father. Brotherhood is based upon a common fatherhood. Fellowship results from mutual sonship. I resolved not to make anything a condition of fellowship which God had not made a condition of salvation. If one was good enough for God to save he was not too bad for me to tolerate. I will not put out those whom God has taken in.

I'll never forget the time I was meditating and mulling things over in an American Airlines plane, and the thought hit me that we are all brothers in error. That is the only kind of brothers there are. Not one of us knows it all. We are all ignorant but just about different things. Up to that time I had always regarded those in other factions, segments and splinters of our fragmented movement as brethren in error. If they had something we opposed they were sectarians. If they opposed something we had they were "antis." We were the faithful and loyal brethren, dyed-in-the-wool believers, “the knowing ones.” It had been a comforting thought and a nice escape hatch when you wanted to avoid calling upon one from another party to lead in prayer. But when God slammed that mental door shut I had to re-think my relationship with my brothers in the Lord. I dropped the brothers in error fallacy like a hot potato. It was born of pride and self-righteousness, so I purged it from my feeble vocabulary. I praise God for the deliverance from that kind of ignorance and arrogance, although I have a whole great big lot to learn yet!

It’s great not to have to get uptight when someone writes and tells you where to get off, or where he thinks you should abandon ship. You don’t have to bail out just because someone draws a bead upon you. I never get upset or come unglued because brethren do not agree with my explanation or understanding of this passage, or that. I intend to do my own thinking “without benefit of clergy,” and I want them to do the same. I do not intend to impose my thinking upon anyone, and I do not intend to allow anyone to impose his upon me. There are a lot of things I do not know, but there is one thing I do know and that is wherever men are free to think there will be differences. Slavery and chains represent the price we must pay in order to have abject conformity.

I would not want to be in a fellowship of non-thinkers where you have to check your intellect at the door as you enter and reclaim it on the way out as you leave. A man told me recently that where he attended it was such a tight situation you did not need to take your brain with you to meeting, or if you did, you could unscrew your head and put it under the seat until time for the invitation song. If you are in a fellowship of people who think, all sorts of differences will challenge you. Our unity lies not in seeing everything alike, or in liking everything we see. It simply depends upon everyone being in Christ. He is our unity and our peace. The umbrella of his love is great enough to allow all of us who are God’s children to come in out of the rain.

There are a lot of saints who “take pen in hand” to ask if I’ve “gone off” with this group or that. Some of them lament that they cannot tell what segment I am with. Praise God! Our brethren have no real concept of being a “Christian only” and they have to categorize every person they meet. This is the result of trying to identify with God through an organization rather than through the indwelling Spirit. They cannot conceive of one being free from all human organizations resulting from the varied patterns which men have read back into the Book. Regardless of how often I say that I belong to no party, sect or faction, but simply to Jesus, it makes no dent in the thinking apparatus of many of our readers. It is like trying to describe an ice cream cone to a Hottentot.

I am not going anywhere. I do not intend to saddle up and ride off into the gloaming or gathering dusk with any religious posse. I do not belong to any special group of saints because I belong to Jesus, but because I belong to Jesus I belong to all of my brethren. I am still meeting with the same group of brethren with whom I have always met. I hope to continue to do so while I live. If I could not be free with them I could not be free anywhere. If I wanted to be sectarian, and I don’t, I could be sectarian where I am. What I intend to do is stay where I am and share with all of God’s children who will allow me to do so. I do not intend to impose either my presence or perceptions upon anyone. Neither do I intend to be told by men where I can go and where I cannot go. I recognize but one Lord, and he is at the right hand of God.

We can whip the problem of division! We can overcome it! But we cannot do so by dividing. The way to unite is to unite! You can talk about it, debate about it, and confer about it but you will never unite until you unite! Then why not start there if that is our goal? We can argue and discuss when we are united. The fact is I am already united with God’s children, all of them. When I united with Jesus I united with every person who is in him. My task is not to achieve unity. It is not to attain it. My task is to demonstrate it!

Let me save you some postage. Some of you will be bound to write and ask how we can be one so long as some have instrumental music and others oppose it, or so long as some have Sunday schools and others oppose them, or so long as some have individual cups and others oppose them? That is easy! Quit making tests of fellowship out of them. Quit acting as children and quit yourselves like men. God did not make conditions of salvation out of these things, so quit making them conditions of union and communion. Hold your opinions but do not forge them into dogma. Do not violate your own conscience but do not measure others by it. “Hast thou faith? have it to thyself.”

Of course, on a very pragmatic basis, be careful of the preacher you have to hold your meeting. It was preachers who fragmented us in the first place, and it is to their interest in a lot of cases to keep us apart. Many saints, if they unite at all, will have to do so in spite of the opposition of the preachers in their faction. But if it is a sin to be divided and a blessing to be united, give up your division and unite! There will be problems in unity, as there are in marriage, but there is no problem love cannot solve! As Paul said, “Love outlasts everything else” and that includes our problems!

Wandering Stars

Mission Messenger (October 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

This is the third installment I have written as a kind of “down-home” type of analysis of the letter of Jude. No doubt a lot of you think I am spending too much time in a “creeping conversation” when you would prefer a “running commentary.” But I sort of like to visit this way about scriptural things and you’ll have to forgive me if you have itchy spiritual feet and would like to get on down the expositional road.

I am intrigued by the letter of Jude because he was writing to saints who were being infiltrated by Satan’s secret agents, and needed an exhortation to “contend for the faith.” The “filthy dreamers” who were causing the difficulty were not simply “mistaken brethren” who had developed some odd ideas as to how things ought to be done. They were not preachers who were on this side or that of something like “the Sunday school issue” or who were hung up on the support of items such as Herald of Truth or orphan homes. A lot of brethren get the majestic faith once delivered mixed up with every little argument about their deductions, interpretations and opinions, and anyone who disagrees with them has “denied the faith.”

Our brethren who differ with us about the motley collection of things out of which they have made dogmatic wedges to split the disciples into warring and hostile camps have not “perverted the grace of our God into licentiousness and denied our only Master and Lord, Jesus Christ.” Regardless of which side they are on they are still in the faith and to imply they are not reveals as much about our ignorance as it does about theirs. The fact is that a lot of brethren do not know what the faith really is, and they confuse every little wrangle and rag-chewing debate with “contending for the faith.” They are gravely mistaken and serve to contribute to the confusion.

Once, when I was down in Texas, a good old brother drove a long distance to bring me some material he had written and put in print to prove that no congregation could be recognized as “loyal” to Jesus where the brethren did not use fermented wine in the Lord’s Supper. He referred to congregations which did not use it as “grape juice churches.” When I told him it did not make any difference to me and that I could honor the memory of Jesus with either Welch’s Grape Juice or Mogen David Wine, he whipped out a couple of propositions he carried around already signed by himself and offered to “contend earnestly for the faith” if I would debate him. I felt a sense of compassion for him as pronounced as my sense of regret that once I was in his same shoes and didn’t know what “the faith” was either. Before he left he said I was further gone than he thought.

The people to whom Jude wrote knew what the faith was. They couldn’t get it mixed up with the new testament scriptures because they didn’t have them yet. So they knew the faith was the fact of Jesus in history, calling us out of a world which lay in wickedness, and into Christ Jesus. The faith was “Christ crucified, a stumblingblock to Jews and folly to the Gentiles, but to those who are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God.” This was what was preached. This was the proclamation. And this is what was denied by the “ungodly persons” against whom Jude warned. They denied the only Master and Lord. They denied that Christ was the power of God. They denied that He was the wisdom of God.

These are blemishes on your love feasts, as they boldly carouse together, looking after themselves, waterless clouds, carried along by winds; fruitless trees in late autumn, twice dead, uprooted; wild waves of the sea, casting up the foam of their own shame; wandering stars for whom the nether gloom of darkness has been reserved forever (verses 12, 13).

Jude borrows from the whole realm of nature to depict the erratic characters with whom he deals. His language is powerful and poignant. It is like flashes of lightning, illuminating the whole landscape, and bringing every object into sharp focus. For almost a century the communities of the redeemed ones ate together in many parts of the Roman Empire. The wealthier members brought hampers of food and all of the saints sat down together and shared as an exemplification of the tie that bound them together in Christian love. Masters and slaves ate together. Men and women ate together. Rich and poor ate together. The Agape, or love feast, was a proclamation to the heathen world of a dynamic which transcended ethnic, social and sexual differences.

William Barclay writes: “The Love Feast, the Agape, was one of the very earliest features of the Church. The Agape was a meal of fellowship, held on the Lord’s Day. It was a meal to which everyone brought what he could, and at which all shared and shared alike. It was a lovely idea that the Christians in each little house Church should sit down on the Lord’s Day to eat in fellowship together. No doubt there were some who could bring much, and there were others who could bring little. No doubt for many of the slaves it was the only decent meal in all the weeks.”

Dr. Charles Hase in his History of the Christian Church suggests that the love-feast grew out of a sense of ecclesiastical family life. It was as natural for the family of God to sit down at the table together as it was for any other family. Moreover, to eat together in the days of the apostles was an overt demonstration of trust and acceptance. Clement of Alexandria wrote, “The meal occurs because of love, not love because of the meal, which is a proof of a generous and shared good will.”

When Jude wrote, the feasts of love were being invaded by the Gnostic heretics who used them as occasions for attempted seduction of the women who were present. Peter says, “They have eyes full of adultery, insatiable for sin. They entice unsteady souls.” The word rendered “blemishes” in Jude is spilas, which means a hidden reef, or a submerged rock, on which a ship can be wrecked. The men whom Jude describes were smooth and cunning, but they were deceptive and destructive. Their hidden motives were calculated to destroy fellowship and wreck the “ship of faith.” They turned the feast of love into an occasion for lust and used the kiss of love as an unholy thing. History attests that many followed their pernicious ways and caused the truth to be evil spoken of.

Bold carousing indicates open revelry, flouting every convention and ignoring all the rules of decorum and dignity. While this says something about the freedom and openness of the meetings of the saints, it also indicates something about the problems encountered in a pagan world. I have seen some tense situations during my lifetime but I have never seen a basket-dinner or a covered-dish luncheon, as we designate our modern love-feasts, taken over and disrupted by the kind of men whom Jude describes. I am sure there have been occasions when sexual perverts were present but I have never witnessed bold carousing by those concerned only with gratification of self.

I think this indicates that the faith has had an impact upon the social culture and the spread of Christian influence has offset raw and crude paganism. That is why it seems a shame when those who “look only after themselves” and are boorishly inconsiderate of others, flaunt the amenities of good behavior and want to act as if they had just crawled out of a cave. It is a tragedy when those who seek to be revolutionary leaders revolt against the wrong things. Even at that, however, our gatherings are more frequently disturbed by someone snoring during “the sermon” than by noisy carousing.

The expression “waterless clouds, carried along by winds” is an apt description of the Gnostic philosophers. I have lived and worked in rural areas enough to know the baneful effects of prolonged drouth. I have seen farmers whose crops and gardens were seared, look with longing glance at every cloud arising on the horizon, only to register dismay when the wind wafted those clouds across the sky, and they disintegrated without shedding a drop of moisture.

The Gnostics were great on promises but short on performance. In spite of vaunted boasting they were spiritually empty and vacuous. The thirsty soul was never refreshed by them. The parched heart was saddened by further neglect. Once a man was brought under their subtle but malign influence, he was condemned to a life of speculation wholly devoid of reality. There was no refreshing moisture in these human clouds.

Jude describes them as “fruitless trees in late autumn, twice dead, uprooted.” When I was a lad entering high school we owned an apple orchard. It required a great deal of trimming and pruning to make it productive. Because of neglect by a previous owner, some trees had to be removed when we took the orchard over. We allowed them to stand the first season, marking those which bore no fruit and gave no return. In late autumn, when the season was past, we knew there were some trees which would never bear. They had been marked as dead in the past and were now seen to be dead in the present, with no hope of revival.

For the welfare of the orchard such trees had to be removed. The main roots were cut and a tractor hitched to the trunks and as the chain tightened the trees made a cracking sound and were slowly dragged out, leaving a gaping hole where they once stood. There is nothing sadder to see, in the eyes of an orchardist, than an uprooted tree, which could have borne fruit, but became so infested with borers that the life was sapped from it. Those men who took up space and “cumbered the ground” in congregations of the righteous, while exuding poison and corruption had to be removed.

Perhaps you have heard of the deadly Upas tree which grows in Java, Sumatra and parts of equatorial Africa. It exudes a toxic substance which produces death to any bird or animal attracted to it. The poison is used by natives to put upon their arrow points, bringing sure death to any victim whose flesh is penetrated by the weapon. Those who deny the identity of Jesus, who will not regard Him as Lord and Christ are like this deadly tree, bringing death instead of life.

They are “wild waves of the sea, casting up the foam of their own shame.” Perhaps because I was born so far inland, separated by a thousand miles from the nearest ocean, I am fascinated by the Atlantic and Pacific. I can sit for a long period of time watching the undulating waves roll in, reaching their fingers of spume up the beach, and then receding into that great green body which holds so many mysteries in its depths. As I meditate by the seashore I am constantly recalling what the sacred scriptures say about the sea. I never forget that John said, “The sea gave up the dead that were in it,” and three sentences later on said, “Then I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth had passed away, and the sea was no more.” It is difficult for me to think of a new heaven and a new earth, with no sea.

One of the things that impresses me about the sea is that, after a storm, every wave carries not only its white crest, but also a load of sediment, dirt and filth. When the foam begins to retreat you can trace its limit reached by the black line of finely-ground debris it has deposited. The content of the heart of the wave is thus revealed in the mark of its own activity. It was thus with the false teachers of Jude’s day and the false prophets of a previous era. They were wild, restless, stormy demonstrations of the forces at work in the world of their day, and their very activity served only to reveal the shame of their motives and thoughts.

They were “wandering stars for whom the nether gloom of darkness has been reserved forever.” Jude thus calls upon all nature to testify to the character of deceivers. James Moffatt said, “Sky, land and sea are ransacked for illustrations of the character of these men.” The clouds scudding across the sky, the waves tossing on the ocean, and the planets out of orbit, bear testimony to the wavering course of emptiness and void in the lives of men who are guilty of rejecting authority and do not hesitate to “revile the glorious ones.”

Nothing is more orderly than the celestial system where suns and satellites move in such majestic array they are literally designated the hosts, that is, the armies of heaven. For a star to leave its plotted path and go wandering across the face of the heaven is a symbol of confusion and disaster of the worst kind. The word disaster is a combination of the Latin dis, from, and astron, a star. It was originally a misfortune thought of as resulting from an “unlucky star.”

Men who leave the faith once delivered, which makes us satellites revolving around Jesus, as the Sun of the spiritual universe, the center of light, write their own doom. The nether gloom of darkness awaits them. Nether means lower and “the nether region” was a term applied to the abyss, conceived of as a bottomless pit, thus a place utterly devoid of all light. It is interesting that Jude speaks in this fashion of the ultimate fate of those who professed to be purveyors of light. The Gnostic regarded those who trusted in revelation as ignorant of the greater mysteries of knowledge which came from inner light, and yet it was for those who made such claims that the gloom of darkness was reserved. They were waterless clouds! They were fruitless trees! They were wandering stars! They were empty, barren and erratic!

It was of these also that Enoch in the seventh generation from Adam prophesied, saying, "Behold, the Lord cometh with his holy myriads, to execute judgment on all, and to convict all the ungodly of all their deeds of ungodliness which they have committed in such an ungodly way, and of all the harsh things in which ungodly sinners have spoken against him."

This statement has been the source of great controversy among scholarly expositors. I have read reams of material on it. The contention centers around whether or not Jude quoted from an apocryphal book, and if he did, whether he sanctioned that book as an inspired piece of writing. That there is a Book of Enoch is a fairly well admitted fact. Its origin is obscure. There are those who think that it was in circulation in the day when Jude wrote. Perhaps the most logical presumption (and it is just that) is that it was written in the century before Jesus was born, and by a Jew who wanted to bring comfort to his people in a time of distress and persecution. He may have recorded tradition allegedly reaching back to Enoch, or he may have given his book the name of Enoch to gain for it greater respect and wider readership.

Actually, the book was not discovered until 1820, when it was found in an ancient Ethiopic version by Dr. Laurence of Oxford. In it occurs the quotation: "Behold he comes with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon them, and destroy the wicked, and reprove all the carnal, for everything which the sinful and ungodly have done, and committed against him." There is no way by which I know to prove that the book was in existence in the days of Jude, but if it was then in existence one could not prove Jude quoted from it. Both he and the unknown writer might have quoted from a common tradition.

As far as I am personally concerned, this is a matter over which theologians may feel free to wrangle at any length they desire. Regardless of the background from which Jude derived the statement, whether it be a written document, an oral tradition, or a direct revelation, he affirms that Enoch made the statement and that is sufficient for me. When the lightning of argument passes away and the roll of the thunder ceases, the passage will still be there as it has been for centuries, and I accept it.

At the risk of being boresome by repetition I must remark again that the people to whom Jude wrote were familiar with the characters mentioned in the old covenant scriptures. Among the revered ones in the Jewish heart was Enoch, who walked with God, and was not to be found when men sought for him, because the Lord took him, allowing him to bypass the portals of death. By such faith he continued to testify of the value of walking with God even though he was dead.

Jude identifies Enoch as a prophet who foretold the Lord's coming in judgment upon the wicked. The divine judgment was to be universal. It was to be directed against deeds of ungodliness and harsh things spoken against Him. This kind of wrath would certainly fall with powerful impact upon those under censure by Jude. In both word and deed they dishonored Jesus and disgraced His name before the heathen.

These are grumblers, malcontents, following their own passions, loud-mouthed boasters, flattering people to gain advantage.

In this stern indictment there are five accusations brought. They serve to show how disreputable were the characters of those who would stoop to any depth in their defilement. They were grumblers. In its verb form the original occurs eight times and is always translated "murmur" in the Authorized Version. It means to mutter or grumble in discontent. It is a term used to describe sullen complaining against God by Israel in the wilderness. Sometimes the Old English word "chide" is used to describe the attitude of those who rebelled against God's leadership and providential care.

They were malcontents. The original is found only here in the scriptures. It is from a combined term which means to find fault with or to blame one's allotted fate. It describes a person who is never satisfied but blames circumstances for his condition. To such an individual nothing is ever good. He is always surly, disgruntled and down-in-the-mouth. He is convinced that today is bad but tomorrow will be worse. When he has a choice of two evils he takes both. To such a person every cloud has a sable lining. Someone described such an individual as one who feels bad when he feels good for fear he will feel worse when he feels better. Nothing can discourage a congregation of saints more than to have someone dump a truckload of gloom upon them every time they gather.

They follow their own passions. This means they were utterly selfish, inconsiderate of the rights of others, and concerned only about their own gratification. No one else counted. Others were put here simply to be used. Such an attitude will destroy any association. In the congregation to which Jude wrote some came to pray while others came to prey. The first sought to bend their wills to God while the second thought to bend God to their wills. One was motivated by love of compassion, the other by the lust of passion.

They were loud-mouthed boasters. The Authorized Version reads "their mouth speaketh great swelling words." The original hyperogkos is used only here and in 1 Peter 2:18, where Peter is dealing with the same men. All of us know men who are vacuous and empty-headed but who strut and parade around, loudly trying to demonstrate a knowledge they do not possess. A boaster has been described as a man "who every time he opens his mouth, puts his feats in." It is observable that those who brag the most generally accomplish the least and vice versa. There is no other sound in nature as sweet to the ear of a braggart as his own voice. He is loud, not so much to convince others as to convince himself.

They flattered people to gain advantage. One compliments others for their own good, but he flatters them for his good. Flattery is obnoxious to all except the flattered. It is interesting that these men are described in one breath as loud, arrogant boasters, and in the next as fawning, cringing, servile camp-followers. They were like chameleons, changing their color to match their surroundings. Their description by Jude can be summed up by the words complainers, critics, callous, conceited and contemptible.

But you must remember, beloved, the predictions of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ; they said to you, "In the last time there will be scoffers, following their own ungodly passions." It is these who set up divisions, worldly people, devoid of the Spirit.

There is an indication here that the words of the apostles regarding the rise of scoffers were generally known. We cannot remember that which we have not heard or known. It is enough for us to have the general predictions as recorded in the letters and it is not necessary that we conclude that Jude was giving an exact quotation. Paul had told the Ephesian elders with whom he conferred at the maritime center of Miletus, "From among your own selves will arise men speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them" (Acts 20:30).

He wrote to Timothy that "in the last days there will come times of stress" and describes those who would be "treacherous, reckless, and swollen with deceit" and who would hold the form of religion while denying the power of it. He says "Avoid such people." He compares them to Jannes and Jambres, the Egyptian magicians who opposed Moses. In view of this the recipients of the letter from Jude should have expected the infiltration of the unscrupulous purveyors of deceit who came among them.

Peter says that “scoffers will come in the last days with scoffing, following their own passions.” He asserts they would ask “Where is the promise of his coming?” and would postulate continuity in the future based upon conformity and regularity in the past. He declares that they deliberately ignore the fact of the flood. All of this serves to help us understand the kind of men against whom the saints were to earnestly contend for the faith once delivered.

The scoffers who followed their own passions, and walked in their own ways, set up divisions. Division in the body of Christ is a sin. It is a shame and a scandal. It denies the purpose of God, the prayer of Jesus and the plan of heaven. Division of the brethren is not a remedy for sin, it is a sin. To set up division is the work of those devoid of the Spirit, for the purpose of the Spirit is to make us one. The party spirit unties us while the Holy Spirit unites us.

Division is a result and it is produced by a cause. It is not an accident but a consequence. The scoffers created division by their infiltration of the love feasts and the formation of cliques inimical to the fellowship of the whole body. Unfortunately, few indeed will ever admit to setting up divisions. Divisions are always caused by “the other side.” But divisions are primarily the results of attitudes. They exist in the heart before they do in the open. If you would eliminate division you must first purge the heart of the party spirit. As long as it lurks in the inner man it will find expression in the community of saints.

The term rendered worldly people is translated “sensual” in the Authorized Version. This is a significant expression because it means that those who considered themselves to be the spiritually elite were actually living on the animal level. The word is used as the reverse of the spiritual, and it is implied that those who set up or create division do so because they live and act upon a baser level than the spiritual. Those who justify and condone division ordinarily do so upon the ground of spiritual correctness and closeness to the divine. The ones of whom Jude wrote were devoid of the Spirit.

But you, beloved, build yourselves up on your most holy faith; pray in the Holy Spirit; keep yourselves in the love of God; wait for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life.

Here we have the four ingredients essential to the successful spiritual life. In the previous passage there is a description of the character of those who scoff at the way God has ordained. The word “but” indicates that we should expect a different character to be discussed. In my childhood days, when medical doctors were scarce, a lot of home remedies were used. Each autumn the children were subjected to a tonic made of a concoction brewed from various roots and herbs and which was to “build up resistance” against the encroachment of winter’s cold. The prescription Jude here administers is the divine formula for building up resistance against false philosophy.

1. Build yourselves up on your most holy faith. It is easily seen that faith is regarded as a foundation upon which the secure life is constructed. There are three bases upon which man can build his life— knowledge, faith and opinion. It is a demonstration of divine wisdom that our hope is not based upon either the first or the last. Knowledge results from the testimony of one’s own senses, faith results from the testimony of others to what they have seen or heard. Faith is based upon fact attested to by witnesses. When that testimony is found to be credible the honest mind is forced to accept it, or else, in order to be consistent, it must reject all testimony even though properly certified and authenticated. To do this would render the mind dishonest.

It is easy to see that any relationship based upon a unique phenomenon, a one-time occurrence which is non-repetitive, must be conditioned upon belief of testimony. It is dependent upon the experiences of those who were present and participated in the event. The rational mind asks only about the character and qualification of the witnesses, and having been satisfied as to both, will accept the testimony as conditioned upon fact.

One who builds upon knowledge will always have an inadequate foundation because of the human predicament which is created by limitations of time and space. Paul affirms that “knowledge puffs up, but love builds up,” and adds, “If anyone imagines that he knows something, he does not yet know as he ought to know” (1 Cor. 8:1, 2). Increasing knowledge only serves to prove the limitation of knowledge in the past, and acts as a warning that further knowledge will prove the insufficiency of that in the present. The inadequacy of opinion is recognized when one remembers what some wag has said. “An opinion is a vagrant idea without visible means of support.”

I have no problem in erecting my dwelling on faith which is a firm confidence as to the things for which I hope and a firm conviction as to “things not yet seen.” In fact, my whole life is governed by and ordered upon the principle of faith. I would have difficulty building myself up on anything else. Faith is not something I have contrived or created, but something transmitted. It is my natural and spontaneous response to divine revelation. It is not the result of someone’s fantasy, opinion, dream or vision.

We must not carelessly pass by the fact that Jude calls this your most holy faith. When I see the word holy applied to anything by the Spirit I immediately recognize that the thing mentioned is different. Actually, that is the implication of the word holy. A thing is holy because it is different, and it is different because it was dedicated or devoted to God. Under the old covenant the presence-bread was different than other bread, the table upon which it was placed in the sanctuary was different than other tables, the perfume used as incense was different than other perfumes, the robes of the high priest were different than other robes. All were said to be holy. This means that a thing was sanctified or holy (for the words mean the same), not because of its nature or construction or character, but because it was consecrated to God.

Jude speaks of the most holy faith exactly as other inspired writers talk of “the most holy place.” That place was the inner sanctuary where God communed with His people from the mercy seat. And the most holy faith is the closest one can come to God while in the flesh. It is this faith which makes the individual heart the true sanctuary in which God dwells in this age. When men speak of an auditorium as “the sanctuary” they indicate that they are caught in the web of mingled Judaism and Romanism. They are speaking as if Jesus had not come and died to rend the veil of the temple.

The faith is holy because it is different from every other faith. It is not the result of man’s rationalization but of God’s revelation. It is not a glorified guess but a glorious gift. It is holy because it came from One who dwells in absolute holiness, the one who is wholly Other or different, and it is holy because it can transform a sinful man and make him holy. The most holy faith does not enable one to turn over a new leaf but to turn up with a new life. It caused God to become like man in Christ, and enables man to become like God in Christ. “Be ye holy for I am holy.”

Pray in the Holy Spirit. The secret of inner strength to resist evil is prayer. The reason why this is so is quite simple. As long as man relies upon himself he is trusting in a broken reed. Not long ago I asked a friend when he first realized that he was falling away from God, and his answer was, “When I quit praying.” In prayer we acknowledge three things—dearth of ability, dependence upon God, and desire for help. Phillips Brooks wrote, “A prayer in its simplest definition is merely a wish turned God-ward.” Archbishop R. C. Trench wrote, “Prayer is not overcoming reluctance; it is laying hold of his highest willingness.”

I must confess that for years I do not think I really consciously prayed in the Holy Spirit. I knew the admonition was there for I had read the letter of Jude. However, I suspect that I read the words without grasping the thought. But I knew very little about the Holy Spirit. He was the forgotten and neglected one-third of the Godhead, and was like a rich uncle in the family of which we had heard but had never seen. I am afraid that I recited prayers to the Father as a kind of religious exercise, in discharge of a solemn duty, or in fulfillment of “the law’s demands.” It was a kind of “pray or be damned situation,” so we prayed at the proper times.

Of course, it is no longer like that and I am glad. One big thing is that I have learned what it means that through Christ “we have obtained access to this grace wherein we stand.” And just as it was promised I now “rejoice in our hope of sharing the glory of God.” And to cap the entire experience is the marvelous truth that “hope does not disappoint us, because God’s love has been poured into our hearts through the Holy Spirit which has been given us” (Romans 5:5).

There is a big difference between a life of words and “the Word of life.” I recall when I used to quote Romans 5:1-5, and it seems now that I always did so to “slather into the Baptists.” If not them it was some other group whose constituents were high on what was termed “faith only.” I was always interested in proving someone else was wrong. I had a drawer filled with clippings on every group. I could go to the Mormon drawer and get out a handful of articles from their papers. I could go to the Methodist drawer or the Catholic drawer and both were crammed full of some pretty wild and pie-eyed statements with which to lambast their several adherents. I showed my love for them by clobbering them over the head under the excuse of correcting their errors. I rejoiced that they had nothing to reply because we had no errors upon which they could draw a bead.

I no longer read the precious word as if it were a divine arsenal especially provided with shafts to hurl at specific organizations created by men in their bumbling attempts to please God by reading their own theological computer print-outs. I can distinguish between a loaf of bread and a baseball bat or a club with which to assail an opponent. And two things have happened. First, I am farther from being a Roman Catholic, Methodist or Baptist than I have ever been in my life. I no longer like even our own brand of sectarianism. Secondly, the sacred scriptures mean more to me than ever before in my uneventful life. I cherish this Book and it nourishes my soul.

“Access to grace” is no longer a phrase but an experience. “Rejoicing in hope” is not merely a quotation but a participation. “Sharing the glory of God” is not a lilting statement but a living hope. I know what it means to have God’s love poured out into my heart, and since that pouring out was the work of the Holy Spirit as God’s marvelous gift it is easy now to pray in the Spirit, and comforting to know that He helps my infirmities by making intercession for me with groanings which cannot be uttered.

Keep yourselves in the love of God. All of us realize that the love of God may be either His love for us or our love for Him. I do not think I need to try and keep His love for me from waning. Even if He decided not to love me, and He will not, I could do nothing about it. God’s love for me does not grow cold but there is a danger that my love for Him may do so. Jesus, in his prediction of the distress preceding the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 said, “And because wickedness is multiplied, most men’s love will grow cold” (Matthew 24:12). The word for cold here is psycho, and literally means to cool by blowing upon. Just as a cold wind blowing across a vessel of warm food will cause it to grow cold, so exposure to evil and wickedness will cause the heart to grow cold.

The way for me to maintain the warmth of my love for God is either to stay out of the draft, or, if I am forced to come into contact with the wind of wickedness, to insulate myself against it. Of course, it will help a little if I continue to throw fuel on the fire by study of the Word and keep the embers glowing by poking them up now and then. But if the wind gets to you it will cool you off. The word “keep” means to guard. I intend to wear the overcoat of grace and faith wherever I go so my love for God will not wane or weaken. I have seen too many people move to the city with a firm resolution to stay in the path of righteousness, only to allow themselves to become sidetracked and go to the devil before two years were up.

Wait for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. The most difficult thing for most of us to do is to wait. Although the poet said we should learn to labor and to wait, it is easier to learn the first than to learn the latter. People waiting for a bus pace up and down the platform like caged animals. Those who have an appointment in the dentist’s office are as nervous as a long-tailed cat in a room full of rocking-chairs. I think a lot of people have given up on life because they are tired of waiting. I am not one of them. My expectation is greater than ever and what I am expecting is worth waiting for.

I am fully persuaded that Christ must be merciful unto me, or I’ve had it! I do not expect mercy because I deserve it, but because I do not! Mercy is not extended to one who gets “straight A’s” on his report card, but to one who does his best even while realizing it is not good enough. One of the philosophers whose name I have forgotten said, “The greatest attribute of heaven is mercy.” I am inclined to agree, probably because of the recognition of my stark need for mercy. I read somewhere that “to sin because mercy abounds is the devil’s logic, he that sins because of God’s mercy shall have judgment without mercy. Mercy is not for them that sin and fear not, but for them that fear and sin not.”

The mercy for which I am waiting is unto eternal life. Eternal life is the life of God. It is life on the divine plane made possible to human beings like myself through Jesus. We have it now, but not in its fulness. Because we are in the flesh we cannot experience it in a glorified state. All of my early life I grew up among people who argued that we do not have eternal life now. They thought of eternal life as an old-line insurance policy which you had to die to collect. I no longer believe that but I do not argue with someone who says he does not have eternal life. He is probably right!

John wrote, “He who has the Son has life; he who has not the Son has not life. I wrote this to you who believe in the name of the Son of God, that you may know that you have eternal life.” I have it because I accept implicitly what John wrote. I have the Son and He has me, so I have eternal life and have it now. Just being in the church does not mean that you have eternal life any more than being in a bank means you have a deposit in it.

I am a little bit like an heir for whom ample provision for the present is made in a will until time comes for possession of the enjoyment of the estate in its fulness. While I have eternal life I am limited in my enjoyment of it. God has more in store for me and the mercy of Jesus Christ will ensure my coming into it. Meanwhile, I am not going to scrap and fight with the other heirs about it until I cannot enjoy what I do have. I am living by grace now but grace will not exhaust itself on earth. There’s a great day coming, and I am getting ready for it. Thoreau wrote, “All good abides with him who waiteth wisely.” So I am waiting and it will not be in vain. I will take care of the waiting and He will take care of the blessing!

And convince some, who doubt; save some by snatching them out of the fire; on some have mercy with fear, hating even the garment spotted by the flesh.

I don’t mind telling you that translators have been beset with problems in this sentence. The Greek text is a little obscure and uncertain. Barclay, after admitting this was so, says that he only gives what he believes to be the nearest to the sense of the passage. Despite his erudition I am not sure that his is an adequate treatment. Here is his rendering:

Some of them you must argue out of their error, while they are still wavering; others you must rescue by snatching them out of the fire. Others you must pity and fear at the same time, hating the garment stained by the flesh.

The Authorized Version translates: “And of some having compassion, making a difference: and others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh.”

The Authentic Version has it: “Take pity on some, of course, and save them with eager resolution, snatching them from the blaze. Take pity on others too, but save them with repugnance, loathing even the tunic soiled by the flesh.”

In spite of difficulties encountered in ascertaining the correct rendering, some things are obvious. Not everyone can be approached on the same basis. Men in different degrees of guilt and of diverse temperaments and attitudes must be dealt with differently. According to the implications of the Revised Standard translation there are three classes which Jude mentions.

There are those who are in doubt, wrapped in uncertainty and hesitancy. They are undecided and indecisive. They must be convicted in their own minds before they take the plunge. It is essential to get to them in time to overcome their doubts with genuine faith.

There are those who must be dealt with abruptly as you would jerk a person out of flame into which he was backing unknowingly. Perhaps the picture is one of a volcano with a person walking too close to the edge or rim. It is certain that many are ensnared by sin because they take undue chances with it. Drastic action must be taken to snatch them back to safety.

There are those whose garments are so corrupted and tainted that one must hate the garment. He does not hate the person in the garment for to him he seeks to show mercy with fear. But he cannot condone the wickedness of a life which is immoral and sensual.

Now to him who is able to keep you from falling and to present you without blemish before the presence of his glory with rejoicing, to the only God, our Savior through Jesus Christ our Lord, be glory, majesty, dominion and authority, before all time and now and forever. Amen.

I never read or recite this ascription of praise without feeling that I am standing upon holy ground. It is filled with a blessing for the present and a promise for the future. Nothing can be more reassuring than to know that God our Father is able. It was this which sustained the patriarchs and prophets of old. "By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac: and he that had received the promises offered up his only begotten son . . . accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead" (Hebrews 11:17, 19). Faced with the sentence of death by burning, the three young Hebrew captives boldly said, "Our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the fiery furnace" (Daniel 3:17).

The word able is the Greek dunarnai, inherent power. God is able. He is able "to do exceeding abundantly above all we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us" (Ephesians 3:20). He is able to subdue all things unto himself, and that power also belongs to Jesus. Our God is able!

He is able to keep us from falling. The word in the original is aptaistos, literally "unfalling." It is used to describe a beast of burden or a pack animal which will not slip on a steep trail.

Anyone who has watched the sure-footed mules working their way down the switchback trail into Grand Canyon can appreciate what is meant. God is able to keep us from slipping on the ski trails of life even when the slopes are icy and slick.

Not only is God able to make us stand but He is able to make us stand without blemish in the great presentation ceremony in the face of His glory. Peter refers to the false teachers about whom he writes as “spots and blemishes, sporting themselves with their own deceivings.” The word for blemish is momos, and the opposite of that is amomos, the word in our text. It means spotless, unstained or blameless. God is able to cleanse us from all stain in the universal detergent, the blood of His Son.

Generally Jesus is spoken of as Savior, but here God is referred to as Savior, through Jesus Christ our Lord. He is able to save to the uttermost. The word glory in both verses 24 and 25 is doxa. It appears in doxology, a hymn of praise. When God manifests His glory it simply means His presence, but when the creature gives glory to the Creator, that glory adds nothing to the Creator. That which is created gives glory by praise and adoration. He thus acknowledges the existence, nature and work of the Creator.

Majesty is a translation of megalosune. Most of us will at once recognize the first term in this combined form. Megalo is the word for big or great. One who is afflicted with megalomania suffers from a mental disorder in which he thinks himself great or exalted. To ascribe majesty to God is to recognize His greatness. It is to magnify Him in the eyes of others. The immediate form of the word is used only twice more in the new covenant scriptures, both times with reference to Jesus being seated at the right hand of the Majesty on high (Hebrews 1:3; 8:1).

Dominion is from kratos, strength or power. It occurs twelve times. Four times it appears as dominion, and six times as power. It is found in such English words as democracy, autocracy or plutocracy, where it is easily detected as relating to rule or government. Our English term dominion is derived from the Latin dominus, lord, and thus refers to sovereign or supreme authority over a given domain. Involved in it is always the concept of government or domination, so that God is not simply the possessor of the kingdom, but the supreme monarch.

The word power in this instance is from exousia, a fact which has created some little consternation among students since it is applied to “the only wise God.” Generally exousia is thought of as delegated authority or responsibility, and how such authority could be delegated to the fountain or source of all power escapes some who make too rigid a distinction between exousia and dunamis. But exousia is first the freedom to do a thing, and then, the authority to do it. Barclay suggests that when the two are used in conjunction, dunamis is the power to do a thing, while exousia is the freedom to do it. I like my more homely illustration that the first is a keg of dynamite and the second is the right to strike a match to it.

Both the power and freedom of God are absolute. We cannot bind Him with the laws He gave to bind us. The source of all authority cannot be confined by the authority derived from or conferred by it. There is no inconsistency in the exercise of sovereign authority, for whatever it authorizes is consistent with its sovereignty. God gives power but He does not give it away. It is still His and returns to Him. In reality, the power He bestows is simply Himself acting through channels of His own creation. I intend to be one of them.

I am thrilled that Jude closes this brief letter, this little spiritual note, with such a magnificent benediction. A letter written to urge men to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered, needs to point us to the fountain of that faith. When the sweet singer of Israel saw the transgression of the wicked, he said, “There is no fear of God before their eyes,” and thus put his finger squarely upon the reason for the prevalence of sin. Men are not deterred by fear of consequences when the fear of God is erased from their hearts. It is my very eager hope and fervent prayer that we may serve Him as our only purpose, remembering the words of Soren Kierkegaard, “Purity of heart is to will one thing.”

It was not my intention to bore our readers with this analysis of Jude which has taken us through three issues of the paper. It is possible to be too meticulous in our study and to become bogged down in our investigation of words, but that is not generally the problem with most of the saints. Rather, there is a kind of spiritual indifference to what God has said, which makes us easy victims of those who would impose upon us what He has not said!

Secular and Holy

Mission Messenger (October 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

One of the greatest accomplishments in the coming of our Lord in the flesh was the eradication of the distinction between the secular and holy. That is one barrier that was knocked into oblivion by the cross. The establishment of the divine-human relationship upon the basis of grace, as opposed to conformity to a written code, so completely transformed existence that it actually produced a new creation. We are a new humanity in Christ Jesus.

Jesus did not come to bring us a new religion. He came to make void “religion” as an approach to the Father. He said “I am come that they might have life and have it more abundantly.” The only liturgy we have is the liturgy of life. It expresses itself, not in stated acts done in cathedrals or dedicated real estate, but in the sharing of life with the unfortunate as He shared life with all of us in the poverty of spirit caused by sin, and in maintaining purity in our contact with the world. On this the scripture is very plain. “Pure and unalloyed devoutness in God’s view is to care for the orphan and widow in their affliction and to keep oneself unsullied by the world.” If that is what devoutness is in God’s view it is what it should be in my view, if I intend to please God.

In Christ there are no holy days, no holy places and no holy things. All of these belong to the era of law by which no man in the flesh can be justified. There never has been a law given and there never can be a law given in the form of a written code by which one can become guiltless. The fault is not in the nature of law but in the nature of man in the flesh. Grace does not change days, places and things, but people. Thus, in Christ, there are only holy people, and they are holy because they belong to God. They have been bought with a price and they are not their own.

God has no sanctuary upon this earth except a consecrated human heart. So long as men speak reverently of “our sanctuary” in reference to a place where light filters through stained-glass windows and men come to “perform acts of worship” they are still living B.C. lives in an A.D. world. The reason they speak that way is because they think that way, and their language is as wrong as their thoughts. The “language of Ashdod” betokens that we have lived too long as exiles and captives in a sectarian world. That is why we still act as if Jesus had never come.

There are no holy days for the Christian for the simple reason that there are no unholy days. There are no holy places for the simple reason that everywhere a Christian is, that place is consecrated. It is consecrated not because of where it is, or because of words spoken by priestly men, but because of who is there. If the presence of the Spirit of God sanctifies a place, and it does, then wherever I go is sanctified for me because His Spirit abides in me. If it was not holy before I arrived it will be when I get there. I do not go up to the house of God. I am the house of God. I do not visit a temple. I am a temple of the living God.

It is a little silly to talk about “five acts of worship,” which is why the sacred scriptures never use such an expression. Worship is the bowing down of my spirit, the prostration of my heart, the utter denial and abnegation of my self, in the presence of my God. Every act I do in Christ Jesus and in reverence to Him is an act of worship. The word worship in none of its forms, and it has a number of them, is ever applied to anything we do when we assemble on the first day of the week. That is not because what we then do is not worship, but for the reason that everything else we do is also worship.

When Paul wrote to the saints at Colossae who were all hung-up on festivals, new moons, sabbaths, fasting and asceticism, he said, “Whatever you do by word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father by him.” I accept that just like it is. I am tired of running that “whatever” through institutional meat-grinders until you have it chewed up and pulverized so it will fit into some institutional patty-mould. I am tired of whittling and scraping it down so thin you can see through it. I am going to accept that “whatever” as big as God made it, and I intend, with the help of the Spirit to make every act and word of my life one of worship, adoration and praise, even if those around me do not see the connection. My father is interested in everything I do, and I am interested in everything He said!

What is Justification?

Mission Messenger (November 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

A Sunday Evening Talk at Oak Hill Chapel

Tonight it is my privilege and responsibility to speak to you on the subject “What is Justification?” This is the fifth in a series of Sunday night talks at Oak Hill Chapel entitled “Great Words From the Greatest Word.” There will be thirteen in all and they will be given by various brethren. Already men have discussed faith, repentance, baptism and grace. You are yet to hear about peace, mercy, hope, holiness, reconciliation, wisdom, joy and eternal life.

In the first presentation we learned that faith is the belief of testimony calling for commitment to the thing believed. From Teddie Renollet we learned that repentance is a change of mind preceded by remorse for guilt and succeeded by a reformation of life. From Jerry Ketcherside we learned that baptism is the immersion in water of a believing penitent as a participation in the drama of salvation—the death, burial and resurrection of our precious Lord.

One week ago tonight Ted Ratliff led us in a study of grace, the undeserved and unreserved kindness of our heavenly Father, and you will recall his testimony that everything good which had ever happened to him, or ever would happen to him in life, was attributable to grace.

The purpose of this series of explorations into the revelation for mankind is simply stated. We are endeavoring to know what the Holy Spirit meant by the words He selected to convey the mind of God. Words without meaning are like Confederate currency which is interesting to look at but valueless in the marketplace. Empty words are like empty vessels. They cannot quench thirst. Words to which we attribute a wrong meaning or to which we give a false value are dangerous. They are like counterfeit bills which bring disastrous results to those who try to pass them.

To be sure that we understand our purpose, let me remind you that we are not seeking the modern dictionary meaning of the terms we study. A dictionary does not always tell us the meaning of a word. It records the significance attached to it by popular usage in a given culture. Thus, if you compare a current issue of a dictionary with one of its predecessors of a century ago you will find a divergency in the meaning of many words.

We are not concerned with ascertaining the theological explanation of the words we discuss. Professional theologians, like professional attorneys, professional doctors, or professional pharmacists, have developed a specialized jargon which the uninitiated cannot understand. Nothing is more confusing to the average person than a book on theology filled with the pedantic and pompous gobbledygook which delights the professional clergyman. In ancient Grecian art the statues of Mercy, Justice and Grace were always clothed. But Truth was always naked, for truth is revealing and not concealing.

We still speak of “the naked truth” and of “bare facts.” Our aim is to strip the garments of human rationalization from the terms found in God’s Word so they will again be exhibited in their pristine simplicity and unadorned glory.

What is justification? I am thrilled that it falls to my lot to share with you my concept of this interesting and beautiful term.

I am glad also that my message follows immediately upon the discussion about grace. The two have a direct connection, for Paul writes that we “are justified by his grace as a gift, through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus, whom God put forward as an expiation by his blood, to be received by faith” (Romans 3:24, 25). This is a significant sentence. It connects the gift of grace, the redemption in Christ, the expiation by his blood, and the reception by faith of the offer of grace with our justification. Thus, no explanation of the word can ever be adequate which ignores either of these constituents.

Justification is directly related to justice, although this word is never found in the new covenant scriptures. In the days of the apostles the pagan world held that for every offence against the gods, payment had to be made. Sometimes the guilty person had to pay by forfeiture of his own life. They believed that the goddess of justice, who was called Dike or Nemesis, relentlessly stalked a guilty person until retribution was made. A good example of this is found in Acts 28:2-4, which records the shipwreck in which Paul was cast upon the isle of Malta. Luke records what happened. “And the natives showed us unusual kindness, for they kindled a fire and welcomed us all, because it had begun to rain and was cold. Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks and put them on the fire, when a viper came out because of the heat and fastened on his hand. When the natives saw the creature hanging from his hand, they said one to another, ‘No doubt this man is a murderer. Though he has escaped from the sea, Dike has not allowed him to live.’”

It will interest you to know that this is the root of the original word for justification, so it is obviously connected with the divine sense of justice. Justice sternly requires that for every sin there must be a proper payment or recompense made by the guilty sinner. That is why we talk about “meeting the demands of justice.” Sin is an offence against the majesty of God. It is the dethronement of God in the human heart and the elevation of the ego to the chair of the sovereign. Sin is the supreme worship of self, the culmination of conceit. It is like slapping the Creator or spitting in His face.

Sin destroys the relationship with God because the nature of the divine requires that He be clothed in absolute justice and impartiality. God cannot condone sin. He cannot wink at it. He cannot casually brush it aside and ignore it. Careless parents can be indulgent with the mistakes of their offspring because they have been guilty of the same wrongs. To condemn their children would be like assessing punishment against themselves. But one who is holy in the absolute must hate sin. Any feeling of lesser intensity would cloud His holiness and render it less than absolute.

This reveals what I have been pleased to refer to as “the human predicament.” Nothing is more clearly taught than the fact that we are all guilty before God. Paul states it succinctly. “For there is no distinction; since all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God” (Romans 3:23, 24). There is no way for me to avoid this indictment. The fact of sin, the corruption and defilement of sin, the guilt of sin, and the penalty for sin, must be faced. I cannot laugh them off. I cannot run from them. I can only cry out in the dark night of introspection, like Paul, “Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from the body of this death?” (Romans 7:24).

I can never undo a single act I have ever committed. There is no way by which I can recall a deed. I cannot take it back. I cannot wash it out with my tears although I soak my pillow in their salty brine. I cannot remove it by my own blood, for even though I take my life in an attempt to escape the consequences, I only add one more act of sin and deepen the guilt. I must still confront justice at the judgment of the Great White Throne. Not even my death can avoid that.

I must be very honest with you. Like a caged criminal I tried to find some way of escape, some way to squeeze out through the bars. Once I thought that by trading obedience for God's forgiveness I would then live so pure and good that I would earn heaven by the sheer exertion of effort. I studied the word as a plan, a blueprint, a revealed scheme of redemption, a method or design, showing all the right things to do as a key to glory. And I tried to do all the right things. I carried out what I thought was the prescribed routine of "religious exercises" and performed all of the required "spiritual acrobatics" and, of course, I was a lot better than I was before. But spiritual gymnastics are like physical ones. They make you breathe deeper, feel better and develop muscles. But you are still going to die!

I think that all the time I was trying so hard to win "divine approbation" and collect enough badges to become a heavenly Eagle Scout, I knew down inside that I wasn't going to make it by this route. I wasn't as good as I wanted to be. I wasn't as good as others thought I was. And I knew I never could become what God wanted me to be by reading the wonderful love letters of the new covenant scriptures as a written code of laws to which I must either conform or be damned. I became a good lawyer in the process, but I was a very poor lover. In spite of all my attempts to amass "brownie-points" I was tired of the treadmill, sick of my sins, and frightened by the future.

That turned out to be great! Sometimes we have to be brought to condemnation to be brought to Christ. When you are flat on your back you have to look up! When your back is against the wall there is only one way you can go— forward! Many a man dates his success from the day he realized he was bankrupt. So I discovered a great secret! I had been killing myself trying to live! I was slaving away like a fool trying to obtain what I already had. I was like a man, worrying and fretting about how to pay off the mortgage, and not knowing that he had fallen heir to a fabulous fortune.

The secret was justification by faith in Christ Jesus, not as a reward, but as a gift, and a free gift at that! In your copy of the new covenant scriptures the word righteousness comes from the very same original as justification. The word for just is so rendered 33 times, but it is translated by righteous 41 times. Righteousness with God is not necessarily doing right things, or performing proper acts, although it would be incredible to think of one who was righteous deliberately and maliciously doing anything that was wrong. But righteousness is a right relationship with God, which manifests itself in a right relationship with man and all creation. Righteousness is justification, and that is why merely treating others well and relieving their needs may make one a philanthropist, but it cannot make him righteous.

But what is justification? Obviously, since it is connected with justice it is a judicial term. Let me get to the very heart of it. To justify one is to acquit or absolve him from guilt, to declare him guiltless. We must be very careful here. It does not mean that one is guiltless, for no one is guiltless before God. Justification never means to make one worthy, for no sinner can ever be made worthy. It always signifies to judge as worthy, to declare worthy, or to treat as worthy. I am no more worthy tonight than I have ever been, but the marvelous grace of God has declared me worthy. I am justified in His sight and according to His mercy. I have been reconciled to God by the death of His Son, and justified by that grace which raised him from the dead. As Paul puts it, “He was put to death for our trespasses and raised for our justification” (Romans 4:25).

On what basis does God treat one as unworthy as myself as worthy? On what ground am I judged righteous? The answer is so plain and simple that it is overlooked or disregarded by those who try to make things complex and involved. The finite human mind is so awed by the thought of the infinite, it cannot accept the concept of a gift of grace so it starts in weaving an intricate pattern or plan which it deems to be worthy of an omnipotent Creator. The result is seen in the confusion and complication which confronts us in our day, when a multitude of “in-groups” are talking to themselves while the world goes to hell.

My faith in the Lord Jesus Christ is counted to me for justification. It is reckoned unto me for righteousness. This is what the Spirit said through Paul. The word “reckon” in the original is preserved in our transliterated term “logistic,” which has to do with arithmetical calculation. It was a term used in Greek banks, counting-houses, and monetary exchange associations. When one rendered satisfaction for a debt it was entered on the ledger and the account was closed. But I cannot render satisfaction for sin. The song is right which says, “Nothing in my hand I bring.” It is also right when it adds, “Simply to the cross I cling.”

Once I was lost. I was helpless and hopeless. I was blind. But the grace of God saw my pitiable plight, the mercy of God took note of my frightful failure and the love of God became embodied as the Son came to share my state. I can never erase from my mind one sentence of holy writ. It burns itself into my consciousness in moments of meditation like a scintillating and searing bolt of lightning. “For our sake he made him to be sin who knew no sin, so that in him we might become the righteousness of God” (2 Cor. 5:21). I will never forget that. I have read it more than a hundred times, emphasizing every word in turn. “Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures” (1 Cor. 15:3) but in order to do that he was made sin in all of its loathsome nature.

What happened is that Jesus atoned for my sin. His death reconciled me to God. The recording angel dipped the quill into his blood and wrote in red letters “Paid in full!” The sin question was settled for me at Calvary. The fountain was opened at Golgotha. All I need to do now is to identify with Jesus, absolutely, undeniably and uncompromisingly. This identification is made by faith, by a trust that is so deep and unqualified that I am crucified unto the world and the world is crucified unto me, so now I no longer live, it is Christ who lives in me.

Knowing Jesus as my life makes everything else I have called life, and everything in which I ever trusted, both insignificant and worthless. Everything in which I took pride is gone. Educational attainment, hope of worldly recognition, striving for power, love of money, clamor for attention, victory over my enemies, the cheers of the crowd— all of this has revealed itself to be garbage, a putrid mass of that which perished with the using. “But whatever gain I had, I counted as loss for the sake of Christ. Indeed I count everything as loss because of the surpassing worth of knowing Christ Jesus as my Lord. For his sake I have suffered the loss of all things, and count them as refuse, in order that I may be found in him, not having a righteousness of my own, based on law, but that which is through faith in Christ, the righteousness of God that depends on faith” (Phil. 3:7-9).

“A righteousness of my own.” God forbid! “The righteousness from God.” Praise His name! What a contrast! It is the difference between life and death. It is the difference between blessing and betrayal. It is the difference between a destiny of desire and one of depression and despondency.

This brings us to the place where we can summarize what the scriptures say about our subject. Justification is an act of God. “Who shall bring any charge against God’s elect? It is God who justifies” (Romans 8:33). “God is one; and he will justify the circumcised on the ground of their faith and the uncircumcised because of their faith” (Romans 3:30). The divine motivation for justification is grace. “They are justified by his grace as a gift, through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus” (Romans 3:24). The blood of Jesus is the expiatory or atoning basis for our justification. “Since, therefore, we are now justified by his blood, much more shall we be saved by him from the wrath of God” (Romans 5:9). The name of Jesus is the authoritative domain in which we are justified. To the former homosexuals, adulterers, murderers and robbers, in Corinth, Paul says, “But you were washed, you were consecrated, you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and in the Spirit of our God.”

The enabling response by which justification becomes our personal possession is faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Paul says, “For we hold that a man is justified by faith apart from works of law” (Romans 3:28). Again, he writes, “Therefore, since we are justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ” (Romans 5:1). I think it is unfortunate that believers in our Lord Jesus have allowed themselves to become embroiled in the theological donnybrook over whether we are justified by faith only, for if we were to look at faith as Paul looked at it, we are justified by faith alone. The faith of which he writes is a trust in Jesus Christ which embraces and includes everything involved in the life of sanctification and holiness. To Paul, good works were not an addition to faith, but an expression of it. We are not justified by faith and something else, but by a faith so universal and all-inclusive there is nothing else.

Someone is almost certain to raise the question of how we can harmonize the statement of James, “You see that a man is justified by works and not by faith alone,” with what Paul wrote. It was what he deemed a contradiction at this point which caused the brilliant, sarcastic French rationalist, Voltaire, to have such a field day in criticism of the scriptures. I am not brilliant, but I confess that instead of contradiction, I see confirmation.

Paul is talking about the basis on which a sinner, alienated from God, is justified from his sin. James is talking about the manner in which we exhibit or demonstrate the relationship we sustain in Christ. This is clear from both the question and the example with which he begins this section. “What does it profit, my brethren, if a man says he has faith but has not works?” The example is the need for providing necessities for bodily subsistence to an ill-clad and hungry brother or sister.

He challenges those who separate faith from its practical manifestation to show their faith apart from their works. This is impossible. The only way another can judge my faith, which is internal, is by my external and overt deeds. Abraham demonstrated his trust in God by acting in harmony with God's requirements. "By faith Abraham, when he was tested, offered up Isaac." The fact of placing Isaac upon the altar was a positive evidence of display of faith. So James concludes, "You see that faith was active along with his works, and faith was completed by works."

The faith which justifies us, and maintains our glorious relationship with God, is not inactive, but active. It is not inert but inspired. It is not dead, but vital. Paul affirms the fact of justification by faith; while James describes the quality of that faith which maintains the relationship with God. An inactive faith is like an automobile without an engine. You can sit in it all day long but you are not going anywhere. A faith without works is like a watch without works. It may look attractive but it will not do that for which it was created.

It was not James, but Paul, who wrote: "For by grace you have been saved through faith; and this is not your own doing, it is the gift of God—not because of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God prepared beforehand that we should walk in them" (Ephesians 2:8-10). Let the little family circle here resolve that we shall take to heart this beautiful and glowing admonition. Let us share with others less fortunate than ourselves. Let us give to relieve needs. Let us imitate our Lord of whom it was said, "He went about doing good." We must love in word but we must love in deed; we must love in speech, but we must also love in reality. Faith without works is dead!

Killed By Attitudes

Mission Messenger (November 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

Back in the days when I was a “boy preacher” still in high school, I spent the weekends speaking at different congregations, visiting each place one Sunday per month. I went regularly to one small group which never grew either in number or zeal. Perhaps my messages were not calculated to motivate, but I do not think my ineptitude was wholly to blame.

The little band of saints was under the leadership of a stern and inflexible elderly brother whose wife was as unbending as himself. I stayed with them even though it made me as uncomfortable as the long woolen underwear we had to don each autumn. They were obsessed with the idea that the world was “going to the dogs” on a toboggan sled, urged along by the young people and their evil ways. So determined were they to “avoid the appearance of evil” that they would not even drink orange soda pop out of a bottle, lest someone passing along the street see them, and think they were guzzling strong drink.

One thing that bugged them was the style of dress. The elderly sister insisted on wearing a drab gray or black outfit with a skirt which reached to the soles of her high laced shoes. She was bitterly opposed to “low-cuts” as she designated oxfords. She was convinced they had been designed in the pattern-room of perdition to show off the ankles of women and serve as a titillating device of the devil to lure men into extremes of passion.

When women first began to cut their hair, both thought it betokened the approaching end of the world, and expected Jesus to come soon and snatch them out of the whole sinful mess. Regardless of what part of the scripture the old brother was teaching on Sunday morning, he soon worked the lesson around to where he could belabor women and girls who trimmed their tresses as being in the same class with prostitutes and street-walkers. If a woman got up and stalked out during one of his dissertations he rejoiced that the word had lost none of its power when proclaimed by a faithful servant. If someone protested that surely the law, the psalms and the prophets were not all written simply to set forth a divine standard for hair culture, he said you could always tell the dog that was hit when you threw a brick into the pack. It was the one that howled. It made him feel good that he had not missed.

The congregation grew smaller each passing year, eventually consisting of those who had grown old and senile, and of a few others who endured it as an alternative to the outer darkness which would be the fate of those who did not “attend church” regularly. This did not trouble the old brother and sister. They took comfort in the fact that the way was both strait and narrow and “few there be that find it.” They were happy they were among the few. When they died the little group struggled along about three more weeks and then decided it was no use. The people of the community avoided the place as if the sign read “Smallpox” instead of “Church of Christ.” A padlock was put on the door and the house was abandoned to the mud-daubers which flew about in the musty interior.

The work did not die. It was killed. And the murder weapon was an attitude wielded as a club by those who thought they did God service. I have thought about the old brother and sister often and I have reached the conclusion they loved “the church” but they did not really love people. They loved the church as a kind of mystical entity, a loyal institution, a faithful fantasy, a kind of heavenly conglomerate to which one belonged without being a part of the agonizing world from which its ransomed constituency was drawn. They were not only not of the world, but they were not in the world. The kind of world they envisioned did not exist.

A lot of things get blamed when our human attitude is the real culprit. I knew a preacher a few years ago who “took to preaching” because it was the easiest way to “make a living.” He was too lazy to work, so he traveled through the country subsisting off the brethren while he saw the scenery. The six or seven talks in his repertoire were not bad and a lot of congregations in rural areas and small towns accepted him when he wrote them and worked up an itinerary.

He had all kinds of quirks about eating and was a real problem to the good sisters in the Lord in whose homes he stayed, as they would have to prepare his food in a special way. I know of one place down in the Ozarks where the old brother who put him up also put him down. He took the preacher home with him after the night meeting and the next morning called him to come down for breakfast. He offered him coffee but he couldn’t drink coffee. He passed him the fried eggs but he couldn’t eat fried eggs. He passed him the bacon, but he couldn’t eat bacon. He passed him the homemade biscuits and gravy, but he couldn’t eat either. In desperation the head of the house said, “I’ve passed you everything we’ve got on the table but the pepper sauce. Have some pepper sauce.” No one made a move to fix anything else, so pretty soon the preacher allowed he would try an egg. He ate two and used a couple of biscuits as a chaser.

He always landed in a community with a suitcase full of dirty shirts, socks and underwear, and the first thing he did was to ask the lady of the house when she planned to do the laundry. Inevitably she would stop everything else she had planned and put out his washing. She would rather have put him out and she always saw that her husband never invited him back. When he had about made the round of “the faithful churches” which was the kind I worked with in those days, he came to ask me what was the matter with the brethren that they never arranged for his return. Even when he wrote them, as he generally did, and told them he was coming through their area and would like to stop off and give them the benefit of his knowledge for a few nights, they either did not answer or “all with one accord began to make excuse.”

I suggested that when he went to a place he should eat like other folk or carry his pabulum with him and fix it himself. I also suggested that he get a pair of overalls, and put them on and go to the fields with the men and work with them, as most of us did in that day. If he did not want to do that he could at least hoe the garden, get in the wood, or take a scythe and cut out the growth in the fence rows. But he said he had a weak back, and besides that, he thought it did not look good for a preacher to come into a community and engage in menial tasks like that. He thought it might cheapen the gospel and he was afraid he might lose the respect of the brethren. He did not know that he was already being regarded as a “brotherhood tramp” and a kind of spiritual hobo. He was being strangled by his own attitude.

A few weeks ago I had a long distance call from a preacher who wanted to know what was wrong with the brethren. He said he was disheartened and discouraged but I think he was really disgruntled. He claimed that after a lifetime of service and sacrifice he was now being rejected and thrown on the scrap-pile. He was being turned out to pasture like a worn-out fire-engine horse. He had hoped to supplement his income from social security by “picking up a little preaching on the side,” but instead he had been “put on the shelf,” and was never invited to speak.

I have known him for a long time and he was not put on the shelf at all. He has been climbing toward that shelf under his own head of steam for years. Dogmatic, arbitrary, and generally stubborn and cantankerous, he has been a source of trouble in every congregation with which he has ever associated. He does not just have problems, he is one! I know for a fact that he has gone in to work with several congregations where the brethren were fairly peaceful and cooperative and within six months of his advent they were at each other's throats and the church was in a turmoil and upheaval.

In spite of that, I feel sorry for him. I have the same kind of feeling for him that I do for one who is physically blind. It is sad when one thinks everyone else is wholly mistaken while he is holy and right. This brother is hung up on two or three little matters of interpretation which do not amount to "a hill of beans," but to him they are the most important things on earth. Wherever he goes he trots out his hobby and climbs aboard and rides it around while others grit their teeth. He has harangued and harassed the brethren until he has painted himself into a corner from which he surveys the church with baleful glance and jaundiced eye, still wondering what is wrong with everyone else but himself.

Can such a person change from a bitterly critical disposition to one of loving concern for and understanding of others? I am sure he can, but he must first become deeply convicted of the sinfulness of his present state. It is difficult for one who is proud and arrogant to realize his true state. When he equates kindness with softness, and concern for compromise, and feels called of God to be a swashbuckling, gun-toting sheriff to see that everyone else obeys the law, he is not liable to alter his unfortunate stance.

One can mouth the words of Jesus all of his earthly sojourn and never really allow them to filter down into his inner being and transform him. I suspect this is one of the real temptations of the clergy in any sect. The word of God is a commodity to peddle to others. It is something that you lay upon the shoulders of your fellowmen without considering too deeply what the implication is for your own life. I think this goes for our own “clergy” even while they vociferously deny they are clergymen and protest to high heaven that they are the only people on earth who are not sectarian.

Of course you must not draw the conclusion that preachers are the only offenders, or even the worst ones. Fortunately, there are a great many of them who are loving, open and kind. They exhibit lives filled with the fruits of righteousness. Others would do the same were it not for the fact that they labor with and are financially dependent upon brethren who are often intolerant and even quite bigoted. They have subtle ways of conveying to the preachers that they expect them to “draw the line” against all who do not conform, and when they pipe the melody of factionalism, the one who does not dance to their tune will suffer banishment.

We have a tremendous message and a thrilling mission. It is regrettable indeed that we hamper both by our prejudice and unconcern, and by our apathy toward those who look to us for direction in their dire desperation. Perhaps nothing is quite so important in this age in which our lot has been cast as to identify with people in their sheer agony and to bring the dynamic of love into their shattered and tormented lives. We should remember that Jesus did not get people out of the state in which they were to love them, but He loved them and they came out of the state in which they were.

The kind of selfishness which manifests itself in Pharisaic disdain and indifference has no place in the lives of those who are followers of Him whom the Pharisees joined in condemning before the Roman procurator. Benjamin Franklin asserted, “There are no ugly loves nor handsome prisons.” Ill fares the congregation which restricts its love to its own membership for in so doing it confines those whom it loves to prison. Love needs to run free and unhampered, and when it does, it will free the one who exercises it. It will also free the one who is the recipient of it.

The Party Spirit

Mission Messenger (November 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

I suspect most of us flatter ourselves that we walk by the Spirit, and this makes it possible for us to feel sorry, deep down inside our beings, for the unfortunate masses who continue to slog along through the swampy desires of the flesh. It is a commentary upon our aptitude for filtering out what we do not want to see, that we can read through the list of the works of the flesh, which Paul says are plain, and settle on those which do not particularly disturb us, while coldly ignoring those which we practice with such a degree of fidelity one would think they are commands of the Lord.

We sail through “immorality, impurity, licentiousness, idolatry and sorcery” and skirt around past “drunkenness and carousing,” and congratulate ourselves that we belong to Christ Jesus and “have crucified the flesh with its passions and desires.” But we touch lightly on jealousy, anger and selfishness. Most of us wonder about the inclusion of such items, which all of us have to fight off like mosquitoes, along with things like idolatry and sorcery. It is aggravating to those of us who have never been dead drunk and have avoided becoming bar-flies or bottle-jockeys to realize that we may end up with a bunch of such characters in Gehenna because we “fly off the handle” when we become irritated, or are consumed by jealousy until we make life miserable for ourselves and even more so for those around us. All of us can see the divine wisdom in condemning “big sins” of which we are never guilty, but we cannot understand why the Spirit slipped in a bunch of things which most of us can only disavow by lying about them.

Take for instance, the work of the flesh which appears right after the one called dissension, and which is dubbed “party spirit.” Almost everyone who has this affliction denies it and tries to dress it up in a disguise so it will not be recognized. It is this carnal characteristic which has been responsible for ripping the cloak of Christian union to shreds, and making the plea for oneness of the believers a distorted caricature, a disreputable scarecrow in the neglected garden of faith.

We are not divided over the things which have been credited with disrupting us. These create problems, multiply areas of disagreement, and make tensions in the fold of the followers. We are divided because the party spirit has run rampant over the Holy Spirit. If we had not divided over the things which we blamed we would have divided over other things. We are divided because we thought division, practiced division and now defend it. We were divided because we had the will to divide. The desires of the flesh are against the Spirit, and the party spirit is a work of the flesh. Where the Holy Spirit reigns men can labor together in spite of grave differences. When the party spirit governs lives men will fragment over trivialities and will fight one another after the division much harder than they fought the devil before.

While it is tragic to see the devastation wrought in the body of believers by the party spirit, the saddest influence is that wielded over the individual heart in which this malignancy fastens itself. The party spirit breeds hostility which destroys the most intimate relationships of life. Parents are turned against their children and the children against their parents. Brethren who have labored together for years become inveterate enemies when they are infected by this virus. There is nothing they will not say or do to defame character or destroy influence. They treat one another more callously than the heathen world treats its foes. They bite and devour one another and are consumed one of another. The party spirit makes spiritual cannibals of men.

That spirit is the exact opposite of the spirit of love. Love is patient and kind, the party spirit is impatient, restless and impolite. Love is not jealous or boastful, the party spirit is insanely jealous and bombastic. It minimizes the significant attainment of its rivals while vaunting every trivial gain of its own as an accomplishment of the ages. Love is not arrogant or rude, the party spirit is dictatorial, imperious and insolent. No one else is ever as brash and domineering as one who is a party champion.

Love does not insist on its own way, the party spirit is convinced it is the only way. Everyone outside the party is either ignorant or dishonest. No one else can be accorded recognition or credited with ability to reason sincerely. Only those who pledge allegiance to the party flag can be trusted. They may be uncouth, illiterate and boorish in manner and behavior but they are the faithful remnant for whom Jesus gave His life. Love is not irritable or resentful, the party spirit is acrimonious and churlish. It cannot stand for others to advance or grow and always assigns the worst motives to those who do.

It is noticeable that a dyed-in-the-wool partisan always assigns the very worst designs to anyone who bursts the bonds of the sect, and outgrows the circumscribed limitations and inhibitions created by the traditions hallowed by debate. No one makes a change on the basis of his deeper investigation of the truth. When a young man casts off the partisan garb he is accused of falling for the scheme of a plotting heretic, or is selling out for popularity, or is revealing a tendency to wishy-washiness which he managed to conceal up to that time. He simply cannot have learned a greater or deeper truth, for the party has the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. It is the guardian of the truth, the defender of the truth, the preceptor of the truth. To leave the party is to forsake the truth. The most dangerous thing a partisan can do is to really start thinking for himself.

Love does not rejoice at wrong, but rejoices in the right. The party spirit rejoices in the wrong. If a calamity overtakes the opposing party it is a cause for glee. It served them right. They had it coming to them. The only right in which a sectarian can rejoice is his own righteousness. He does not rejoice when members of the Catholic Church work in a frightful leper colony, or when Presbyterians establish a rescue clinic for drug addicts. It is right for a Methodist chaplain to counsel and help men behind prison bars but I know people who do not rejoice in it, because one must be right to do right, and no one can be right on anything who does not see everything as they do. To be right means to be in the right party. To a partisan it is better to be wrong in the right place than to be right in the wrong place.

I am convinced that the party spirit, which is the spirit of exclusion, ostracism and proscription, will shrivel the soul and sear the emotions. It is the spirit of arm's length rather than of the encircling arms. It shakes fists rather than hands. It carries a chip on the shoulder rather than a concern in the soul. If the Father treated His children as we treat our brethren love would disappear from the universe to be supplanted by hostility and despair. And do not forget that the Father's children are my brothers and sisters. I do not manifest my love for the Father by hating His children!

Perhaps one of the great evils perpetrated by the party spirit is the confusion of values and the overthrow of priorities. It is an indication of immaturity and childishness when one trades something for a mere bauble or trifle. One does not swap an expensive automobile for a pair of roller skates. To burn down a mansion to get rid of mice in the basement is hardly the action of a sane mind. But the ardent factionalist will destroy fellowship and sacrifice the things for which Jesus died in order to defend some insignificant thing which has assumed immense proportions in his feverish imagination. To dissolve the harmonious functioning of the body of our Lord over some of the silly things about which our fathers squabbled borders upon the ridiculous. How the angels must weep when they behold the children of God forming rival clans and tomahawking one another.

I rather think that the first step in triumphing over the work of the flesh under consideration is to realize the magnitude of the divine provision for our salvation and spiritual development. The more one meditates upon the glory and majesty of God's revelation of the deliverance from the dominion of darkness and the transfer into the kingdom of his beloved Son, the less he is inclined to estrangement and hostility of mind. Jesus declared that if he was lifted up from the earth he would draw all men unto him. The cross, like the ark of the covenant in the wilderness, is the center around which we are all to pitch our tents, and the more precious the cross becomes the less significant will all else be.

We can conquer the party spirit just as we can overcome any other work of the flesh. In spite of its insidious nature we are no more doomed to continue in it than we would be to continue to drink to excess. It is as important that we divest ourselves of it as that we free ourselves from impurity, idolatry or sorcery. In order to do so we must want to be free from it. We must recognize it for what it is, a sin against God and a scandal against the bride of his Son. So long as we cloak this sin with the garment of respectability we will not escape from it.

We must apply ourselves to overcoming the baneful effects of the sectarian attitude by starting in to undo our errors. This means we must begin to associate with those from whom we were separated and commend our love unto them. This requires no change of position on the troublesome issues. It only requires a recognition of our mutual brotherhood in Christ. Any repair of breaches in human relationships must begin with renewal of associations. There is no other way to effect the healing of a rupture between persons.

Peacemakers do not wait for others to come to them. Since peace does not just happen, but is made, the peacemaker moves into the situation actively. He begins to apply the healing balm of love and concern directly to the gaping wound. He is not troubled by false accusations made by those who would prefer that the laceration remain. Jesus came to the world to preach peace, but his own received him not. A world at war does not always want its walls torn down. But God wants barriers between brethren removed and this requires action as well as talk. It is time to practice unity as well as talk about it!

Hail and Farewell

Mission Messenger (December 1975)

Volume 37

[Abstract]

We will make converts day by day; we will grow strong by the violence and injustice of our adversaries. And, unless truth be a mockery and justice a hollow lie, we will be in the majority after a while, and then the revolution which we will accomplish will be none the less radical from being the result of pacific measures. The battle of freedom is to be fought out on principle.— Abraham Lincoln (May 19, 1856).

This is the last issue of the little journal you now hold in your hand. It is not dying suddenly or as the result of a whim. Its decease was carefully and prayerfully planned for several years. The time of its termination was announced almost three years ago. When it became apparent that the routine of editing was interfering with things I felt impelled to do before the Great Adventure, I began to petition the Father of all grace to guide me in making a decision which would be proper and profitable to the Cause which I love much more than life itself.

The answer came while I was praying in Grand Rapids, Michigan, one morning at two o'clock. The paper had served the purpose to which I had dedicated it. It had more than achieved the goals I had set for it. I would appoint a time for its discontinuance well in advance and give regular notice of it each passing month so that I would not cease publication owing anyone a refund on his subscription. As soon as daylight arrived on that morning I reached the conclusion, I wrote the first notice that I would allow the paper to expire with the December issue of this year. The time has arrived for the farewell number.

It was my hope that the paper would be laid to rest at the height of its readership. That dream has been realized. More than 8500 copies of this one will go all over the world. The paper is read upon every continent. It goes to all fifty states of the union and to every province in Canada, our sister nation to the north. This wholly undeserved popularity is a cause for rejoicing and praise for the marvelous providence of God. Because the door is about to close on thirty-seven years of life it might not seem inappropriate to recount for you a little history of the paper.

The original name of the journal was MISSOURI MISSION MESSENGER. The cost of publication and distribution was underwritten by five brethren in the Saint Louis area, each of whom contributed the few dollars marking his share of the cost each month. It was sent to some three hundred readers without obligation and the addressing was done by hand. It was designed to be a tabloid-size newspaper conveying information of doings and happenings of congregations and individuals in our state, affiliated with the particular party or faction of which I was regarded as one of the champions. Although there were some twenty or more other kinds of "Churches of Christ" in the state it was proposed to ignore their activities and accomplishments unless they could be so related as to reflect glory upon our own party, or disgrace or dishonor unto theirs.

At the time I thought that our particular brand of Church of Christism was the only kind which would pass divine inspection and be stamped "Genuine" by the holy angels. It never occurred to us that the angels might not share our prejudices and opinionated hang-ups. So the paper was employed to report favorably everything we did, and unfavorably all that was done by rival parties. In our ignorance we thought of their adherents as heretics and apostates, not knowing the meaning of such terms when employed by the Holy Spirit.

When division occurred in the faction, as it must inevitably come to every legalistic group, I dropped the name of the state from the paper since it was becoming recognized as a medium around which the “loyal” members could rally on a wider scale. Of course, I am now ashamed of the sectarian outlook I then held and promoted, but I sincerely thought our spiritual clan or tribe was the one holy, apostolic and catholic church of God upon earth to the utter exclusion of all others. Other groups were either extremists or sectarian. If they opposed something we had they were extremists, if they had something we opposed they were sectarians. We measured them by ourselves rather than by Christ Jesus and felt sorry for them in their ignorance.

Since I “progressed above many my equals” as Saul of Tarsus put it, I was thrust into the forefront of our segment and was widely regarded as one of the leading brethren. This was not so much because I had any outstanding leadership ability but simply that others had less. “In the kingdom of the blind a one-eyed man is ruler.” All who are imbued with the party spirit are ambitious for recognition as a consequence of that spirit, so I was involved in promoting most of the activities which related to our splinter group. As a defender of our particularities and peculiarities I became a debater at an early age, and engaged in formal public discussions with brethren of reputation from other groups who made a test of fellowship out of their opinions as we did our own.

I was scheduled for special meetings far in advance. My services were in demand all over the country and I was booked up for several years at a time. As a sectarian proponent the future looked bright and I was sailing high. During this time the paper reflected the narrowness of my spiritual immaturity and served to perpetuate the walls and widen the chasms between ourselves and others of God's children. But God had other things in mind for my unprofitable life. By lifting me out of the environment in which I was reared, and sending me to foreign countries where the trivia which had caused our divisions and occupied the greatest amount of my time and study meant nothing, I was made to examine the faith from a wholly new perspective.

I suspect it helped to be in a world where decisions had to be made without recourse to advice of factional leaders and without fear of attack from bitter partisans. It is difficult to keep a straight course when one must run the race set before him while looking back over his shoulder to see if he is being pursued by his own brethren. The baying hounds of orthodoxy barking at your heels tend to interfere with clear thinking. In other parts of the globe one must view his life and thought in the framework of his relationship to Christ Jesus and not to a group created to preserve certain traditional ideas or positions.

For the first time I came face to face with the Son of God. It was a kind of "Damascus Road" encounter such as most sincere persons have at some time or other in their earthly existence. When I looked at my own accomplishments in the light of the ideals of Jesus and His sacrifice I was frightened by what I saw. With the trappings of pride and ambition stripped away I stood naked and shivering before the eyes of Him who was the Word made flesh. I have never been the same since that day. I will never again be what I was before.

I clearly saw that what I had evaluated as my greatest accomplishments in life were nothing. When I thought I was serving the divine purpose I was actually opposing it. I was destroying what Jesus had come to build and building what He had come to destroy. I had been hoodwinked by Satan into reducing the kingdom of heaven, majestically founded upon love, into a party manifesting coldness and hostility toward other members of the divine family. I was sick of my own littleness. I was nauseated by my own factionalism.

Do not be misled into thinking it is easy to overcome the party spirit. It is a work of the flesh and all such works have a subtle attraction to those who are in the flesh. One realizes that he must face the scorn and contempt of those with whom he has been more closely identified and associated. He will be branded a turncoat, a heretic and a Benedict Arnold. The factional spirit is bitter, recriminatory and hateful. It will stoop to any depth to ruin one who no longer condones it. It provides no real trauma to be reproached by an avowed enemy but to endure the acrimony and bitterness of friends and loved ones is a trial in which few of us delight. Moreover, there is ever the danger of forming another party while trying to combat the party spirit. An anti-party party is as dangerous and reprehensible as any other.

I am not by nature or temperament qualified to be a reformer but any person who tries to lead adherents of an entrenched tradition into a new and better way of life is cast in such a role whether he acknowledges it or not. My fascination with history has convinced me that every revolution in the political, economical, moral or spiritual realm, was effective only when it was translated into a grassroots movement. Top level clergymen may talk to themselves about the need for reform until they die without achieving it, but if the masses grow tired of a condition they will effect a change. But this requires an educative process, and this is a slow and methodical approach.

The heirs of our particular restoration movement, launched principally by outstanding men of the Presbyterian persuasion, had developed a legalistic approach to God's revelation, and the fruit of such a stance is always division and fragmentation. Factionalism is inevitable under such conditions. To thwart legalism and recover the scriptural concept of covenantal relationship, conditioned not upon law, but upon grace, is a long and tedious, as well as a thankless task. The road of an exodus is not always a short one. Man craves to be under law, for then the responsibility for making decisions is lifted from his heart. In the divine-human relationship he will cling to and defend legalism to the last ditch. It is his clothing, and man does not want to appear naked and open to the eyes of God.

In my own case I suffered real inner turmoil as I sought to free myself from the shackles I had helped to forge. I had been accustomed to debating my brethren. That was easy and I confess that I enjoyed it. Now for the first time I was locked in a life and death struggle within myself. I was not contending with others but wrestling with my own conscience. It involved long days of arduous research. It meant sleepless nights with the clock relentlessly striking each passing hour while calm repose avoided me. I learned to pray as I had never prayed before. I walked miles in the open each day, sometimes along rural roads, meditating and contemplating. The process of education is a difficult one but it is not nearly so hard as the process of re-education which requires the surrender of cherished ideas.

It was almost six years from the time when God pierced the armor of my sectarian shell before I wrote the first article "Thoughts on Fellowship." During those agonizing years my study led me to completely revised concepts. I became convinced that the party which I had defended and which had crystallized around certain opinions, deductions and interpretations was not the body of Christ in any exclusive sense, even though the deductions we defended were valid. The body of Christ is greater than any party or combination of parties. I was led to the conclusion that "The Church of Christ" which had developed out of a nineteenth century restoration movement was not the body of Christ in its fulness or in any exclusive sense, and that the body is greater than any movement within it, even a restoration movement.

This meant that I had to reform my vocabulary to express my new thought patterns as I walked out of the gloom into ever-increasing and brighter light. The language of a faction is factional. The language of a party is partisan. It does not reveal truth but conceals it. I came to see that my brethren were not just those in a certain faction but were scattered through all of the parties which had been engendered by our attitudes and created by our human strivings. I had to recognize that the one flock embraced all of the sheep and these sheep were still scattered over the sectarian hills. Such expressions as “loyal brethren” and “faithful brethren” had to be thrown into the garbage dump where they belonged. They did not signify faithfulness or loyalty to Jesus but to our party. I had to rid myself of the arrogant term “brethren in error” which had been used to bolster our own partisan ego. The only kind of brethren on earth were brethren in error. There can be no other kind of brethren in the flesh. All of us are ignorant but just about different things.

When the scales of Church of Christ traditionalism fell from my blinded eyes, great truths began to become evident. They were there all of the time but I was oblivious to them because they did not fit into our sermon outlines. From Dr. George Campbell, of Edinburgh, whose writings so greatly influenced the youthful Alexander Campbell, I learned the distinction between gospel and doctrine as made by the Holy Spirit. As I delved into a deep investigation of this interesting and significant matter I found that Dr. Campbell’s treatise was reinforced from every side. From the more than fifty scholars who helped me on this matter, I want to pay special tribute to two. One was Dr. C. H. Dodd, Vice-Chairman and Director of the Joint Committee on Translation of The New English Bible. The other was his protégé, Dr. Alan Richardson, at the time Professor of Christian Theology, in the University of Nottingham. If the gospel brings us into relationship with God through the obedience of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, fellowship is created by the gospel and all who have obeyed the gospel are in the fellowship. And they are in the fellowship in spite of their many areas of ignorance and mistaken concepts.

The very moment this truth penetrated my consciousness, a necessary corollary impressed itself upon my mind. Since there were two different messages from heaven involving kingdom relationship upon the earth, one of which was addressed to aliens to enroll them as citizens, and the other addressed to citizens to train them as soldiers in the army of the Great King, there must be two different actions by which these must be conveyed. One does not naturalize citizens as he trains soldiers. It was then I found that the method of addressing aliens was by proclamation of the good news, while the method of training disciples was by a lifetime educative process.

Once more I was led into an intensive study of the word of revelation. It soon became apparent that the gospel was an evangel, and that it consisted of historical facts. It was the glad tidings of what God had done for mankind in sin and alienation in order that they might be reconciled to Him. This message was to be heralded or announced. The very word for preacher or proclaimer was originally herald. On the other hand, those who enlisted under the banner were to be taught, and the doctrine consisted of precepts to be instilled in the heart, not by a herald, but by a teacher.

It was Alexander Campbell who probably helped me most in this matter, although I found that every one of our pioneer proclaimers had a fairly clear view of the matter. I shall never forget the first time I read the following statement from the facile and versatile pen of Alexander Campbell:

There was teaching, there was praying, there was exhortation in the Christian church, but preaching in the church, or to the church, is not once named in the Christian scriptures . . . We preach, or report, or proclaim news! But who teaches news? Who exhorts news? We preach the gospel to unbelievers, to aliens, but never to Christians, or to those who have received it.

An interesting thing happened once when I was in Ohio. Some four or five preachers representing a certain faction came to attend an open forum in which I was fielding questions from the audience and to throw it into confusion if possible. In reply to a certain question about gospel and doctrine I read the quotation I have just given from Campbell, without identifying the source. One of the preachers asked if he could speak for just three minutes. When I gave him permission to do so he arose and pointed a finger at me and warned the audience that I was the most dangerous heretic alive today. He said that there was no difference between gospel and doctrine, or between preaching and teaching, and that this was a new idea I had pulled out of a hat. He went on to say that no one ever dreamed up this distinction before I came up with it, and that they would do well to put their trust in the truth the brethren had held through the years rather than in these newly-invented ideas. It was obvious that he was wholly ignorant of the very basis upon which the restoration movement began. When I arose and said the statement was a verbatim quotation from the pen of Alexander Campbell, and that I wanted to second the suggestion of our brother that the brethren cling by the truths discovered by the pioneers, he took his hat and stamped out of the house. I have not seen him since that day, although I understand he is no longer engaged in the work of the Lord.

No less startling than the above quotation from Campbell was the poignant statement from him which I here record:

Preaching the gospel and teaching the converts are as distinct and distinguishable employments as enlisting an army and training it, or as creating a school and teaching it. Unhappily, for the church and the world, this distinction, if at all conceded as legitimate, is obliterated or annulled in almost all protestant Christendom. The public heralds of Christianity, acting as missionaries, or evangelists, and the elders or pastors of Christian churches are indiscriminately denominated preachers or ministers; and whether addressing the church or the world, they are alike preaching or ministering some things they call the Gospel . . . They seem to have never learned the difference between preaching and teaching.

I became convinced that anyone who sought to be a peacemaker in our world with its crazy-quilt pattern of division would need to cross over lines and ignore barriers. The barriers are not real. They exist only in men's hearts. They are fantasies. All restoration of broken relationships must begin with association. I resolved to go wherever God opened up a door. I found that peacemaking is a matter of positive action. You can talk about it for a lifetime and never accomplish it. I also learned that peacemakers do not wait for others to take the initiative. You must go to them. At first there was a great deal of suspicion. All factionalism is based upon fear and fear breeds suspicion. But I simply kept going and continued praying and gradually hostility was lessened.

As I began to move among adherents of the various parties they all began to speculate that I was becoming a convert to their peculiarities and would eventually join them. Nothing pleases a sectarian group more than to capture someone from another party. This is a feather in the factional cap. Most of them consider it a greater victory than to lead one to Jesus who never heard of His mercy. But those who reported in their journals that I was "leaning" in their direction were soon forced to abandon their illusion. I received persons and not their opinions. I did not receive them because of their opinions but in spite of them. Jesus did not die for deductions but gave His life for people. I still hold most of the views I have always held. I think they are valid. Certainly they are for me. I did not change my position on things but merely altered my views as to who constituted my brethren.

It is interesting to watch the machinery of sectarianism function. It is much like the machinery of politics. Perhaps it is the same machinery but merely installed in other institutions.

Those who are entangled in its gears do not scruple to misrepresent another. They frequently falsify his position. All sorts of reports of what I am alleged to teach have come to me. Most of the stuff I have never believed and certainly never said. A good deal of the misrepresentation results from ignorance rather than from maliciousness. The dyed-in-the-wool partisan is so attuned to the parroting of provincial phrases and the communication of clichés that he does not understand what one is saying who is not caught up in his semantical sub-culture. The result is that the accuser often repeats what he thinks he heard and projects it as your position. A lot of brethren never listen to what another says. They already know what he is going to say and regardless of what he says that is the way it comes through to them over the wires of the party propaganda projector.

I suspect the tendency to do this is more apparent in the patrons of a strongly-entrenched legalistic approach to the divine-human relationship. Such a philosophy seldom breeds a high degree of morality and integrity in interpersonal relationships. Those who are familiar with the non-instrumental Churches of Christ realize how unethical is the behavior of some of the more prominent lights. There is a reason for this. Faithfulness is measured by the consecration to the party standard and those who rally around the totem pole are counted as worthy even though guilty of gossip, vain talk and false accusation of others. When men judge loyalty to Jesus by attendance at a special location to which they come three times per week for the body count, what they do outside does not really count. They have already demonstrated that they are loyal by gathering in the structure.

My paper was altered in content to reflect my growing knowledge of such subjects as brotherhood, grace and fellowship. Only a very few of our readers dropped out because they could not stand to read such statements as, "I will make nothing a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation." Incidentally, I borrowed that statement from J. N.

Armstrong who was president of Harding College when he made it. Hundreds of subscribers took the place of each one who abdicated and the list grew until it became a real burden to keep abreast of it. A few wrote that they did not agree with me but they were going to hang on awhile and see how far I would go. Some of them have been hanging on for twenty years and are disappointed that I did not go where they wanted to consign me.

The fact is that I am in the calmest water in which I have ever sailed in my life. There are still a number of brethren who let loose a blast in our general direction but in most cases their opposition is a blessing. If they spoke favorably of what I was saying I would re-examine it in a hurry because I would know there was something wrong with it. I think that it was a “fulness of the times” for the advocacy of fellowship based upon faith in Jesus as the Lord of life and not upon opinions of this or that.

It has been interesting to watch the sectional or regional change in readership. At first, of course, Missouri led all of the other states in the number of subscribers. Gradually California began to creep up until it finally displaced Missouri, and held the pole position for years. During this time we were mailing a mere handful of papers to Texas, but soon the number began to increase. When the editor of Firm Foundation made a personal attack upon my position with an article titled “Blind in One Eye,” and then followed it with an analysis of my writing, he sparked a real prairie fire of interest. Brethren wrote for sample copies from places in Texas of which I had never heard. Some sent in a hundred subscriptions at a time with a check enclosed to pay for them. The result is that Texas has led the states in readership for more than five years. California follows, then Indiana, Ohio and Missouri.

From the very beginning the journal has been a family enterprise. It was started when Jerry and Sharon Sue were in elementary school, and each month Nell and myself with the two children would gather around the dining table in the evening and divide the names among us for addressing. At that time the list was in a looseleaf notebook. We were finished within an hour. When Nell and I went to Scotland and England the first time, the children were in high school. Sharon Sue edited the paper during the months in which we were absent from home. When the children married the burden fell upon Nell and she has faithfully borne it through the years. There are now nine mail sacks filled with the papers every thirty days. In addition she has wrapped and mailed out thousands of books over the past few years. There have been 24,000 bound copies of the paper sent out, and these books are scattered all over the earth.

We are deeply indebted to brothers and sisters throughout the world who have held up our hands financially. We had no money with which to start or continue the publication. It was contrary to our conscience to send out letters soliciting help. We have always felt that if we were doing what God wanted us to do and doing it fervently He would supply the wherewithal to continue. To send out letters begging for assistance seemed to us a demonstration of lack of trust. I have never made a contract with a congregation, never made a demand, never set a fee, and never knew in advance what I would receive before going somewhere to share with the saints. If it appeared that I could help the cause I love I went without any arrangement about finances.

Eventually, the total cost of mailing out the paper approached ten thousand dollars annually. This meant we were losing on every subscription. Yet we always ended each year with every bill paid and we will close out this final issue with sufficient on hand to take care of every obligation. We never raised the subscription price. We began charging a dollar per year and as inflation began to take its toll and great publications were forced to cease or go into bankruptcy, we resolved to hold the line. This was done against the advice of friends who thought it was a little silly to be that stubborn. But we were meeting our bills and we were not editing the paper to make money. It may be that with the death of MISSION MESSENGER the day of the dollar per year subscription will be over.

In the last six years, Nell has mailed out 3200 books absolutely free to college and university students throughout the world. Many have gone to colleges in Africa, some to colleges in the South Pacific, others to schools on the European continent. In addition to the cost of the books which was great the wrapping and postage alone has amounted to over a thousand dollars, but all of this has been covered by unsolicited contributions from those whose hearts were touched by the Lord to help. We thank both Him and His servants.

It is our intention, so long as the Father permits, to continue sending out free books to college students. I recall how desperately I yearned for books which I was unable to buy when I was young, and I can still recapture the thrill I felt when someone gave me a book for my meager library. I feel there is nothing else which Nell and I can do as we grow older that will have as great an impact as to provide reading material for youthful and vigorous minds. Currently we are sending a copy of my own book The Parable of Telstar to any college student in the world who requests it.

We have no words for adequately expressing our gratitude to those who have shared their substance with us. My vocabulary is too limited for that. We can only commend them to the God of all grace and thank them for their helpful concern and generosity. They have been a source of strength and encouragement and we are sure that He who notes the fall of every sparrow will not forget them.

I do not know what the future holds, but I shall continue to serve actively so long as I am able. I am scheduled more fully for next year than for any year of my life. I shall probably fly more than a hundred thousand miles into every kind of situation. A good deal of my work now is outside of our own movement and consists of bringing the ideal of restoration to those of other backgrounds. I do not generally use the term “restoration” because it has lost its significance for this generation. Instead I plead for renewal through recovery of the apostolic proclamation, purpose and power. The religious world is not looking for restoration but it is looking for renewal. My theme is, therefore, renewal through recovery!

I am engaged, by request of our brother, Leroy Garrett, in writing the story of my life. It will appear in monthly segments in Restoration Review which is published at 1201 Windsor Drive, Denton, Texas 76201. The first installment will be in the January issue. Through the graciousness of Leroy I will be given space each month to inform you of speaking dates and other matters of general interest. I am thrilled at the possibility of sharing with Leroy and Ouida in the distribution of the message through the printed page. Restoration Review is one of the most exciting papers being printed in our day. You can send $3.00 for a two-year subscription to the address above and thus be assured that you will not miss out on anything. You should hurry!

I shall, if the Lord wills, finish some of the books which I have started. As most of you know, my next one is titled The Death of the Custodian. It is scheduled to be released next month and the price will be $2.95. We hope that a great many more of you will write in and ask to be placed on the permanent list to receive all of my books as they come from the press. Nell will mail them to you and enclose an invoice. She will include a copy of our latest book lists and any other free material that is available.

The bound copy of MISSION MESSENGER, containing all of the issues for this year will be ready soon under the title One in Christ. We are not yet aware of the price we must ask for it, but I promise it will be as low as we can make it in these times of inflation. There will be but 2,000 copies and these will not last long. We urge you to send in your advance order at once. Every year, in spite of our urging, a number of people have delayed too long, and are without the books they wanted. There were more than 800 advance copies on the reservation list on October 1.

I should now like to share with you some of my views as to what we may expect in the future. I am not a prophet and have no gift of prediction. What I here say is based upon impressions received by rather extensive travel experience, and upon interpretation of trends which are evident upon all sides. I could prove to be utterly mistaken and future readers of this issue may laugh at what could turn out to be an ill-chosen piece of guesswork. However, there are certain portents which seem to point to the conclusions I have reached and which I do not hesitate to share.

I am optimistic because I can see signs everywhere of the disintegration of the case-hardened factional attitude. This does not mean that verbal violence has ceased or that unprincipled attacks have been terminated. So long as the Spirit of God is working to bring about a peaceful solution to problems of relationship, Satan will be busily engaged in trying to thwart all such efforts. The prince of this world is desperately eager to keep the children of God apart. He will cultivate the seeds of bitterness and hostility he has sown in their hearts, knowing that “the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God.”

More and more congregations will throw off the yoke of slavish fear and will assert their autonomy and freedom under God. Men with a Messianic-complex who seek to dominate thought and tyrannize saints at large will have less and less influence. They may flourish for a little while like a green bay tree but they will be cut down. We are no longer a frontier movement composed of backwoods settlers. The crude and boorish tactics which created swaggering heroes out of debaters in the rough-and-tumble days of yesteryear will no longer attract thinking people in our day. A number of smaller parties will go out of existence as this generation passes away, because the issues around which they formed will be seen to be secondary and not important enough to divide the blood-bought heirs of the magnificent family of God.

There are some factions now which have a tenuous existence. Those who compose them no longer desire to make tests of fellowship out of the things which once loomed so big. Brethren are tired of “majoring in minors” and are holding on rather than to offend those who are older and caught up in the fear of proving untrue to the traditions that have been handed down. The idea that these little factions contain all of the children of God on earth has long ago been given up intellectually by those who cannot bring themselves to say it out loud. It is still dangerous to do that in some cases where men are frightened at the thought of being branded and marked.

It could well be that our particular restoration movement, which was only one of many sparked by events in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries has had its last major and widespread division. There is a great deal of doubt in the hearts of a lot of men who were caught up in the ferment within the non-instrument segment and which resulted in the open rupture related to the method of support of Herald of Truth and kindred matters, as to the validity of the cleavage. In the relative calm following the storm, brethren can see how they were manipulated and maneuvered into extremes which seem not to have been called for when viewed in retrospect.

In this particular schism I think the faction which was formed around the opposition has passed its zenith and will suffer from additional defections while being unable to increase its number perceptibly, because of attitudes. This does not mean the defectors will have changed their position on the issues but simply that they are sick of the carnality and immaturity which is basic to the formation and perpetuity of the party system. They are tired of elevating opinions and deductions into items of “faith.” They no longer want to be carnal and walk as men.

Their revulsion is the ground of real hope. The mortar of negativism cannot hold stones together interminably and a structure dependent upon it will eventually crumble. Wide cracks of dissidence are already appearing.

There are also real signs of lessening tension between those who use mechanical instruments in conjunction with their expression of corporate praise and those whose consciences lead them to oppose such. The problem is aggravated and prolonged because of emotional overtones engendered by public debates which always tend to harden hearts and stiffen resistance by pitting rivals against each other. The instrument has now become a symbol and this always intensifies feelings. To one group it is a symbol of freedom from human tyranny and they would as soon see Old Glory torn from her mast and ripped from her staff and trampled underfoot as to surrender this visible token of their freedom from the spirit of the "Antis." To the other group it is a sign of digression and treason and its use is looked upon as a gang of buccaneers hoisting the "Jolly Roger" while commandeering the old Ship of Zion.

In spite of this the brotherhood of the indwelling Spirit is becoming ever more widely recognized and brethren are able to join in cooperative efforts which do not call for a violation of conscience. There is every indication this growing sense of relationship will increase and the mistakes of our fathers in a time of bitterness will be somewhat mitigated by their children who live in a more fortunate era. It is not necessary that we keep alive the feuds which were kindled and set aflame in bygone times. We should not heap fuel upon the fires of hostility which should have been reduced to dying embers in our hearts years ago.

It is my very humble, but no less fervent prayer that, in the future when historians record the events of these times, they will find I have contributed a little to the appreciation of brotherhood across all of our unfortunate and humanlydesigned barriers. I was a militant partisan for so long I would like to believe I did something to undo the division I once defended. So thoroughly am I convinced that love is the only dynamic which can draw us together and hold us together that I want my life to be judged upon the degree to which I have advocated love for the Father and my brethren and exemplified it, in spite of my great weakness and many imperfections.

We will never debate one another into a state of oneness. Debates with brethren are tools of division, not of unity. Regardless of fine-spun reasoning to the contrary, the history of debating in the twentieth century is the history of division. Partisan debates engender the wrong kind of feelings. It is useless to argue that they need not do so. They simply do not produce the fruits of the Spirit, such as love, joy and peace. They cultivate works of the flesh. I have seen men become so enraged in debates that they wanted to fight. I came to recognize such discussions for what they were, instruments of the evil one thrust into our hands and hearts to drive the saints apart by encouraging strife.

Debates begin by rejecting one another. Partisan champions both start out on the theory that neither is of the other. They camp on separate hillsides as indications to the world that they are opponents. We must discover and adopt a dynamic which makes it possible for us to receive one another, in spite of our differences. We must receive one another as God received us. Our point of contact must be our mutual faith in Christ Jesus. We come together by coming to Christ. We come closer together by drawing nearer unto Him. A man may debate and prove nothing except that he possesses greater forensic skill than his opposite. Quoting scripture in a debate generally proves little because the representatives of both factions quote scripture. Often they quote the same passages from which they deduce different conclusions. This does not mean that one or the other is dishonest, but simply that they approach the revelation from different backgrounds and traditions. Both use the word of God as a means of justifying a partisan standard of measurement. But the new covenant scriptures were not given to win battles for human opinions but to transform human lives by a renewal of the mind.

The greatest testimony to the power of the Holy Spirit lies not in crushing a human opponent, nor in making his honest convictions look absurd through witty rejoinders and wisecracks, but in two persons working together for a common faith in spite of differing views. The pagan world around us expects those who see everything alike to be able to function in unison. “Birds of a feather flock together.” Even those of the same political stripe can exhibit harmonious effort. Persons who do not even believe in Jesus can continue without division when they are conformists.

There is no honor to the Spirit bestowed by the world when a group of conformists carry on without fighting. But when those who make no pretense of agreeing upon every concept, and openly admit they do not, are able to stay together it has to be admitted that they are cemented by a mutual regard for some one or some thing, which transcends their varied views.

This in no sense means that our opinions are not important. It is here that shallow thinkers reveal the superficiality of their reasoning. I am constantly being treated to diatribes in sectarian journals accusing me of advocating that doctrine is not important, or that we should ignore all differences. That is silly! I never once said anything which borders on that. Certainly one's opinions are important— to him! My opinions and interpretations are important to me. That is why Paul urged, “let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind.” Nothing is unimportant about which I am fully persuaded. But to one who is not fully persuaded of it, it may not be so important. I hold a lot of convictions which are very important to me. I am fully persuaded of them. I could not relinquish them if I wanted to do so. I am not told to surrender my opinions or convictions but to have them to myself alone. I cannot fully persuade one in his own mind against his own thinking. That is what the mind is for.

No one can ignore a difference. We must recognize our differences, and not try to sweep them under the rug or hide them behind the sofa. We must continue to discuss them as long as we live, or as long as we differ. But we must discuss them while united in Christ. Differing with brethren is not a sin, but dividing brethren is. It is a work of the flesh. It is a symptom of carnality. It is a mark of immaturity. Body life is more important than a disfiguration on a member. And it seems a little absurd to cut off a hand to get rid of a wart! Our divisions are not a tribute to our fidelity to Christ but a scandal we have perpetrated in His name. We are divided because we willed to divide against His will to unite. The will to separate the children of God is the result of separating the children of God from His will!

Differences will exist so long as men continue to think and to be persuaded in their own minds. But division can end now. It need not see the setting of another sun. We do not propose to encourage men to compromise their convictions but to see that brethren are worth more than human opinions. Jesus died for people and not for deductions. Little children, let us love one another!

This is easy to say, but how are we to accomplish it? How can one who has a decided opinion as to the validity of his understanding of a certain matter relate to one in Christ who simply does not see it as he does? The answer is found in the phrase "relate to one in Christ." To the extent that we emphasize the opinion we will be driven apart. To the extent that we exalt Christ we shall be drawn together. The answer, then, is to hold our opinions to ourselves and to glorify God together. Shall we allow our difference upon one thing to be greater than our concurrence upon many things? Are the only things that are important those upon which we disagree?

Our problem is that we are trying to love in Christ as we loved out of Christ. But there is a great difference. When we were out of Christ our love was an activity of the fleshly mind. It might have been born of a high sense of human idealism but it was a projection of our carnal nature, which was all the nature we possessed with which to project anything. Such love is always mixed up with ambition, suspicion and egotism. We love those who love us. We like those who like us, and we may avoid or downright despise those who are not. We love in word and in speech, but not really in deed and in truth.

It was this way with the world of mankind until God used the cross as a hypodermic needle and injected a new and transforming presence into the realm of human existence. Paul says, "Our days were passed in malice and envy; we were odious to ourselves and we hated one another." It is a tribute to the power and influence of the devil that professed followers in Jesus still act that way. But such people have overlooked the advent of the Great Change! They missed the gift which was dropped from heaven in the divine "grace lift." "But when the kindness and generosity of God our Savior dawned upon the world, then, not for any good deeds of our own, but because he was merciful, he saved us through the water of rebirth and the renewing power of the Holy Spirit. For he sent down the Spirit upon us plentifully through Jesus Christ our Savior, so that, justified by his grace, we might in hope become heirs of eternal life. These are words you may trust."

I do trust them! I mean I stake my all upon them. And it is because of this trust I recognize that the kind of love which enables us to be cemented together is a special kind of love. This is apparent in the statement, "Behold, what manner of love the Father has bestowed upon us, that we should be called the children of God" (1 John 3:1). The subject here is not so much love as it is the kind of love which creates the relationship in which fleshly men and women can be designated children of God. It is obviously this love which makes us brothers and sisters because it made us children of the same Father. It lifts our relationship out of the world in which our animal bodies exist and places it upon a plateau which can only be attained through the Spirit.

This love is not a difference in degree, but a difference in nature. It is not from the best interests or designs of our hearts, but from God. “Beloved, let us love one another; for love is of God, and he who loves is born of God and knows God” (1 John 4:7). It is the divine essence. When God loves He is personally entering into our situation. Love is not a mere quality that He possesses like power or wisdom. “He who does not love does not know God, for God is love” (1 John 4:8).

The word know is not used here for intellectual awareness or mental conception, but for experience or identification with another.

“God is love, and he who abides in love abides in God, and God abides in him” (1 John 4:16). God has power, and God has wisdom, but God is love. Power and wisdom are qualities or attributes of God, but love is the divine nature. Only when we become partakers of the divine nature can we exhibit this love. Even then it is the divine nature which exhibits it and not ourselves, or our personalities in the flesh.

We partake of the divine nature through the Holy Spirit of promise who dwells in us. Justification, the declaration of guiltlessness, through and by faith, results in three magnificent and tremendous blessings: peace with God, access to the grace in which we stand, and the tremendous mind-boggling hope of sharing the glory of God. “And hope does not disappoint us, because God’s love has been poured into our hearts through the Holy Spirit which has been given to us” (Romans 5:5).

God loves through us! We do not have to work and fret in an attempt to develop love for our brethren. It is not a human achievement but a divine gift. If you are pouring water into a vessel, that vessel does not need to strain and toil. All it needs to do is to be open. And that is all I need to do. If I am open to the Spirit, the love is poured out into my heart. God does not give grudgingly. He is not a miser or a penny-pincher. He gives us richly all things to enjoy. The Spirit has been given to us to live in us, comfort us and strengthen us with might in the inner man, and love is a fruit of the Spirit.

A lot of folk are interested in how they should manifest or witness to their love in a community of saints which is becoming upset and coming unglued. I think that, most of the time, the best way is just to refuse to take sides and treat all of the dissidents with the same kind of loving concern. A perfume bottle does not have to dance around or make a noise. All it has to do is just to be present and remain open and the fragrance will be discernible, almost unconsciously. We are earthen vessels, God's clay flowerpots. The purpose of a flowerpot is to exhibit the flower and not itself. Just keep on loving, even those who cannot love themselves, and you'll do more than you will getting into the hassle with both feet.

The solution of our problem of division and strife is not going to be solved by human minds filled with knowledge in varying degrees, hammering away at each other until one is utterly vanquished and gives in or surrenders to the position of another. Really, the time will never come when one of our factions triumphs over all the others and emerges as the knight in shining armor. What we need is a cultivation of the relationship with the indwelling Spirit until all of us surrender unto Him. Then peace will come as fruit rather than a feat.

There is something about human pride which makes us want to defend ourselves. We must enter into the fray and frequently we disgrace the cause we profess to love by our actions. No good is served by brethren cat-calling back and forth across an auditorium or taking sly digs at one another. This is the route of childishness and immaturity. Sometimes the Christian way is to suffer yourself to be defrauded. Our task is not to appear good in the eyes of men but to be good in the eyes of God. Occasionally keeping silent and refusing to engage in a controversial issue where a lot of heat is being thrown off is the route of real courage and manliness.

It is through the Spirit we are able to put to death the deeds of the body, or the flesh. Two of these works of the flesh are dissension and the party spirit. They should not be simply tucked away or put on the shelf to be used at a later date, but they should be killed. They are dangerous to anyone who tolerates them in his heart. All who are led by the Spirit of God are the sons of God. If we walk in the Spirit we will not fulfill the desires of the flesh. Our task is not to win arguments but to win souls.

It is the unity of the Spirit we are to endeavor to keep. The word “endeavor” shows where our human effort should center. The word keep means to guard or maintain. We guard what we already have. God bestows unity through the Spirit, and our task is to guard it in the bond of peace. It is not too much to say that our whole problem results from not knowing the Spirit. We have sought to exist on the human level, upon the plane of law and legal conformity. Disintegration is the inevitable terminus of that route. Divisions are set up by those who are sensual, having not the Spirit (Jude 19).

Our most widespread and dangerous sophistry in the whole religious complex is what I call the “either-or” fallacy. The devil has tricked us into accepting this divisive weapon in place of the dynamic of love. The apostles, writing under direction of the Spirit, recognized that if the community of saints becomes impaled on the point of this fallacy, hatred and animosity will be the certain result. The entire fourteenth chapter of Romans was written to show that two points of view could be entertained by brethren and two practices growing out of these divergent concepts could be indulged without breaking the relationship. It was not either condone eating of meats or get out, but either eat meats or not eat them and still stay in!

It was not either cease observing one day above another or leave, but either observe days or not observe them and remain. The same thing held true with circumcision, for “Neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creation.” So long as men do not make their opinions and deductions terms of justification, that is the establishing of a right relationship with God, we need not create an either-or dilemma. We must substitute the wisdom of “either-and” for the fallacy of “either-or” that we may exhibit, long suffering, forbearance and tolerance. These great virtues are never seen in a legalistic arrangement of conformity. Indeed, in such an arrangement they are ridiculed as weakness.

But as I must draw this issue to a close and prepare to bid a fond farewell to our faithful readers and supporters, I find myself turning to the words of the Spirit. And out of the marvelous treasure-house of God’s revelation I have chosen this as the best expression of my own feelings:

Now to him who is able to strengthen you according to my gospel and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery which was kept secret for long ages but is now disclosed and through the prophetic writings is made known to all nations, according to the command of the eternal God, to bring about obedience to the faith— to the only wise God be glory for evermore through Jesus Christ! Amen.

Nell joins me in this benediction and in prayer for every one of you, without exception. We love you all very dearly in Him who died for the sins of us all!

ABSTRACTS OF MISSION MESSENGER ESSAYS

Main Menu

The following are abstracts of essays by W. Carl Ketcherside which were published in Mission Messenger from 1957 through 1975. They are in chronological order, and are linked to the essays to which they correspond. The abstracts were composed by the editor of this volume over a period of months from 2007-2008. They are designed to provide the reader with a concise overview of the principal concepts covered in each essay.

That They All May Be One (1)

[\[Essay\]](#)

First in a series of articles which tells the story of a congregation planted by an evangelist and of his attempts to bring that congregation to spiritual maturity. The congregation is able to agree upon a sign that identifies their meeting place without sectarianizing or misappropriating a scriptural name of the church as its unique name.

Is the War Over?

[\[Essay\]](#)

Describes the state of unpreparedness of Christians for spiritual warfare due to compromise and a lack of commitment. Congregations act as if a truce has been signed with Satan. Too many members just 'belong.' Satan has taken away our guns and given us cap pistols. The army is infested with people who do not know which side they are on. They are like little boys playing war with broomsticks and expecting Satan to fall over and play dead when they yell 'Bang!' We've placed diplomats in the pulpits and leave it up to them to explain the terms of compromise.

Statement of Fact

[Essay]

Prospects for Mission Messenger as it enters its nineteenth year of publication. Gives a brief background of the origin of the paper and an overview of its present purpose and financial status. Expresses gratitude to financial supporters and makes an appeal for help in acquiring additional subscribers. Notes that the paper is in need of a thousand new subscriptions this year in order to break even. In ten years 24,000 copies have been sent outside the U.S.

Law and Love

[Essay]

The restoration of man to his former guiltless state is the whole theme and purpose of divine revelation. Conformity to the spirit of that revelation will transform man and render him capable of walking in fellowship with God. Nothing can be so important as familiarizing ourselves with its content. The new covenant writings are our hope for a better world and a better life. Many miss the majesty of the design of revelation by viewing it legalistically while others disregard it entirely and invent new approaches to fellowship with God. More than anything else is needed a wholesome, pure, and consistent attitude toward God's revelation.

Freedom in Christ

[Essay]

Innovations are never introduced into the church of God by an avowed enemy of truth, but good intentions will not necessarily protect against deviation from and destruction of the faith. We should carefully weigh what men say in the scales of divine revelation. We should not be led to question the motives of all who differ from our position nor assume they are dishonest simply because they disagree with us. All lack knowledge in some fields, all lack some knowledge in all fields. No good man will want others to follow him blindly. Good leaders should encourage others to read, think, and speak for themselves, thus exercising their freedom.

Grilling the Editor

[Essay]

Transcript of a recorded interview in which the editor replies to questions proposed relative to his views on current topics such as:

- the implications of his use of the term “restoration”
- whether “The Church of Christ” today is co-extensive with references to “the body of Christ” in scripture
- whether there are children of God in the sectarian bodies
- the editor's opposition to seminaries and the one-man minister system

- how he regards Mission Messenger as it relates to the things he is striving to achieve
- and others.

That They All May Be One (2)

[Essay]

Continuation of a series of articles which tells the story of a congregation planted by an evangelist, and his attempts to bring that congregation to spiritual maturity. Deals with how a brother who accepts instrumental music might accept and be accepted by a congregation that rejects instrumental music as acceptable in corporate worship.

The Sheep on the Hills

[Essay]

Describes the status of the Christian community as divided by sectarian interests. Lists factors which have produced sectarianism. Appeals for unity among all followers of Christ in response to Jesus' prayer and the fulfillment of the eternal purpose of God. Unity among believers will convert the world to Christ and issue in peace among humankind. Warns those who would be divisive that the sheep are God's, not theirs.

That They All May Be One (3)

[Essay]

Continuation of a series of articles which tells the story of a congregation planted by an evangelist, and his attempts to bring that congregation to spiritual maturity. The evangelist goes about training men to become bishops and training the congregation to function independently in his absence. The evangelist sustains the relationship of a father to those he begets through the proclamation of the gospel. Explains that the modern “located evangelist” system is one of foster fathers which contributes to and perpetuates the immaturity of the congregation. Explains the role of bishops and deacons.

The Spirit and Liberty

[Essay]

Asserts the freedom of the human spirit before all men and the propriety of its submission only to God. Encourages the assertion of one’s freedom in Christ and decries the tyranny of leaders who seek to exercise mind control. In a less enlightened era physical torture was used to bring opinions in line with orthodoxy. In these days more exquisite means of torture are used such as ridicule, misrepresentation, lying, and boycott. Charity and sincerity are characteristics of true religion which must utterly disown bitterness and hypocrisy. Observes that error in thought is intellectual lameness. Suggests that we should treat such with the same care and consideration shown to one who is physically lame, not attempting to make him walk as we do by twisting and deforming his legs. Notes that one cannot force another to grovel and kneel before him without first losing his own dignity. One who feels God belongs exclusively to him reveals he does not yet belong to God.

To My Catholic Friends

[Essay]

Addressed to members of the Roman Catholic Church with whom the author holds many great truths in common. The question raised is that of the nature and identity of the church of God. Suggests that neither the Protestant churches nor the Roman Catholic Church were founded by Christ, since there were thousands of baptized believers in Jesus before there was a church in Rome and long before the first Protestant sect was formed. Since it was not the first, the church in Rome cannot be the mother of all churches. If it is admitted that the church in Jerusalem was a true church, then it must be granted that union with the Church of Rome is not essential.

The Clergy and the Church

[Essay]

The special clergy has been the chief foe of pure Christianity in every age. The system of “located evangelists” in “The Church of Christ” is simply the clergy system operating under an assumed name. The seminaries of these churches seek to turn out men who are “sound” in parroting the party line. Although not all of its “local ministers” are satisfied with this status and recognize that the office they occupy was no part of the primitive ecclesia. Many, however, honestly believe that the restoration has been completed and that “The Church of Christ” is identical with the church of God in the new covenant scriptures. Enumerates ten things about these churches which were no part of the primitive church. Asserts that almost every error in the history of Christendom has been injected and perpetuated by the clergy. Maintains that the clergy system will be the hardest of all innovations to overthrow due to prestige, power, and wealth.

That They All May Be One (4)

[Essay]

Continuation of a series of articles which tells the story of a congregation planted by an evangelist, and his attempts to bring that congregation to spiritual maturity. At this time he presents a series of lessons on the eldership. He points out that God has ordained three organic institutions as a blessing to mankind: the family, civil government, and the congregation of the saints, and that government is an essential feature of each. In every dispensation of time, the rule of elders, or ancients, has been sanctioned by God as the most appropriate to man in his earthly state. No organized body can function as a body except through agents. No congregation of disciples has developed to the degree of spiritual maturity which God expects it to attain until of its own number it can select godly, capable, qualified men as overseers or superintendents.

The Name of the Bride

[Essay]

Response to a correspondent who asserts that the name of the church ought to be “The Church of Christ,” since the church is his bride and should wear his name: Notes that the practice of a woman wearing her husband’s name— which was not the practice in Bible times— is a fairly modern one. Furthermore, the name of the bride of the church is not “Christ” but “Jesus.” The word “Christ” is not a name for our Lord. It is his office. The community of saints has no official distinctive and exclusive name or title.

Wild Grapes

[Essay]

Building on God's lament in Isaiah that all his blessings on Judah had resulted only in wild grapes, briefly traces the history of reformation to the present. Then states that the vineyard is once again producing the wild grapes of hate, bitterness and the party spirit. Illustrates this with references to factionism in "The Church of Christ" over the elements of the Lord's Supper—whether or not the loaf is to be leavened; whether or not the fruit of the vine is to be fermented grape juice, and whether it is to be served in one or in multiple cups. Exposes the error in such division and calls for attitudes which will rise above the party spirit.

A Sense of Values

[Essay]

Jesus came to change the values of men to the values he modeled. Our exaggerated regard for human life is not a Christian value. We elevate physical life beyond that of the primitive church—fearing him who can kill the body more than him who has power over the soul. This results from a loss of faith in spiritual things.

Fear of Love

[Essay]

There are now more neurotics and insane than at any point in history. This presents an opportunity for Christians to demonstrate the nature of Christianity to the world, but they are generally lacking in love—its guiding principle. To be children of God implies growing in his likeness—which is love. But love is often ridiculed even by those who profess to be Christians. We are taught to love our group, church, race, etc. But Jesus taught us to love our enemies. To restrict our love to those who agree with us is to deny the basic element of Christianity. No man can say he is like God if his love is partisan, national or racial. The lever which will move the world to Christ is love.

That They All May Be One (5)

[Essay]

Continuation of a series of articles which tells the story of a congregation planted by an evangelist, and his attempts to bring that congregation to spiritual maturity. Responds to seven questions about elders:

- How old should a man be to qualify for the office?
- Can a man be appointed against his will?
- Can a man resign from the office?
- Why is there no scripture for a man resigning?
- Is it possible for one to get too old to serve?
- Can a congregation be scriptural without having them?
- Is a plurality necessary?

The Power of Christianity

[Essay]

An overview of the impact of Christianity upon human society. Notes that Christ never created a single organization for social reform. Christianity is a revolutionizing power that works quietly through the power of unselfish love. It is a mistake, however, to view the purpose of the church as that of an organization designed to work overtly toward social reform. Such an idea has been a hindrance and an obstacle to effecting the divine purpose.

Class Controversy

[Essay]

One of the many factions within the disciple brotherhood contends that it is the faithful church because it does not have Bible classes for study. This is a position based on no rational argument from Scripture. Its leading proponents are largely deficient in scholarship and constructive ability. The contention is over a method of teaching for which God has not legislated. It rests on a misinterpretation (due to the fallacy of generalization from a specific) of 1 Cor. 14:31. It would be wrong, however, to disturb the peace of those who have agreed not to have classes.

That They All May Be One (6)

[Essay]

Continuation of a series of articles which tells the story of a congregation planted by an evangelist, and his attempts to bring that congregation to spiritual maturity. As the evangelist labors to complete his task by training men for the office of bishop, he instructs the congregation in the distinctive terms applied to the office.

- Elders and presbyters
- Bishops and overseers
- Shepherds and pastors

Notes that the “Church of Christ” today has an unscriptural hireling pastor system exactly like the sectarian world about it.

Positive and Negative

[Essay]

Reacting to a booklet published by the “Church of Christ” bearing the title “A Church that is neither Catholic, Protestant, or Jewish,” discusses how the church of God is catholic and composed of protestants and Jews, in the literal and biblical meaning of these terms. Suggests that we spend our time telling the world who we are rather than who we are not.

Brethren in Slavery

[Essay]

Regards cigarette smoking as catering to a physical craving or lust and the smoker as ensnared in an evil bondage of his own making. Opines that a smoker should not be appointed as an elder. Describes the physical detriment of smoking and urges all smokers to pray for strength to quit, rely on the Holy Spirit for strength, and vow to God never to smoke again.

That They All May Be One (7)

[Essay]

Continuation of a series of articles which tells the story of a congregation planted by an evangelist, and his attempts to bring that congregation to spiritual maturity. Discusses the functions of elders using the categories of activities listed in Ezekiel 34. Contrasts the proper function of elders with that of the hireling — the located evangelist. Maintains that the development of qualified bishops in the congregations of the saints is the greatest need in this age. The failure to do so has resulted in the hiring of a specialist in organization and congregation management resulting in a plague of unconverted members who seek to be served rather than to serve.

A Sad Commentary

[Essay]

Commentary on a quotation from John T. Lewis decrying the practice of elders hiring an outside preacher to fill-in for the regular preacher when the latter is away holding a meeting. The author analyzes and comments on several key statements in the Lewis quotation. Makes reference to a personal conversation with Lewis while visiting in his home in Birmingham, Alabama. Concludes that Lewis himself was responsible for promoting the modern pastor system by not speaking out against it in the churches he had started.

That They All May Be One (8)

[Essay]

Continuation of a series of articles which tells the story of a congregation planted by an evangelist, and his attempts to bring that congregation to spiritual maturity. Answers ten questions from the congregation regarding the qualification and appointment of elders:

- Is there general agreement as to the qualifications?
- Is there danger of interpreting the qualifications too rigidly?
- Must a man have all of the qualifications?
- Would this not require a state of perfection?
- If no man has the qualifications but several men taken together have them, can they be appointed?
- Should a man who shows a promise be appointed in anticipation of his developing the qualifications?

- Should one be appointed who might be offended if left out?
- Should a man be appointed as a reward for faithful service?
- Do the qualifications come under various categories?
- Which classification will be discussed first?

Notes that qualifications of elders fall into four categories: moral, domestic, intellectual and executive.

Disciples of Yesterday

[Essay]

Asserts that “The Church of Christ” in many places has degenerated into merely another narrow and intolerant sect. In contrast with the early restorationists, Walter Scott and Barton W. Stone, these modern inheritors of the restoration movement will not receive as brethren those who leave other sects and seek to join them unless the latter have been re-baptized by a “Church of Christ” preacher.

Peace Must Be Waged

[Essay]

Sets forth three principles that must guide the efforts of those who would work for peace among brethren:

- Recognize the party spirit for what it is— a work of the flesh
- Actively engage in the promotion of peace
- Recognize that peace is not an accident

Then states a few convictions as to what should be a part of a strategy for peace:

- Peace must be waged in love
- We must distinguish between the person and the thing he advocates
- No principle must be sacrificed
- We do not shoot men full of peace, rather we strive patiently with them in love
- Fair treatment of those with whom we differ does not imply endorsement of error

We do not love each other because we are of the same mind; we come to be of the same mind because we love each other.

The Class Controversy

[Essay]

A response to letters (all from the southland) received in response to the article on “Class Controversy” (Vol. 19, No. 6). Observes that many of those who oppose him are not in agreement with each other. A debate, proposed by correspondents, is declined. States the issue in the words of one of his opponents, then responds to the statement. Concludes with a call for unity.

That They All May Be One (9)

[Essay]

Continuation of a series of articles which tells the story of a congregation planted by an evangelist, and his attempts to bring that congregation to spiritual maturity. Takes up the qualifications of elders in the moral realm:

- Blameless
- Vigilant
- Sober
- Of good behavior
- Not given to wine
- No striker
- Not greedy of filthy lucre
- Patient
- Not a brawler
- Not covetous
- A good report of those without
- Not self-willed
- Not soon angry
- A lover of good men
- Just

Smoking and Cancer

[Essay]

Takes issue with a statement by the editor of the Gospel Guardian in which little or no merit was given to the “moral aspects” of smoking. Describes the impact on families of the death of smokers. Concludes with an impassioned appeal to smokers to stop smoking immediately.

Must Elders Be Married? (1)

[Essay]

This essay builds on the last in the series of essays entitled “That They All May Be One” (Vol. 19, No. 9) in which the oral qualifications of an elder were discussed. This essay deals with the domestic requirements for that office. The first question is whether a man must be married to qualify. Reviews quotes from numerous commentators on both sides of the question. Concludes that there is a great deal of contradictory material available on the subject and suggests that exegetes proceed with caution and humility. However, there is one thing of which all may be certain, says the author, and that is that the enforced celibacy of the Roman Church is contrary to the word of God.

Drawing the Line

[Essay]

Observations concerning what the author considers to be the improper use of the words “brotherhood” and “fellowship” by a fellow editor. Commends the editor on his recognition that differing degrees of knowledge entail differences among brethren.

A Serious Charge

[Essay]

Response to a challenge to the author’s earlier reference to “The Church of Christ” as a sect. Then proceeds to set forth ten statements (re boards, conventions, societies, propaganda, bureaus, schools, and headquarters) about “The Church of Christ” designed to demonstrate that “The Church of Christ” is not a restoration of the primitive church but a modern sect, although it is acknowledged that many “Churches of Christ” are not sectarians in concept or practice. Expresses doubt that “The Church of Christ” will ever repent and return to the original pattern.

Making Allowances

[Essay]

Observes that the position of a fellow editor on a certain issue reflects that loyalty of a congregation is determined by its subscription to several items of an unwritten creed, and not by its relationship to God. Notes that the party spirit results in a twisting of scripture to sustain the partisan position. The holding of differing views does not bring brethren under condemnation but the creating of a party around those views does. Observes that not a single one of the factions in the disciple brotherhood has perfect agreement among its constituents. They merely agree on the one thing which is the test of loyalty.

Our Plea

[Essay]

A list of five principles for which the author pleads, together with a list of five related things which he opposes.

Must Elders Be Married? (2)

[Essay]

Concludes that an elder must be married as a requisite for the office of elder and states the reasons for his conclusion— a position he did not hold five years prior. His conclusion is based on (1) the practice of the early Jewish Christians, (2) the general tenor of the apostle’s teaching about elders, and (3) the fact that the statement that an elder should “rule well his own house” would strongly imply the presence of children. States that while he could not conscientiously appoint unmarried men as elders nor serve under such, he would not make an unwritten creed of his interpretation and divide brethren over it.

Report of a Trip

[Essay]

A report on a trip to Charleston, West Virginia, where the author met with ministers of several Churches of Christ, all of whom questioned whether the others were truly children of God. Relates his experience attending the Mountain States Christian Convention. Reports on discrepancies in the use made of the instrument and the argument made to defend its use (as an aid to singing). Doubts that any of the brethren in Charleston truly want real restoration.

A Wine Party

[Essay]

Comments on the divisive nature of remarks made by a correspondent who states his opposition to the use of non-fermented grape juice with the Lord's Supper. The author notes that the word "communion" is misused when limited in reference to the Lord's Supper. It is sinful to split the body of Christ into wrangling parties over the very Supper which the Son of God ordained as an expression of corporate fellowship.

Elders and Children

[Essay]

The last in a series of articles on elders— their function and qualifications. Sets forth, in a series of questions and answers, his view that an elder may have one or more children and that those children must show evidence of being under subjection to their father, but not necessarily Christians.

What Is Heresy?

[Essay]

A response to a letter which tells of a church where a brother holding premillennial views was accepted by the congregation, but a visiting speaker told them that the brother held a dangerous heresy and that they should get rid of him. Points out that it was the preacher who was the heretic due to his party spirit— which is heresy. Although the author considers the pre-millennial theory to be a misinterpretation of Revelation 20, he would no more cast out a brother for mental astigmatism than for physical.

Thoughts on Fellowship (1)

[Essay]

We are called into fellowship by God. Fellowship is a state attained through grace. The prior relationship to God is one of alienation from his life. The Jewish system separated men from God and from each other. These barriers were destroyed by Christ— the veil of the Temple being torn in two. The Jews were told “draw not nigh” but we are told “Let us draw near.” The work of unity is credited in Scripture to Jesus— not to men. Unity is now achieved by the Spirit and is called the fellowship of the Spirit. The Spirit rests upon us as the cloud rested upon the tabernacle in the wilderness. Earlier men had to go up to God, now God dwells in us continually. Fellowship has to do with sharing. We are in fellowship with each other only because we sustain the same relationship to God.

Church Autonomy

[Essay]

A warning against the forfeiture of congregational autonomy through the delegation of responsibility to others. Expresses concern for the practical outcome of large gatherings in a central location of those who think that they “represent” the brotherhood and attempt to tell others what position they must take on current issues. Editors occasionally seize power and assume the role of brotherhood “oracle” and their pronouncements become law. But there is no such thing as a “brotherhood paper.” One congregation cannot discipline the members of another, nor can the elders of one exclude the elders of another. One congregation cannot disfellowship another congregation. There are no diocesan bishops, no delegate conventions, no ecumenical councils of talented men, no convocations of preachers, and no ecclesiastical courts in the framework of God’s revelation.

Big Preachers

[Essay]

Response to comments of Burton Coffman in Firm Foundation regarding the need to keep big preachers in the big churches. Coffman lists the names of fourteen such men. Exposes double talk in terminology used and calls attention to the interests of these men and the financial nature of their work. The pulpit was unknown in the primitive church.

Religion of Fact

[Essay]

God's purpose is to unite men whom he created with different ways of thinking and different intellectual abilities. His plan is based upon the belief of testimony regarding facts— not abstract propositions. Anyone who believes the fact that Jesus is the Messiah of God and who proves his faith by being immersed is admitted into the fellowship of the Father and the Son. Men dare not make their opinions tests of fellowship. 1 Corinthians 1:10 does not require perfect agreement of all opinions nor can it refer to matters of personal judgment. It is just as sinful to call a party by the name of Christ for the purpose of segregating it from other believers as it is to call it by the name of Cephas or Paul. There is to be a diversity of minds for the church of God. God has ordained and revealed a religion founded upon facts, testimony and faith.

Thoughts on Fellowship (2)

[Essay]

Second in a series of articles on fellowship. Expounds on the meanings of the Greek word koinonia, the English word "fellow," and the suffix "ship." Notes that one cannot have fellowship with things (such as cups, colleges, etc.). Points out that fellowship is not synonymous with endorsement of everything the other fellow may hold. We are in fellowship with the Father and the Son, but this doesn't imply that our understanding of all things is equal to their divine knowledge. Fellowship is a state, whereas endorsement is a rational act. Tells the story of a preacher who refused to lead in prayer where the author was speaking for fear that his doing so would consist of fellowship with the author. States that "every baptized penitent believer on this earth is my brother, and we are in fellowship because we are part of the brotherhood of Christ.” The church at Corinth was guilty of many wrongs yet Paul reminded them that they had been called into fellowship and that Christ was in them.

The Thing That Counts

[Essay]

Raises the question as to how to proceed in a hypothetical situation in which a new church is preparing to partake of the Lord’s Supper together for the first time, and one member of the congregation objects to the use of multiple cups in which to pass the fruit of the vine. Suggests that the objector is the weaker brother and should be treated with deference. To do otherwise would be to fail to walk in love toward that brother.

Is It New Doctrine?

[Essay]

A review of quotations by A. Campbell, M. E. Lard, T. Campbell, G. W. Elley, B. Franklin, D. King, D. Lipscomb, and D. Sommer in evidence of the fact that the author’s pleas for a restoration of the restoration are not new with him.

Our Attitude

[Essay]

A statement of the approach of Mission Messenger to the problems currently confronting the religious world. Affirms a resolution to explore the Word of God for answers, not seek the agreement of all men, refrain from brutally attacking those who hold different views, maintain an open heart and open paper, refuse to compromise, and continue to plead for the unity of all believers in Christ and the restoration of a pure Christianity.

The Party Spirit

[Essay]

An exposition of the party spirit, referred to by Paul as a work of the flesh. Examines the symptoms of the party spirit: (1) reluctance to admit the truths held by others, (2) inability to rejoice over the good done by others, (3) unwillingness to hear both sides of an issue and (4) a tendency to abandon the search for truth and rest satisfied in present knowledge. Then looks at the effects of the party spirit: (1) breeds inconsistency, (2) shrivels the souls of men, (3) destroys the sense of proper spiritual values, and (4) produces legalistic extremes. Expresses a need for elders to cultivate a charitable spirit, a love for humanity, and a sense of a need for reformation. Exhorts, “Let those who have been more fortunate in inheriting truth discovered by others, exercise charity toward those who are still laboring to discover what we have.”

Thoughts on Fellowship (3)

[Essay]

A commentary on 2 Corinthians 6:14-18 in response to the suggestion by a correspondent that this passage supports separation from brethren with whom one finds himself in doctrinal disagreement. Demonstrates the absurdity of applying this passage to brethren with whom we differ. Acknowledges as a brother every immersed, sincere believer in the Messiah—regardless of his ignorance of some of the blessings accruing from baptism or as to the time they were bestowed. Raises the question, What shall be my attitude toward unimmersed believers? Concludes that it should be that of a family toward an unborn child—rejoicing that it has been conceived by faith.

The Road to Ruin

[Essay]

While critical of the modern pastor system, observes that not all hired ministers are necessarily hirelings but tireless and self-sacrificing men, victims of circumstance. Notes that half a century ago the idea of elders hiring or firing a local minister was unknown to restoration minded churches. Asserts that every human institution to do the work of the church is a monument to the mistakes of the brethren. Briefly traces the development of the modern pastor system within restoration movement churches. Expresses doubt that the Church of Christ, with millions invested in human organizations, can ever return to the old paths without the sudden destruction of the structures of modern civilization. The proper response for those who weep over Zion is to make every disciple a minister through love for God rather than for gain and to train godly men as bishops—our greatest need. All Christians must oppose the clerical system.

Restoration

[Essay]

Reference to restoration does not imply the church disappeared at some point in history, rather it is the work of uncovering the purity of the original ideal of God which was tarnished and covered over during the 1260 years during which the church was forced to flee into the wilderness. The work of restoration, begun by Wycliffe, Luther, Calvin, Wesley, the Campbells, Stone, Scott, Smith, and others, is not completed. The prayer of Jesus has not been answered— this must come through a restoration of the spirit and form of apostolic Christianity. The spirit of restoration must be restored to this age.

Not Many Fathers

[Essay]

Asserts that there is a difference in the content of the gospel and the apostles' doctrine. Men are begotten— once— by the gospel; they are instructed in the teaching of the apostles. The gospel is the good news and one does not teach news— he announces or proclaims it. Asserts that the evangelist who proclaims the gospel is father to those begotten through his proclamation. One is not a father because he assists at delivery (baptism) but because he begets. The fathers' task is to train (Paul was not sent to baptize but to preach the gospel). Misconceptions have led to a system of foster-fathers (located evangelists) who attempt to train through sermonizing. Concludes with a lengthy quote from A. Campbell in which he opposes sermonizing.

Thoughts on Fellowship (4)

[Essay]

Responding to claims that Amos 3:3 teaches absolute unanimity of opinion as a requisite to fellowship in Christ, notes that while we are obligated to accept what God says, we are not obligated to accept what any person thinks that God meant. Points out that the context shows that Amos was arguing from cause to effect. When you see two people walking together, it is as the result of an appointment to meet at a stated time. The original word relates to an initial engagement to meet, regardless of the purpose. If we wait until we get together upon all of our varying interpretations, we will never walk together at all. If God can walk together with us while we are learning, surely we can walk together with all others in Him who are in the same condition.

The Power of Prayer

[Essay]

The power of heaven is available to us through prayer. If it is not, there would have been no point in James saying that Elijah was a man like us (5:17, 18). Our house is wired for electricity but we burn tallow candles. We are self eclipsed, getting between ourselves and the light of heaven. Like Peter we take our eyes off of Christ and look at the water. During the Renaissance men re-made the world. We can do the same. Tremendous power is made available through a good man's earnest prayer.

Instrumental Music (1)

[Essay]

The use of instrumental music in the public praise service of the saints (introduced into disciples churches in 1859 by Dr. Pinkerton in Midway, Kentucky) created a cleavage in restoration churches that is as great as ever. This division is contrary to God's will and we must not become callous to that fact. While the instrument was generally introduced by the young over the objections of the old, it is now the old that resist any effort by the young to remove it for the sake of harmony. Those who disallow the instrument often no longer regard as brethren those who use it. This type of thinking has been fomented by the church colleges. But there are signs of change throughout the world. The problem must be worked out in love through further study.

Thoughts on Fellowship (5)

[Essay]

Asserts that our divided state is the chief deterrent to the subjugation of the world to Christ. A quote from A. Campbell refers to a few individuals who began to reflect upon the ways and means to restore primitive Christianity. A question is raised and answered as to the status of the heirs of this restoration effort. Concludes that the noble idea has been shattered into more than two dozen parties. This has been done in part through the twisting of scriptures such as Ephesians 5:11, for which an exposition is given to show that the works of darkness cannot have reference to those who differ on doctrinal issues. Many in Christian denominations are the innocent victims of birth and circumstances beyond their control; many love the truth and pray for unity. Our task is not to deny they are children of God but to get them to cease being partisans. We must not be partisans in our opposition to the party spirit. We must not create a party in the name of Christ. Nonpartisans (1) recognize sectism as a sin, (2) distinguish between the person and the party to which they belong, (3) have a rigid determination to be nonpartisan, (4) are patient and forbearing while men are learning, and (5) love truth for truth's sake.

Thoughts on Fellowship (6)

[Essay]

Summarizes what fellowship in Christ consists of and what it entails. Concludes that restoration churches could not be more divided if the Word of God had commanded it. This sad state is often justified by reference to 2 John 9, 10. An exposition of that text is the focus of the essay. Provides a brief summary of Gnosticism— which prompted the writing of the epistle— and concludes that John’s phrase “and bring not this doctrine” refers to the denial of the fact that Jesus came in the flesh.

Instrumental Music (2)

[Essay]

After reaffirming an interest in any problem linked either to unity or restoration, notes the shallowness of some of the arguments being used against the use of instrumental music in the public praise service, such as those based on Amos 6:5 and Romans 14:23. Notes, however, that the instrument was introduced on one basis but is now being defended on a wholly different basis. Expresses sadness over the division which has resulted due to the introduction of instrumental music and advocates tolerance— toward people, not things— as avenues toward unity continue to be explored. The remainder of the article is an exegesis of Psalm 87 and a critique of Given Blakely’s interpretation of the same as set forth in a recent article.

Thoughts on Fellowship (7)

[Essay]

Notes that the present view of how to solve the problem of disunity, which has plagued the disciple brotherhood, is not achieving the proper response— factions are multiplying, not diminishing. Proposes a simple answer which can revolutionize and revitalize the restoration movement: Fellowship in Christ is not the result of our agreement, but our agreement comes as a result of our fellowship. We are called into fellowship. Understanding is achieved through the exercise of our rational faculties. Fellowship is not a fruit of agreement but agreement is the fruit of fellowship. So long as we seek to achieve fellowship by agreement upon propositions we will divide every time someone learns a new truth.

Instrumental Music (3)

[Essay]

A summary of the author's reasons for opposing instrumental music in the public worship service of God: (1) it obstructs our efforts to promote unity, (2) it's introduction created division, (3) a restoration of the primitive order requires its exclusion, (4) it introduces an element into the worship unauthorized by Christ, (5) it constitutes ritualism and is thus a departure from the simplicity which should characterize followers of the meek and lowly one. Regards those immersed believers who oppose his views as brethren, but states that he cannot participate in the public praise service where the instrument is being used. Concludes: "If brethren wish to inject into the service that which will exclude us on the basis of conscience . . . the responsibility will rest with them."

A Sound Mind (1)

[Essay]

Soundness of mind has to do with that quality or state of intellect which enables one to think clearly and reason correctly in regard to those propositions which come within the sphere of personal experience or relationships. Since the chief aim of man is to search for truth, and since truth can only be perceived clearly by a well-regulated mind, and since such a quality of mental power must be cultivated, it is important to develop the ability to think clearly and reason correctly. Observes that our nation has been victimized by “easy living” and the spirit of “getting by.” The masses are not as able to comprehend profound thinking as those of a century ago. Compares the sermons of A. Campbell and B. W. Stone to backwoods audiences with the frothy utterances of modern preachers. Notes that just as a stomach constantly fed pre-digested food will soon cease to function, so will a mind limited only to “digests” containing that which is skimmed off by other minds. Only the cultivation of a sound mind will enable modern man to find a satisfactory answer to the greatest personal question of all, the reason and purpose of human existence. We are today where our thinking has brought us. We will be tomorrow where our thinking takes us.

Thoughts on Fellowship (8)

[Essay]

The word “fellowship” (koinonia) is used to describe the Lord’s Supper. Open communion is the first step to open membership. Brethren in Great Britain do not practice open communion. Asserts that whatever is set up as a barrier to admission to the Lord’s table is one’s creed and test of fellowship. But brethren are generally ignorant of the meaning of the word fellowship as used by the Holy Spirit. Many believe that calling on one to lead in public prayer would be to acknowledge fellowship whereas sharing the Lord’s Supper with him would not be. The only test of fellowship imposed by God is belief that Jesus is the Son of God and immersion prompted by that faith. Baptism “for the remission of sins” is a proviso of modern Church-of-Christ-ism— not of God. When a man moved by faith is immersed, that act of immersion is for the remission of sins. We are saved by grace— not by faith in baptism for the remission of sins.

Reply to Brother Zerr

[Essay]

Response to criticism by E. M. Zerr to comments made in a previous article relative to fellowship and restoration. Contends that no sect is a part of the church of God, but there may be children of God among the sects. The one church is composed of all the saved. The question is not how much truth a group must know before it is a true church but its attitude toward truth as such. It is the truth about the sin of division that needs to be learned and shared, for division is the greatest scandal of modern Christendom. Toleration of others is not restoration but the only atmosphere in which it can be pursued. There is a more excellent way than the party road. As we become closer to Him who died for us we will become closer to each other.

Thoughts on Fellowship (9)

[Essay]

The Greek word koinonos designates a partner or partaker of something shared. Those who are partakers (koinos) of the Lord’s Supper have fellowship (koinonia) in that act. The brotherhood of Christ stems from the fatherhood of God. Every person on earth who is a child of God is my brother. When we speak of the brotherhood in such a way as to exclude any of God's children we are sectarian. Many speak of the "brotherhood" in a limited way— limited to those who agree with them on certain doctrinal points and practices. Each has its paper whose editors and their cohorts constitute the brotherhood hierarchy, stifling individual thinking. We are participants with God because we share in the divine nature. We are one in him because of grace— not because of any personal attainment.

A Sound Mind (2)

[Essay]

A second article by the same title (see Vol. 20, No. 8). Observes that reason is one of several functions of the mind. A sound mind is one which is regulated by the principles which pertain to investigation and deduction which demands the application of positive factors and the avoidance of negative factors. Discusses pitfalls to be avoided and enumerates some of the laws governing the mental process in an effort to help all think clearly and reason correctly. Concludes that we should cultivate sound minds by refusing to form an opinion based on insufficient data, by weeding out the trivial from the worthwhile, by firmness of character which will not yield to every whim, and by being open to a review our position in the light of additional evidence. Notes that "When you slam the door of your mind to keep others out, you shut yourself in."

Christian Church Baptism

[Essay]

A response to remarks in The Gospel Guardian that “Christian Church baptism” is not the one baptism of Ephesians 4:5. Replies that the “one baptism” is the immersion of a believing penitent upon the basis of faith that Jesus is the Christ, regardless of who may administer the baptism.

A Sound Mind (3)

[Essay]

A third article on the discipline of the mind (see Vol. 20, No. 8 and Vol. 20, No. 9). Encourages the development of a “habit of undistracted attention” which is the foundation of all mental growth. Notes that a wandering mind accumulates little real knowledge. One must form the habit of attempting but one thing at a time, giving it undivided attention. Appeals to the young to avoid letting pleasure and entertainment take priority over duty and responsibility.

Thoughts on Fellowship (10)

[Essay]

While the Lord’s Supper is a public expression of corporate fellowship, we do not endorse another’s errors by eating with him at the Lord’s table. Fellowship is not endorsement. God holds no man guilty of believing something he does not believe. We have no right to make anything a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation. It is misleading to teach men that all who believe and are immersed are introduced to all the privileges of citizenship and then change the rules after they have come in among us.

Thoughts on Fellowship (11)

Presents a summary of views expressed in this series of articles on fellowship. Notes that while it is God's will that all who believe in Him should be one, believers are in a state of division which is not the normal condition of the body of Christ. The answer to sectarian strife is a major one with many roots and there is no simple answer. The term fellowship has come to mean endorsement, but was never used in this way by the Holy Spirit. We must resolve never to make anything a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation. We must recognize that a restoration must be preceded by a reformation of attitude, and that it can only go forward in love which knows no limit so far as humankind is concerned. Division did not come over night and unity will not be achieved in a day. We must regard each other as brethren while we discuss our differences in humility and seek a solution to our problems. We must wage peace as others wage war, praying for unity, then toiling to achieve it. Concludes with an appeal to allow the love of God to be shed abroad to our hearts as the motivating principle of our lives. We must love all men or perish. We must find the way to oneness or we may miss the way to heaven.

Thoughts on Fellowship (12)

Concluding article in a series. Observes that sectarian division has raped the church and pillaged God's sanctuary. Each division leaves no Christian untouched for it makes the task of unity an even greater one. None can be utterly free from a sense of shame while bigotry, intolerance, and factionism exist in the name of religion. We cannot simply wash our hands and be free of the guilt of the mangled body of Jesus so long as we have made no attempt to pour in ointment and bind up the wounds of division. If the “salt of the earth” loses its strength the earth cannot be preserved. We dare not compromise truth or forsake principle, but we must find the solution to the problem of division. We must gather every grain of salt from the sectarian shakers if we are to apply it in force to the accomplishment of His will.

A Sound Mind (4)

[Essay]

The fourth and final article in the series: Directed primarily at youth to encourage the cultivation of a sound mind and to employ it in harmony with the laws of intellect and ethics. Inattention and mental fluctuation may result from attempting to do one thing while the mind is perplexed with doubt that it ought to be doing something else. The answer lies in developing a system and method which provide for the maximum good to be derived from time available. One should employ self-analysis and time study and then decide what use can be made of time which will pay the greatest dividends now and in the future. Having planned our tasks for today we should not worry about tomorrow’s assignments. As the sands of an hour glass must pass through the narrow neck one at a time, the tasks of life can only be fulfilled in the same way.

A New Conservation Corps

[Essay]

Suggests a need for a spiritual version of the Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) where the acronym stands for courage, commitment, and courtesy. Comments on each of these qualities.

Are You Loyal?

[Essay]

The terms “loyal” and “disloyal,” when used to identify churches, generally have reference to the particular doctrinal position that gives a group its identity (such as those related to missionary societies, classes, individual cups, etc.). For those who use these terms, what counts is what one opposes— not what he stands for. He may be loyal and be for many things that are wrong; but he must be against the right thing that is wrong. No one is recognized as loyal by all, and all are recognized as disloyal by someone. As God looks at us there are probably no loyal churches.

The Ebbing Tide

[Essay]

Every symptom preceding the downfall of great previous civilizations is apparent in the western world which has long believed it was invulnerable because of technical skills and scientific acumen. We stand on the brink of disaster. In the U.S. we have a national debt of staggering proportions. We help others not out of charity or altruism but out of political necessity. We cannot trust in armed might for survival. Our only hope lies not in atomic power but in the moral power of God operating through human hearts of faith. Why is it that a civilization based on the Christian concept is tottering on the brink of the abyss? This article and those to follow in the series seek to arouse thought and spur action leading to survival. Our greatest enemy is smug indifference born of complacency. Our greatest threat is not atomic power in the control of others, but lack of moral power as the controlling factor in our lives.

Address to Sincere Believers

[Essay]

A list of conclusions derived from a study of Ephesians, chapter two, relative to the unity of all baptized believers— how it was achieved and how it must be secured. Addressed to the “concerned ones,” for only they will study, search, pray, and labor to promote peace. Concludes with an appeal for prayer on behalf of the author.

Facing the Future

[Essay]

A statement of purpose and an appeal for financial assistance and prayer for Mission Messenger. The author affirms that he has never taken one cent of subscription money for personal use. Informs that the publication of announcements of those who send financial support will be discontinued and that such information will be kept in confidence. Asks for regular investment in “this campaign for spiritual peace and restoration.”

Our Drawing Power

[Essay]

The early church was made up mostly of slaves who owned no property. The greatest enemy we face is pride. When the church uses members with fame and accomplishments as drawing cards it stifles the Spirit. God’s children should not use the world’s methods to achieve recognition. Our task is not to draw men. It is to lift Jesus up. Humility and simplicity were the strengths of the primitive saints. We need to re-capture the ideal of the simple life, characterized by self-denial and service.

Fractured Fellowship

[Essay]

An objection to the creation of special groups within the church, such as a “Youth Fellowship” on the grounds that it is something for which there is no scriptural authority. It destroys the real sense of our fellowship in Christ. The idea of restoring the ancient order is not the aim of most of the disciple brotherhood. They do not care to restore apostolic simplicity—they have too much money tied up in other things. Anything God wants done I can do in the fellowship of the whole church; whatever I cannot do in that fellowship He does not want done.

The Running Sands

[Essay]

Compares present conditions with the conditions of every nation of the past which has been overthrown at the height of its power, analyzing symptoms of corruption which undermined these nations and finds not one symptom lacking in U.S. culture. Notes that crime in our large cities is now syndicated. We live in a time when men are characterized by greed—the most dangerous philosophy that can infect a nation—placing emphasis on things in direct opposition to the doctrine of Jesus. Increased leisure time has not been used to strengthen our moral and spiritual resources. Lists eight principles to be elaborated upon in future issues of the journal relative to how the future of our civilization may be preserved.

Churches of God

[Essay]

Asserts that the followers of the church of God are catholic, baptist, methodist, presbyterian, episcopal, congregationalists, friends, disciples, brethren, Christians, united brethren, and an assembly of God. Acknowledges that these terms describe him but he is not a member of any religious party that uses one of these names to separate itself from others. (Notes that the very name “United Brethren” is employed to signify a division.) Asserts that it is wrong to take any scriptural term and elevate it as a party title to the exclusion of other terms given by the Holy Spirit of God.

Our Position

[Essay]

In response to criticism for publishing articles by those who disagree with him, the author states that his attitude toward his dissenters is one of love and that position will not change. There is no congregation on earth where all the members see everything alike, yet they work together. Mission Messenger is not a partisan journal.

Sunset in the West

[Essay]

Quotes from an article by Edith Hamilton in the Post in which she refers to the way in which the ancient civilization of Greece was lost due to a slackness and softness of the people.

Notes that every factor involved in their downfall is present in our civilization. Our luxurious way of life may have ruined our hearts for a restoration of the qualities needed to save us. Takes note of the crime, vice, poverty, and environmental pollution characteristic of our cities. Observes that the destruction of the small farm contributed to the downfall of Rome as it may also contribute to ours. Dole systems, resulting from mass migration to the cities, bring attendant immoralities which sap moral and spiritual stamina. The “concerned ones” must readjust their approach if Christianity is to become effective in our culture. Lists five suggestions as to what that approach might be: (1) face the situation unafraid, (2) recapture the spirit of cooperation and helpfulness, (3) adopt a sharing policy, (4) meet for an evening of scripture reading, and (5) recapture the idea of “leaven consciousness.”

Grace and Faith

[Essay]

There are two sides to salvation— God’s (expressed by the word grace) and man’s (expressed by the word faith). There are numerous expressions of grace— mercy, the blood, life and name of Christ, and the gospel. These are ordained channels through which grace was channeled. Faith is also expressed through works. Such works as required of man to appropriate to himself the blessings of grace are not opposed to faith. So any condition imposed by faith, or as a test of faith, is not salvation by works versus faith, but salvation by faith at work. We are saved not by faith and works but by faith which works. The gospel authorizes baptism as a condition of salvation by which faith expresses itself. Shows how James 2:14-26 and Romans 4:2 are not in contradiction. We are not saved because we work for God; we work for God because we are saved.

Straws in the Wind

[Essay]

Commends several reports of meetings of differing groups within the disciple brotherhood in which efforts toward unity were made. Recalls the time when he would have sneered at such meetings. Then comments on another article which recognizes no one as being in Jesus who is not in the party.

The Sword of Damocles

[Essay]

Another in a series of essays on the decline of western civilization and proposed correctives. After recounting the story of the Sword of Damocles, suggests that our status is also a precarious one. The only thing that can save our culture is moral force. Expounds upon the applications of Amos 6 for the ills of our society and suggests four steps to offset impending disaster: (1) we should develop a personal code of honesty, (2) young people should practice chastity, (3) we should make marriages work, and (4) women should make a resolution to dress modestly.

Acceptable Unto God

[Essay]

God has chosen in all ages to make His blessings available to man through positive ordinances. To speak slightly of any of these would be to sit in judgment upon the divine wisdom. Asserts that we are not judged by God on the amount of our knowledge and understanding but upon our affection for Him and our attitude toward His will. It is our love that counts. Perfect knowledge without love would avail nothing! Love precedes the keeping of the word. Voluntary ignorance is a sin; involuntary ignorance is not. While the word teaches that we must repent and be baptized unto the remission of sins, when a man believes, repents, and is immersed on the basis of that faith, his baptism is for the remission of sins, whether he knows it or not. The highest motive for baptism is not a purely selfish interest in doing something in return for something else, but to be baptized to fulfill all righteousness—the motive of Jesus. We are commanded to be immersed unto remission of our sins, but we are not told that the validity of the act depends upon our understanding that what we do will enable God to do certain things on our behalf. His mercy is not made available to us on the basis of our knowledge, nor is His power limited because of our ignorance.

To Think About

[Essay]

Parties in religion stem from the vanity and ambition of men. Gifted men aspire to prominence and become puffed up. They become the authoritative interpreter for their fellows. Someone arises to challenge the interpretation of the recognized leader and is branded a traitor and driven forth. Those who follow him build a new faction around him. Each new party is “the true church” and each old party thrusts them forth to keep “the true church” pure. Asks what form of insanity possesses us that we suffer from visions of grandeur, and delude ourselves into thinking that the kingdom of heaven is limited by the party boundaries we have drawn?

Red Sky at Morning

[Essay]

Compares the “religion” of communism with Christianity. The outcome of the struggle between these two forces will affect all the earth’s inhabitants. The struggle is a spiritual one that requires moral power. We must reverse the process by which the standards of behavior which once checked immorality have been discarded. Much of modern Christianity is powerless to overcome the foe for it is not really Christian at all. It is divided, but there are signs that the tide is turning. It is the only force capable of defeating communism.

Causing Divisions

[Essay]

God’s revelation is not a factional handbook and no individual or group is its authorized interpreter. It is authoritative, but interpretations placed upon it are not. The party spirit substitutes interpretation for revelation, demands acquiescence, and disfellowships all who refuse. A right exegesis of Romans 16:17 will show that “the doctrine you have learned” does not have reference to every party shibboleth. Rather it was “contrary to the doctrine” to cause division over differing opinions. Fellowship is not endorsement nor is it arrived at by doctrinal agreement.

The Use of Liberty

[Essay]

While we are free in Jesus we must not confuse liberty with license. Liberty is the right to serve others. Love is the regulator of liberty. It expends itself in service toward its object. No one who serves only those who agree with him is free. I must use my liberty to love, or lose it.

Pattern for Disaster

[Essay]

An analysis of the missiological, philosophical, and political impact of the West upon China, stemming from the sectarianism with which Christianity was introduced by Roman Catholic missionaries. Suggests that the failures of Christianity in China prepared the soil for the domination of Communism. Gives four suggestions as to how the U. S. should strengthen its defenses against communism in the U.S.

Making Allowances

[Essay]

The secret for living together in peace and harmony is in accepting life with humility and patience and making allowances for each other because we love each other (Eph. 4:20). Pride and impatience often produce frictions in the church. We need to learn that we cannot have our way about everything. Love is the golden key of fellowship in that it makes allowances for the shortcomings of others which are often due to a variety of circumstances of birth and ability. One is not necessarily dishonest because he disagrees with me. If I love him I will make allowances for him.

The Claims of Rome

[Essay]

Another in a series on the decline of Western civilization. Provides an analysis of and response to the claims of Roman Catholicism to be the authentic Church of Christ and the only viable alternative to atheistic communism. Contests the four marks upon which the Catholic Church rests its claim to authenticity— unity, catholicity, holiness, and apostolicity. Then examines the nature of the Catholic Church as the revival of Caesarism. Rejects that Catholicism is the only viable alternative to communism on the basis that communism may have based its strength and methods on the Catholic Church itself and is unsurpassed by the same in its blood purges of the past. Both systems are totalitarian and have utilized the same means for tyrannizing human thought. Clarifies that this essay is not in opposition to Catholics but to Romanism as a system.

Facing the Facts

[Essay]

A review and critique of the status and contributions toward Christian unity of restoration movement churches at a time when an ecumenical movement is on the march. Restoration movement churches are indifferent and filled with envy, jealousy, wrath, strife, and the party spirit. The Church of Christ continues in its exclusivistic attitude. Among several suggestions for restoring the spirit of restoration are: there must be repentance, transformation of thought, and reformation of life and heart, recognizing our factious nature, admitting we have been wrong on some things, recognizing all of God's children as our brothers, and discarding the idea that we have arrived at restoration.

The Protestant Picture

[Essay]

A continuation of a series on the decline of Western civilization. Asserts that the philosophy of dialectical materialism must be met and vanquished by a philosophy of spiritual strength and power. Considers our hope of survival to lie in adoption and implementation of the way of life exemplified, expounded, and embodied by Jesus of Nazareth. This essay raises the question as to whether Protestantism is now exemplifying the Christian way in such a manner as to exert a universal influence of sufficient power to offset the threat to our world. After an attempt to define Protestantism, surveys significant trends in modern Protestantism, listing five biblical concepts that have been recaptured by Protestantism. Concludes by rejecting the idea that Protestantism is the answer to the problem confronting us. Observes that the church of God was antecedent to Protestantism as it was to Roman Catholicism. While efforts by Protestantism that lead in the direction of restoration of the church of God are to be applauded, Protestantism of itself is no more the church of God than is the Restoration Movement.

What Divides Us?

[Essay]

The possibility of achieving unity among the various segments of the divided restoration movement fellowship will continue to be precluded as long as each one has the idea that it alone is “the faithful church.” The truth is that neither of the splinter parties is “the faithful church,” but pride and immaturity prevent our admitting such. The immature create fantasy worlds into which they retire, surrounded by walls of presumed perfection. Yet not every congregation in these days is partisan. Some have renounced the party spirit but others lack the courage to do so because they fear the hostility of those who once regarded them with reverence. The party spirit is a sin.

One could be right about all of the points of interpretation that have divided us and still be a sinner by manifesting the party spirit.

A Dangerous Reply

[Essay]

A response to a position expressed in this journal by Roy Loney to the effect that the church should make the use of smoking tobacco a test of fellowship. While the author decries the evils of smoking he rejects the idea that the church has the right to create conditions of fellowship which God has not imposed. Affirms congregational autonomy but asserts that we have no right to make anything a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation.

Turning on the Light

[Essay]

Continuation of a series of essays examining the declining moral status of Western civilization and the search for the means by which the Christian way of life can be made universal in application. Looks at factors involved in the rise and division of the restoration unity movement initiated by the Campbells. Quotes Alexander Campbell to show that the movement received its impetus from the recognition that a united Christendom is a prerequisite to the conversion of the world to Christ. Cites Daniel Sommer's "Address and Declaration" (1889) as proof that the movement divided not over instrumental music but over other "innovations," although the break was not manifest until the 1906 statement by David Lipscomb to the Director of the U.S. Religious Census. Describes salient characteristics of the major divisions within the “disciple brotherhood” then examines in detail the more liberal wing of the movement— the Disciples of Christ— their use of higher criticism and their practice of open membership as evidenced by the membership policy drawn up for the Christian Church at Florissant, Missouri. The author reproduces a list of ten objections to the statement of policy which, at the time, were publicly read and later published. Adds a disclaimer that the current essay is not to be regarded as a personal attack against any member of the Disciples of Christ, for whom he expresses love and respect.

Light and Fellowship

[Essay]

Response to a proposed discrepancy in the author’s contention that while instrumental music in worship is wrong, he considers those who use it to be his brothers. The question is raised as to how this can be consistent with 1 John 1:7. Asserts that his querist misunderstands the meaning of both “fellowship” and “light.” Fellowship is a state or condition to which we are called, which we enter by immersion. We do not enter into fellowship by agreement with each other. Shows how “light” is used by John as a symbol to mean “love” not knowledge of Scripture. To “walk in the light” is to walk in the love which God is. Agreement does not create fellowship and differences do not prevent it.

Living in Fear

[Essay]

Many who were reared in the confines of narrow partisanship are afraid of the privileges of being free in Christ.

Leaders of partisans fear the loss of followers and the loss of financial support. Others fear the church may lose its identity if proven wrong on some point of doctrine. The party spirit is tenacious but today there is a great tidal wave of love driving out fear. Love fills us with confidence which does not rest on our ability to devise the means for accomplishing God's purpose on earth.

The Conservative Party

[Essay]

Continuation of previous article in which restoration movement churches are examined as a possible instrument through which Christianity can be made universal in application. This article looks at the Conservative Christian Churches and their reasons for separating from the Disciples of Christ, categorized for discussion as evangelism, restoration, and freedom. Concludes that in all these areas conservative Christian Churches show themselves to be one more faction among many.

Schisms and Parties

[Essay]

Following a summary of this series of essays to-date, proceeds to examine the group known as the "Church of Christ" and its claims to be identical in origin, name, doctrine, and practice, with the church of the New Testament scriptures. Identifies the major factions within the group, at least eighteen in all, along with a brief description of the journals with which they are associated. Concludes that this group is one of the most divided movements of a religious nature in this generation, and that it can never unite the world in Christ. All of its parties have lost the meaning of restoration since in their view, nothing remains to be restored. The “Church of Christ” desperately needs to be saved from itself as it persists in a course of partisan spirit.

Thoughts on Fellowship (13)

[Essay]

Provides a lengthy quote from Alexander Campbell’s 1833 article for the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge on the history and aims of the Disciples of Christ in which he documents the point in time at which the Baptist association began to declare non-fellowship with the brethren of the reformation, marking the beginning of separate churches devoted to restoration of the primitive order. The author then examines a series of questions based on the fact that no group known as the “Church of Christ” was in existence at the time Campbell began his restoration movement: Where was the New Testament church? What name did it use? Who composed it? Did God have any children from the close of the first century to the start of the nineteenth? Was Alexander Campbell a child of God while in the Redstone and Mahoning Baptist Associations? If Campbell were alive today would he be regarded as a Christian by any group of “The Church of Christ” which exists as a result of his pioneer efforts? Concludes that we have confounded the Restoration Movement with the church of the New Testament, and we think of it as identical with the church of Christ.

The Revolution

[Essay]

As great changes are taking place in the religious world, many in the movement which originated to spark such changes are oblivious to what is going on. Having isolated themselves inside partisan walls they feel as secure as Rip Van Winkle asleep in the forest. However, the days of partisan alignment are giving way to the power of love.

Church of Christ Party

[Essay]

Continuation of a series of essays seeking a corrective to the moral decline of Western culture. Resumes his examination of whether “The Church of Christ” is a viable option for uniting the world in Christ. Gives specific reasons for his belief that it is a modern sect which has grown out of a non-sectarian attempt to unite believers in Christ through a restoration of the primitive order. Cites the gross inconsistencies of this group in its condemnation of other denominations for things of which it is guilty. Those inconsistencies involve the areas of division, the clergy, the pastor system, conventions, and others. Gives personal reasons for not abandoning this group in which he was raised.

Searching for the Answer

[Essay]

Continuation of a series on the failure of the Christian philosophy to stem the rising tide of paganism. This essay lays a foundation for a proposed remedy. Attributes the problem to the fact that the world has not been won to the sovereignty of God’s son because the enemy of righteousness has separated believers into warring camps. The attitude of the seriously concerned must be one of complete dedication of life to the eradication of schism. Parties should not be allowed to be at peace. Our hope rests with the church, a divine organism composed of those who are related to God and thereby to each other, in spite of their differences. No existing party can claim exclusive right as the church of God. Believers are scattered over the hills of sectarianism. Supports his thesis from quotes from Thomas Campbell, Alexander Campbell, Moses Lard, Benjamin Franklin, David Lipscomb, and Daniel Sommer, all of whom believed that there are Christians in the denominations. Gives a practical description of how we might proceed in order to demonstrate an unsectarian spirit. Concludes with eight suggestions for transforming the world through love.

Harvest of Peace

[Essay]

Peace is an effect that requires an cause. Prayer, purpose, and persistence are the path to waging peace. It is achieved through the strength of the Prince of Peace.

Facing the New Year

[Essay]

An appeal for help in sharing the publication with others. The monthly financial shortfall continues to be met by contributors from month to month. Gives a description of the nature and purpose of Mission Messenger. Provides a preview of coming issues.

Clergy and Laity

[Essay]

Notes that the real strength of the primitive church was in the total commitment of all members. But the creation of the clergy reduced the status of the bulk of God's people to that of spectators whose chief contribution became one of money. The clergy stands as a monument to decaying spirituality. That which was started to strengthen the church of God has weakened it. We need to elevate all laity to the status of clergy and restore the ideal of the self-edifying, self-perpetuating church. God's plan is person to person, not parson to persons.

Developing Our Aim

[Essay]

Last in a series of articles. Continuation of the author's proposal as to how we may free ourselves from the labyrinth created by generations of partisan traditionalism. Suggests means by which change can come about. Calls for congregations to explore avenues of Christian unity. Lists five things that should characterize such efforts, but insists that no two situations are identical. Some congregations having the suggested outlook regard every sincere immersed believer as a child of God and welcome all such to their table of communion. Responds to twenty-one questions, mostly dealing with his position on instrumental music and Christians in the sects, gleaned from personal correspondence.

Pride and Shame

[Essay]

Describes the current state of "The Church of Christ" as one in which values have been altered. Faith in God is supplanted by trust in organizations and the simple story of the cross is now embellished with all the trappings of the stage and theater. It has crystallized into a competitive sect, vying for popular favor, membership, and money. It now focuses on its pastor rather than on the spirituality of its members, and faithfulness is no longer equated with holiness but with doctrine. It should face the fact that it is not a reproduction of the primitive church of God. As long as it continues to brag about its symbols of spiritual deficiency and decadence (human organizations and professional clergymen) it will grow farther from God's ideal, for their pride is in what they ought to be ashamed of.

Size and Importance

[Essay]

The cosmic insignificance of earth is used by the learned skeptic to ridicule the probability of the Incarnation. Those who confuse liberty with license cannot stifle conscience until they suppress the cross. The argument of our relative unimportance based upon the size of our planet in comparison with the stars and moons is fallacious in that it makes material magnitude the sole criterion of worth. It is absurd to employ the scientific method in every other field of endeavor only to abandon it in an attempt to rid oneself of the idea of personal responsibility to God. Men saw the supernatural acts of Jesus and validated their testimony through a willingness to suffer death by torture rather than deny what they saw. To deny the Incarnation based on the size of our planet is simply to ignore the facts that prove it did occur.

A Spiritual Adventure

[Essay]

Introduces a new series of essays based on the presuppositions that: (1) the Old Testament books do not constitute the old covenant; (2) the New Testament books do not constitute the new covenant; (3) the New Testament books addressed to Christians are not a part of the gospel; (4) a proper response to the gospel is faith in Jesus and immersion to fulfill all righteousness; (5) the church of God is composed of all who have been born again. Ignorance of these truths has caused the restoration movement to flounder. Acceptance of the same will alter the entire structure of “fellowship.” One’s acceptability with God is not determined by knowledge of or obedience to a certain portion of the New Testament scriptures but one’s attitude toward the scriptures. Due to its nature, conformity cannot be a basis for unity. The new covenant is entered by birth, not by agreeing with others upon the meaning of a code of laws. We become children by procreation, not education. We have sought to make fellowship contingent upon that which was never intended to be its spiritual foundation.

The Road to Gaza

[Essay]

Contents that the meaning of the phrase “which is desert” used by the angel to instruct Philip to go south from Jerusalem to Gaza, has reference to the city of Gaza. Quotes from non-biblical historians to show how the prophecy of Jeremiah 47:5—that baldness would come upon Gaza— was fulfilled. Also responds to those who question the availability of sufficient water in that region for the eunuch’s baptism.

One Man’s Faith

[Essay]

Relates the history of a group of more than thirty saints in Valdosta, Georgia, founded by Christian Dasher in the nineteenth century. Tells how Dasher and S. C. Dunning (of Savannah, Georgia) found it necessary to immerse one another each time they discovered a new design for baptism. The author observes that they had not learned that an inductive act, transferring a proper subject from one state into another, introduces such a person into all of the blessings, rights and privileges of that state, whether he had knowledge of them at the time, or not.

The Covenant with Noah

[Essay]

God reveals himself in scripture as a covenant personality who bestows blessings in conjunction with ordinances. Examines God's covenant with Noah, noting that it was to last while the earth remains. The sign of the covenant was a reminder of God's faithfulness. The terms of the covenant were determined by God alone. Since God's revelation is ascendant in nature we do well to start a study of God's covenants by examining his covenantal relationships of the past. The purpose of the study of God's covenants is to eliminate the false concept that our covenant with God embraces the entirety of revelation and that fellowship with one another depends on a prior correct knowledge of all revelation.

A Law of Life

[Essay]

After observing that all living things are created with a purpose, applies the physical axiom that “that which does not function dies” to the spiritual realm. Notes that when disciples lose their saltiness by conforming to the world they fail to achieve that for which they were created. Notes specifically how disciples of Jesus are unable to resist the power of dialectical materialism and secularism due to the loss of inspiration and power. Indicates that the cause of this condition lies in the fact that disciples have hired others to perform the very functions for which they were equipped by God.

The New Humanity

[Essay]

Identifies the “new humanity,” then expounds upon the characteristics of its God’s chosen representatives. Notes that the essence of the new humanity is not to please self but to do the Father’s will. Observes that the confidence of many is misplaced in what they do not have rather than in having the Spirit of God. States that representatives of the new humanity are to be characterized by (1) humility of mind, (2) kindness of heart, and (3) mercy in action.

The Covenant with Abraham

[Essay]

Continues a study of covenantal revelation after the flood. Reviews and expounds upon the history of man’s wickedness leading up to Babel. Examines God’s call of Abraham and the subsequent covenants made with him— one fleshly and temporal, the other spiritual and lasting (notes that a confusion of these is the basis for a false philosophy underlying the major sects of Protestant Christendom). Looks at the details surrounding “the covenant after the flesh,” then examines the divine purpose in that covenant. Observes that God’s purpose with regard to the seed of Abraham was to keep alive the notion of one God.

God’s Two Books

[Essay]

As man is both physical and spiritual, God has written two books— one of nature, to nurture creation, and the other of revelation, to instruct the new creation. Just as nature relinquishes her secrets gradually, so the book of revelation relinquishes its truths on an ascending scale. While the experience of yesterday becomes the foundation of today, those who challenge the perfection of the past will inevitably incur the wrath of its proponents. Although no truth is new to God, it may be newly discovered by man whether in the realm of nature or revelation. To pitch our tents around the shrines of those who discovered truths before us is to be unworthy of their heritage. No sect, denomination, faction, party, or segment, has any copyright on spiritual truth. There are mountain peaks of revelation still unchallenged by human thought.

False Tests

[Essay]

Observes that the carnal spirit, as seen in the church at Corinth, leads to the continuous judgment of others upon the test of party allegiance. The Corinthians went so far as to conclude that the apostle Paul was not “faithful” or “loyal,” accusing him of instability and compromise. The party spirit is concerned more about a man's position than it is about his heart. It will not recognize anyone as being in Christ Jesus who does not condone its narrowness.

Flesh and Faith

[Essay]

Continued from a previous essay. Analyzes the dual nature of God's covenant with Abraham, noting that it was both national and universal, fleshly and spiritual, conveying a blessing both to his seed and through his seed. The ordinance of circumcision was given as a sign of the fleshly covenant. It was not the covenant but was essential to bring one into the privileges of the covenant. In order to become an heir of the spiritual covenant with Abraham one must come into covenant relationship with Christ by faith. Flesh and faith distinguish the two covenants made with Abraham. Asserts that baptism is not circumcision but the knife God has chosen to perform the operation upon the heart.

Our Special Mission

[Essay]

An appeal for the unity of all believers based on the premise that the only justifiable basis for which believers may separate themselves from other believers is for the purpose of doing a necessary work not currently being done by any other group. Asserts that no denominational distinctive is part of the truth that puts us into a relationship with God. Destroying those distinctives does no harm to Christianity. Holding only to the truth that saves would eliminate all partisan differentiations. The movement of which the author is a part is unique in that it was born not as a coalition of sects but as an effort to unite Christians of all sects, thus decreeing the ultimate death of sectarianism by purifying the hearts of all God's children from the effects of the party spirit and inaugurating a reign of agape, love in their hearts. This was not being done by any existing party. However, its separate existence in that state must be temporary. It must eventually blend into the unity it promotes and lose its own identity in the homogeneity of the one body.

A Muddled Movement

[Essay]

Using the disciple brotherhood in Odessa, Texas, as a case in point, describes the state of division into which the heirs of the restoration movement have fallen. Using the terms “liberal” and “conservative” with some hesitation, proceeds to define these terms within the context of Christian Churches and Churches of Christ. Raises the question, “How can they unite the world in Christ, while carving his body into bits?”

Teacher and Disciple

[Essay]

Acknowledging a liability to err and a desire to learn, appeals to readers to share their analyses and criticisms of the views expressed by the author. Notes that it is dangerous for any fallible man to set up his reasoning as a criterion by which to judge the worthiness of any of his fellows.

The First Testament

[Essay]

After describing the way in which God showed himself to be superior to the gods of Egypt in taking a nation for himself, gives any overview of the inauguration ceremony for the covenant— the constitution of the new nation. Then examines the nature of the covenant, why it was given, what it embraced, and its bounds and limitations. Maintains that the content of the covenant itself was limited to the ten commandments only and that scriptures traditionally referred to as the “Old Testament” contain the history, literature, song books, and prophesies of the covenant people. Examines the components of “the old covenant”— its preamble plus four commandments pertaining to responsibility to God, and six that deal with responsibility to others. Concludes with five summary statements in support of his thesis that “the first testament” did not include all of the scriptures now called “old testament.”

The Bed of Procrustes

[Essay]

Just as the legendary Procrustes forced all to conform to the length of his own bed, religious partisans require all to conform to their tests of partisan fellowship and every faction has its own bed. We can no more all think alike than we can all look alike. Since fellowship cannot be conditioned on everyone seeing everything alike, partisans have selected points of doctrine to which they arbitrarily demand conformity as a condition to fellowship. If God has fellowship with us in our imperfect knowledge and behavior, who are we to set up a different standard for our fellows. God has established divine fellowship on the basis of faith— not on the basis of the amount of acquired knowledge of his revelation. He whose faith in one fact is validated by his obedience to one act is a child of God and is in the fellowship of all of God’s children.

A Good Question

[Essay]

Response to a brother's concern about the statement in a previous article that "if the church accomplishes its purpose it must eventually lose its identity." Asserts that the brother confuses a faction ("The Church of Christ") with the church set forth in the new covenant scriptures. Describes "The Church of Christ" as the offspring of a restoration movement which has crystallized into an organized party, contrary to the intention of the original design of restoration. Gives a practical example of how the Methodist Church and the Baptist Church might decide to lose their identity and come together as a single congregation with a written resolution of intent. Then asks what "The Church of Christ" in that community should do. Concludes that since our purpose is to restore the primitive order of things we should lose our identity as a distinct group and blend into the growing unity we claim to promote. However, the church of God will never lose its identity. Expresses the need for a restoration of the Restoration.

Indiana Trip

[Essay]

Relates two discussions with passengers on a recent trip by train to Sullivan, Indiana, where the author spoke to representatives of various segments of the disciple brotherhood on the topics of mutual ministry, individual responsibility, fellowship, and the unity of all believers. One passenger was a missionary to India with whom he discussed the exporting of western culture to the East by western missionaries. The other was an AMEZ bishop with whom he discussed matters concerning Christian unity.

Analysis of Legalism

[Essay]

A continuation of a study of God's covenants with mankind in which the contents of the covenant given to Israel through Moses is reviewed. Takes note of its legal nature, contrasting it with the Christian economy. Notes that while the covenant given through Moses was law, not all law given through Moses was part of the covenant. While the law of Moses was holy its essence requires unvarying conformity while inciting disobedience due to the nature of man as he is. Christians do not serve under any written code. The phrase "new life in the Spirit" did not include the book of Romans since those to whom it was addressed had already been serving in the new life of the Spirit before it was written. The Scriptures are to be searched in order to draw closer to the ideals of Jesus. Misunderstanding relative to the role of the new covenant scriptures in our relationship to God is the basis of much division. No law can bring men together. It is through the power of the indwelling Spirit that we are fitted for the eternal abode. The legalistic spirit first places an interpretation on some portion of revelation, then exalts the interpretation to the status of revelation. Gives examples of resulting division over the elements and distribution of the Lord's Supper and concludes with personal views regarding such division.

Cause of Concern

[Essay]

Reports on the condition of disciple churches in rural Missouri where the author was invited to speak. Recounts the sad history of how the division came about, then expresses concern for how it weakens testimony to the world. Notes that the problem is now one of indifference. Maintains that while divisions have been inherited, they must not be perpetuated. Contends that no faction or segment is the “loyal church” to the exclusion of others. Suggests eight practical steps as essential and basic for seeking a resolution to situations as described earlier in the essay. States that the real test will be in praying for and laboring to help those who try to poison the minds of others.

Crossing the Frontier

[Essay]

Like refugees from the tyranny of communism, the Christian has also escaped from enslavement and terror. Evidence of one’s having crossed the border from sin into the spiritual asylum of life is that he loves the brothers. But some settle down too close to the border and are again captured and returned to slavery.

Stop, Look, Listen!

[Essay]

Responding to a reader’s lament over the author’s having started this paper, observes how a traditional pattern of thought leads to recognizing exclusively those who agree with us as the kingdom of heaven— the one body. Notes that fellowship is not the result of agreement; it is brotherhood in Jesus, and states that the walls we build cannot keep truth out— they merely keep us shut up and shut in. Concludes that the accomplishment of God’s purpose does not depend on the success of this journal. The walls we have constructed need to fall down. Calls for a crusade for unity.

The New Covenant

[Essay]

Introduces an examination of the “new covenant” with a list of seven of its characteristics. Notes that since it consists of God’s writing his law upon the hearts of those who know him, and since this involves the forgiveness of iniquity, all who obtain remission of sins are thereby brought into covenant relationship with God. Lists four phases of soul response to God’s call: (1) conviction of sin, (2) consciousness of grace, (3) crucifixion of self, and (4) culmination of compact. The latter involves the testing of faith through an ordinance designed by God for this purpose. Lists nine characteristics of the test, which is identified as immersion in water. Lists the ways in which baptism meets the nine characteristics of the test. Discusses at length the divine design of baptism as a test of faith. To condition the validity of baptism upon the recipient’s recognition that baptism is “unto the remission of sins” is to attach a human rider to divine revelation and to create an unwritten creed. Nowhere do the scriptures teach that the design of baptism is contingent for its fulfillment upon a knowledge of that design by the subject of baptism. Recommends against rebaptism of those who have simply matured in their understanding of its design and who become more conscious of their spiritual failures.

The Title of the Church

[Essay]

The covenant people in the aggregate have no official name or title. The terms used by the Holy Spirit to describe them, are merely common nouns. To select one of these as the exclusive title, discarding all others given by the same authority, and to elevate that one as the recognized designation of a group is to sectarianize that term. To denominate simply means to name. To choose a title such as “The Church of Christ” makes of those doing so a denomination as certainly as such terms as “The Baptist Church” or “The Methodist Church” designate denominations. Any religious group wearing a specific name is a denomination in the true meaning of that term.

The Indwelling Spirit

[Essay]

Summarizes the basis of Christian fellowship and unity then observes that we are commanded to maintain, not create, the unity created by the presence of the Holy Spirit. It is his presence that defines both sonship and fellowship. Embarks on a study of the nature of the Holy Spirit, noting that recapture of the power and purpose of the early disciples begins with reaffirming the personal indwelling of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of believers. Identifies the Spirit not as a vague influence or as the word of God but as a divine person, possessing the characteristics and functions of a person. Reaffirms the triune nature of Godhood (the term preferred over Godhead). Observes that the Spirit is received by believers as a gift bestowed by God upon his children and that he dwells in the mortal bodies of the saints as his temple, as a seal and a guarantee. Concludes that every person on earth who is immersed upon the foundation of faith in Jesus receives forgiveness and the Spirit of God moves into his heart, where Christ dwells by faith. Every such person is a member of the one body, regardless of acquired differences.

No Creed But Christ

[Essay]

The slogan “no creed but Christ” means different things to different people. While both the so-called ultra liberal and the so-called ultra conservative lay claim to the slogan, both operate under false pretenses. The legalist does have another creed, whereas the modernist does not have Christ. While the legalists claim to be building on Christ, he is not the basis of their fellowship. Fellowship for the legalist is based on a position on one or more things. Whatever is required to recognize one as a brother is one’s creed. We have substituted interpretation of scripture for faith in Jesus. Revelation is what God said in scripture. Interpretation is what we think he meant by what he said. Revelation is infallible, but we have no infallible interpretation. “No creed but Christ” entails crucifying every inclination toward the party spirit.

Opinions and Unity

[Essay]

The root of most sectarianism is the failure to understand the basis of unity. Every written creed is the crystallization of the opinions of great thinkers into a formal pattern. An opinion (or interpretation) is the result of finite rationalization based upon experience. Since the experience of each person is unique, no two people have exactly the same degree of knowledge. We can no more think alike than we can look alike. Opinion is, at best, speculation based on probable evidence. Faith, however, is belief in the testimony of witnesses to facts. Since no amount of speculation can alter facts, it is possible to be united on the basis of faith. Knowledge on the other hand is by nature accumulative. Consequently, in the realm of knowledge and opinion any unity must be a unity of diversity. Virtually every attempt at unity in the past has been on the basis of conformity in opinion or equal attainment of knowledge. Such a system is doomed at its inception.

A Sincere Offer

[Essay]

Provides a clear and concise summary of his thinking relative to fellowship and the current status of the restoration movement. Then sets forth a proposal for a three-session forum in which he is invited by any congregation in the U.S. or Canada to speak and submit to questions from a panel of informed men and subsequently from the congregation at large. Pledges to present his views in a lucid manner and agrees to issue a disclaimer in which to clarify that his views do not necessarily represent those of the inviting congregation. Pledges to conduct himself in a gentlemanly, polite, and kind manner and to exercise forbearance in love toward those who express disagreement.

The Helping Spirit

[Essay]

Asserts that the life of the child of God is lived by and through the Holy Spirit, the divine helper who dwells in us until Jesus returns. Shows how the Holy Spirit pours out God's love into our hearts (Rom. 5:5), kills the deeds of the body (Gal. 5:17), testifies to our sonship (Gal. 4:1-7), and strengthens the inner man (Eph. 3:16). Observes that the indwelling Spirit is the secret to the satisfactory life. Through the Spirit we are enabled to conquer the flesh. However, we must recognize that the Spirit is a gift that must be accepted before it can be appropriated to personal use. We must pray for the Spirit and his work and fruit in our lives.

Old John

[Essay]

Calls attention to the fact that just as some have preferred prison life over freedom, many Christians prefer the security they find behind partisan walls to the responsibilities entailed in a life of liberty. Notes that sectism measures everything by the crystallized interpretations of the past, and thus stifles original thinking. Dissenters are hounded as heretics until, with passing generations, they are enshrined as martyrs of righteousness. But truth cannot be imprisoned behind partisan walls nor confined to human creeds. As prison makes a man unfit to compete in a world of freedom, sectism deprives a man of the will to be free. Sectism is motivated by fear of loss and is often characterized by pride and haughtiness. Freedom is a blessing of inestimable magnitude but it carries such responsibility as to frighten many.

The Sacred Quest

[Essay]

Contents that the noblest purpose of man is to pursue truth, but the party spirit is opposed to free investigation. None possess universal knowledge. He who closes his mind generally does so out of fear that what he already knows may prove to be not the truth. Those who love truth and mankind are neither egotistical or cruel. The first step to acquiring truth is to acknowledge truth regardless of where it may be or who may hold it. Spiritual greatness is characterized by an open Bible, an open mind, and an open hand. Often those who know the least object the loudest to learning more. No man is free who is shackled by inner dread.

The Horses of Glaucus

After echoing the warning against in fighting among brethren of Galatians 5:15, notes that he who hates his brother consumes that brother from without and himself within. No one can kindle the fire of passion and not be burnt. The ancient mythological King Glaucus fed his horses human flesh and was later devoured by them. The man who plants the seed of animosity must partake of the fruit of his harvest. Division is not accidental. Neither is peace. We cannot divide ourselves into unity. We cannot unite the world by dividing among ourselves. We need a crusade for peace. Let those who differ settle their differences in an atmosphere of love, respecting each other while they work together. We must find a way to peace or we will all perish.

The Divine Guarantee

Need for assurance that God dwells in us is provided by the indwelling Spirit. Lack of recognition of this fact creates distress and disillusionment. Those who seek to be justified by law can never be certain of their standing with God. A symptom of the legalistic heart is an attempt to explain away the indwelling Spirit. The only way to counteract division among God's people is to recapture the consciousness of the nearness of the Spirit. It is the "unity of the Spirit" that we are told to maintain. A few of the ways in which the Helper assists us to enjoy real living is by (1) encouraging our hope, (2) acting as intercessor, (3) guaranteeing our inheritance, and (4) producing fruit of holiness. The Spirit is the key to our problems.

Unity in Diversity

Introduces a treatise on the nature of unity and the means for attaining it. Observes that believers in Christ could hardly be more divided if they had been commanded to do so. Asserts that the “unity of the Spirit” is not agreement on matters of interpretation but a “unity of diversity”— the only kind of unity available to free men and the only kind desirable since any other would demand a surrender of liberty. Those who argue that there can be no unity where there is diversity nor diversity where there is unity confuse unity with conformity. The fact is that unity in practically any area is a state of oneness achieved by divergent elements. Romans 14 makes it clear that it is not required that we all believe alike about everything. But it is required that we all love each other in spite of our variety of views. Notes that those who reject the idea of unity in diversity bear witness to its truth by virtue of the fact that they do not agree with each other on every matter— just those specific issues they arbitrarily select as grounds for division by elevating them to tests of fellowship. The pursuit of unity must be based on (1) the absolute authority of the word of God and (2) the inalienable right of individual judgment. The unity of the Bible is “the common faith” in Christ signified by immersion into him and joined to each other in love.

Members of One Body

An examination of the nature and composition of the one body of Christ. After calling for a restoration of the original intent of the vocabulary of the Holy Spirit, notes that the word “member” is never used in scripture with regard to the word “church” but only with regard to the body. The phrase “member of the church” does not occur in scripture. The church is an organism, a body, not an organization. Members are set in the body by God as it pleases him. It is a portrayal of unity in diversity, each ministering to the needs of all the others. Unlike the physical body, members of the body of Christ are all attached directly to the head, sustaining a primary relationship to the head and a secondary relationship to each other. Growth of the body is supplied by God, not by the efforts of men to “increase church membership.” To be a member of the body involves total commitment to the head. Members are dedicated to the purposes of the head. They live not for the church but for Christ to whom they are wholly dedicated. Concludes with a plea for recapturing the significance of the individual soul and a recognition as members of the body all whom Christ has received.

Queries to the Editor (No. 1)

[Essay]

Responding to questions gleaned from several sources, notes that his current purpose in Mission Messenger is to plead for the unity of all believers, since this is essential to the universal belief in Jesus. Observes that his current convictions rest on the conclusions that (1) the restoration movement is not identical with the church of God, (2) that fellowship is not endorsement, and (3) that the party spirit is a sin. States that he simply refuses to let things invalidate brotherhood. Asserts that his position does not necessitate compromise. Rather, it creates a proper sense of values and allows one to view brotherhood in a right perspective. Contends that his fraternizing with those with whom he disagrees does not constitute endorsement, any more than Jesus’ association with publicans and sinners. Notes that his opposition to instrumental music does not prevent his being in fellowship with those who use it, since he was put into fellowship with brethren on both sides of the issue by God, not by his position. Observes that the only kinds of people with whom he is in fellowship are those with whom he disagrees—since there are no other kind— and he refuses to make anything a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation.

Abuse of Scripture

[Essay]

A refutation of the misuse of Ephesians 5:11 by those seeking a scriptural basis for having no fellowship with those who differ with them on selected points of doctrine. Contends that the “works of darkness” are identified by Paul as immoral acts done in secret and cannot have reference to instrumental music, for example, which is played in public worship. Concludes that no man has a right to get out of the scriptures what God did not put into them.

Joint Participation

[Essay]

Asserts that the movement which was begun to unite the Christians in all sects is now the most divided in all Christendom largely as the result of a misconception of fellowship (koinonia). Defines fellowship as the togetherness of the saints with God and each other— a sharing experience, a joint participation in the Holy Spirit. However, many use their interpretation of fellowship to destroy fellowship. If fellowship is based upon equality in understanding and perfection in interpretation, we could not be in fellowship with God until we know as much as God. Brotherhood is not conditioned on agreement. Men may disagree on many things yet remain in the fellowship of the Spirit.

Queries to the Editor (No. 2)

[Essay]

In response to a variety of questions, contends that of all the groups calling themselves “Church of Christ” none may be referred to as “the loyal church.” All are factions, existing because of emphasis upon one point or another which has been pressed to the extent of division. If one discovers truth he should remain where he is and share it with others. One can be in a sect and not be sectarian. If obligated to leave one must not conclude that those whom he leaves are not his brethren. To grow out of the factional attitude we need to resolve to regard nothing as a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition for salvation. But in our zeal to leave Babylon we should not run past Jerusalem and down into Egypt. With regard to his present writings, the author observes that many within the party in which he was formerly a leader consider him a traitor. But opposition has not affected the circulation of Mission Messenger. The majority of those receiving the paper are students of restoration. Reviews the manner in which he began introducing the changes in his thinking which began in 1951.

Unity and Identity

[Essay]

Those who voice a fear that the church will lose its identity if we recognize as brethren those who are members of other churches reveal that they are really members of a sect. Since they look upon their faction as the church, if all of God’s children were to become one, and thus put an end to their party, that would be equivalent to the church losing its identity. If others are in a church at all they are members of the one body; if they are not members of the one body they aren't in the church. There are no "other churches." There is only one church, the one body which cannot lose its identity while the head still lives.

The Plea for Unity

[Essay]

A summary and re-statement of the author's desire and aim with regard to the unity of believers. First gives an overview of the rationale for his own efforts to address the problem while noting changes that are needed in the way we perceive the problem. Suggests we need a restored vision of a united people that does not compromise conviction on any point yet regards as brethren those with whom we differ. The author seeks to create an atmosphere for discussion, since we cannot argue ourselves into unity nor debate ourselves into peace. We must start with those things we hold in common. We must recognize that fellowship is a state or condition. The word never occurs as a verb. The term "withdraw fellowship" does not occur in the scriptures. Fellowship is the result of a common Fatherhood. Disagreements do not remove us from the family. We must learn to distinguish fellowship from endorsement. In God's circles of "light" and "darkness" he who loves his brother abides in light while he who does not abide in darkness. Gives practical advice on how we may practice non-partisan Christianity, making nothing a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition for salvation.

Preaching Christ

[Essay]

Maintains that those who choose to ignore the complexities of division and “just preach Christ” are like a man selling insurance to a neighbor while his own house is on fire. While most in our land have heard of Christ, believers are divided, in opposition to the essence of Christianity. The question is, Dare we pray for men to believe in Jesus while we forget his own prayer for those who do believe in him?

The Human Factor

[Essay]

God has laid upon each of his children the solemn responsibility to do something about the problem of division in the ranks of the believers. This involves more than praying about it or simply reading the journal of one who is working to resolve it. It requires the expenditure of time, effort, and energy. He who would be called a child of God must be a peacemaker. We have developed a philosophy which is counter to God’s purpose. It is a common assumption that divisions are caused by deviations from a divine pattern, but the pattern is one of cohesion, not division. No man can prove his loyalty to Jesus by separating from his brethren because Jesus positively forbids it through the teaching of the apostles.

The Perfect Church

[Essay]

Many have the distorted view that the primitive church was perfect in every way— that a perfect pattern was immediately given and all immediately concurred in it without deviation. The fact is that the early Christians were Jews still worshipping in the synagogue and zealous for the law. Even

Peter failed to understand the implications of his own sermon on Pentecost with regard to the Gentiles. While the early believers were “of one heart and soul” they were not without problems, controversies, or differences of opinion. The perfect church is an ideal to which each generation must strive in the light of revelation.

Only One Church

[Essay]

After exploring the origin of the word “church,” notes that it designates all of the called of God, without a single exception. Terms such as “other churches” or “the church of your choice” are absurd in that there is only one body of people called out by God. One cannot choose, for example, whether or not to be affiliated with a church which receives colored people since God adds all to the same body, regardless of color. One can no more choose his spiritual brothers than he could select his physical brothers. The Baptist Church, The Methodist Church, etc., are not churches but sects or parties within the realm of Christendom. No doubt there are children of God scattered among them, but they were not added to a sect by God. (The author notes that “He who suggests that I am favorable to ‘fellowship with the sects’ is wholly ignorant of my position.”) Since there is only one church there can be no such thing as a “faithful church” as this implies there is an unfaithful church. There may be diseased members but there is only one body, one church, and there can never be another.

Christians in Babylon

[Essay]

Answers the question “Are there any Christians in the religious sects about us?” by affirming that there are no Christians outside the body of Christ. However, those who denominate themselves as “The Church of Christ” have been conditioned to believe that the particular segment of the restoration movement with which they are affiliated is identical with the church of God and that all other believers in Christ are deceived and are not believers at all, but are to be treated as heathens and pagans. The idea that there are Christians in the sects is not a new doctrine but one taught by Campbell, Stone, Lard, Franklin, Allen, Lipscomb, and Sommer (as seen in quotations from each). No one demonstrates loyalty to the Father by refusing to recognize his other children.

The Higher Path

[Essay]

The “higher path” of 1 Corinthians 13 is the path of love—that fierce and unquenchable passion of desire for the good of all. It is the only hope of unity. We must love ourselves into togetherness. We must confess our error in thinking we could divide ourselves into unity or secure peace by compulsion. We must search the sacred oracles to find the “still higher path” and on the wings of affection surmount the walls and barriers of partisan prejudice.

Analysis of Heresy

[Essay]

The meaning of words is altered over time. In order to understand the revelation of God we must know the significance attached to the words used by the Holy Spirit. The unity of all believers may actually hinge on our arriving at a correct understanding of the word “heresy.” Within the various “Churches of Christ” heresy is any view which differs with the position of the party. As the Holy Spirit uses the term, heresy has no relation to doctrine. The word “heresy” fundamentally means a “choice.” It is best translated “sect” or “party.” Heresy is the “party spirit” (Gal. 5:20). Thus one can be correct in doctrine yet be a heretic or a factious man. Any person who makes a test of fellowship out of anything God has not made a condition of salvation is a heretic. It was the pope who convinced the world that heresy consisted of “an opinion maintained with obstinacy against the doctrine of the church.” It was not until the fifth century that this meaning came to be accepted. No man who sincerely believes that God teaches a thing is a heretic.

Are They Apostates?

[Essay]

One of the “loaded terms” used to prejudice partisan followers against dissenters and non-conformists is the word “apostasy.” It is used twice in scripture and carries the idea of defection from the existing order based upon revolt against it. Today the charge of apostasy is hurled against every person who cannot subscribe to the partisan tests of fellowship. No person who is in Jesus, who loves the Lord and seeks to do his will out of a pure fervent heart, is an apostate. Apostasy is a deliberate revolt against Jesus and his authority, a falling away from faith. The word “faith,” however, should not be taken to mean the unwritten body of “infallible interpretations” bound upon members of a party and constituting the test of loyalty.

Are We a Denomination?

[Essay]

While “The Church of Christ” asserts that it is non-sectarian and undenominational, its claims cannot be sustained. The primitive church had no title or proper name, although numerous names are used to designate its various relationships. To fasten upon one of these and make it the specific name of the church and declare it “the scriptural name” when the scriptures use them all, is to sectarianize that designation and denominate the church. To denominate is to name, and if those who call themselves “The Church of Christ” insist on that as a title they are a denomination by their own admission. We need to think of ourselves as being Christians only, but not regard ourselves as the only Christians.

The Greatest of These

[Essay]

Love is the foundation of the Christian system. In 1 Corinthians 13, Paul shows that love is indispensable (vv. 1-3), invincible (vv. 4-7), indestructible (vv. 8-10), and immortal (v. 13). Love is the power motivation that cements us together. But to know love is not merely to know about it. It is to personally and genuinely experience it. Love is not a way of life but life itself.

Restoring Restoration

[Essay]

Starting with its inception in 1809, documents the principle and spirit upon which the restoration movement was founded and raises the question as to whether the present-day heirs of that movement have forgotten its goal and gone aground on the rocks of party strife. Concludes that the movement is now the most divided in the contemporary American scene as the result of two great errors: (1) confusing the restoration movement with the church of God and (2) failing to distinguish between gospel (which is to be preached or proclaimed to the unbeliever) and doctrine (which is to be taught to converts). Quotes Alexander Campbell as saying “We preach the gospel to unbelievers, to aliens, but never to Christians.” Including all of the new covenant scriptures as part of the “gospel” and requiring that one believe the gospel in order to be saved makes uniformity of doctrine (what the party says God meant by what he said) the foundation for unity— the rock upon which every restoration movement in history has run aground, including the present one. It is time to restore the spirit of restoration.

A Great Abuse

[Essay]

The history of our brethren demonstrates that they have been as lax in respecting congregational autonomy as they have been loud in proclaiming it. Two sources account for this neglect: the first occurs when elders arrogate to themselves prerogatives which were not theirs by right of appointment; the second when preachers or others outside the congregation seek to interfere in decisions of the congregation or when one congregation attempts to dictate the policy to be pursued by another congregation. The problem is aggravated by the fact that every faction has an official journal whose editor wields a sway over the party platform. No congregation has a right to bind a decision on any other.

False Teachers

[Essay]

Every party places an “infallible” interpretation upon the word of God and then substitutes the interpretation for the word of God, leaving no room for honest difference of interpretation. Every sincere person who expresses a contradictory view is referred to as a “false teacher.” However, this term, which occurs only once, in 2 Peter 2:1, carries with it the idea of deliberate and intentional falsehood. Such a one is not only lying but is conscious of the fact that he is lying. No man who loves God and earnestly seeks to serve him to the full extent of his present knowledge is a false teacher, even if he is mistaken in some of his views.

Background of Restoration

[Essay]

An overview of the events, experiences, and forces that operated in the life and thought of Thomas Campbell that led him to act as a champion of unity. Recounts the events in the life of the author which led him to enter into the labor of Thomas Campbell. Concludes by expounding upon five factors which contributed to the inception of the restoration movement: (1) it was launched by men dissatisfied with the status quo, the result of a restless conscience; (2) it was preceded by reformation; (3) it was kindled by wholehearted commitment to a search for truth and an unreserved dedication to follow wherever it leads; (4) it sought the approval of God while ignoring the reproaches of men; and (5) it was born of a heart filled with God’s love.

Adventures in Religion (1)

[Essay]

Jesus left us no legal code with all contingencies spelled out, since in these last days God does not deal with us as children. We must ascertain those principles which governed our Lord and apply them to the best of our ability. A few of those principles include: (1) recognizing that not all of God's commands are of equal weight; (2) the relationship with a brother takes precedence over any formal act of religious service; (3) the ultimate expression of religion is doing good to needy mankind, and (4) the ability to love may be in proportion to a recognition of the need for forgiveness.

Restoration Astray

[Essay]

An examination of the underlying causes contributing to the rise of factionalism within the disciple brotherhood in an effort to determine when it abandoned its original aim. While the Restoration movement was not inaugurated to launch another "church," when it ceased to be a means to an end and became the end, it became merely one more religious organization among many. The current generation has forgotten the goal of the Restoration which was to unite all Christians upon the basis of faith, not upon doctrine— which is impossible. The example of Aylette Raines is given as a reminder of how brethren of differing doctrinal backgrounds were able to unite upon the basis of their common faith. Stone and Campbell united in spite of the fact that Stone was not a Trinitarian. The heirs of this noble movement have substituted their interpretations for the authority of scripture and have made them the criteria of judgment. They have lost the distinction between the gospel and doctrine and have allowed such things as one's understanding of Christ's return to become a condition for fellowship. We must once again make fellowship in Christ of greater significance than orthodoxy.

Adventures in Religion (2)

[Essay]

Jesus taught that (1) man creates the standard by which he will be judged, (2) that reciprocal love is no proof of a righteous life, and (3) that the will of the Father is sovereign. The man who makes no allowances for others will find none made for him. While Jesus said that love sums up the law and the Prophets, he was not referring to reciprocal love, which is grounded in selfishness. True love is selfless. Just as the farmer in Jesus' parable had a right to show his generosity by paying his workers the same amount, although some had worked fewer hours than others, we ought not to bind God by a law which He has given to bind us.

A Brighter Day

[Essay]

There are signs that men are beginning to rise above intolerance to break through walls designed to keep brethren apart. This could become the prelude to a real restoration of the Restoration spirit. But the only way to avoid starting another party is to refuse to succumb to the temptation to love only those who agree and separate from those who do not. The Restoration movement began in the spirit of epieikeia, one of the most important terms in the sacred scriptures to the renewed restoration spirit. Translated "magnanimity" in the NEB (Phil. 4:5), epieikeia is a quality which the Greek language implies is "better than justice." But as we became more sectarian we became legalistic. We need to rise above the letter of the law, without lowering its requirements, and operate in the realm of the spirit.

The Growth of Division

[Essay]

Findings from research into the development of the spirit of factionalism which led the heirs of the Restoration unity movement to become one of the most divided religious classifications in America. States that previous research into this question differs from the current in that previous researchists (1) sought justification for the party spirit, (2) concluded that we have divided over things or innovations, (3) have been guilty of over-simplification, (4) began with a false premise about the nature of fellowship, (5) treated developments in isolation from their frame of reference, (6) imply that our present divided condition is incurable. Expounds at length on each of the above. Includes a brief account of the introduction of Restoration principles into Missouri, and a summary of factors which militated against advocacy of instrumental music by the restoration pioneers. Part of a series on the rise of factionalism within the disciple brotherhood.

Adventures in Religion (3)

[Essay]

Expounds upon three principles considered very important in the concept of righteousness enunciated by Jesus: (1) the ideal of a completely unified life, an existence wholly integrated and not separated into various departments; (2) while all righteousness wells up from within, it has to flow out— there are no ornamental trees in God's acreage; (3) goodness is never static but ever changing and amending character for the better.

Rejecting and Returning

Part of a series of essays exploring the factors that led to the rise of factionalism within the Restoration movement. Notes the cyclical and helical nature of reformatory movements, then examines the nature of reformation. Alexander Campbell best defined the objectives of the Restoration movement as rejecting (reformation) and returning (restoration). While Campbell at first rejected the use of missionary societies (1823), he became the president of the first disciples missionary society (1849), a change in Campbell's objectives and position which probably doomed the movement to failure and led to the first real cleavage within its ranks. Observes that (1) the society was introduced out of honest motives; (2) Satan exploits our disagreements to engender the party spirit; (3) human organizations are usually self-perpetuating; (4) innovations are justified by succeeding generations upon a basis other than that upon which they were introduced; (5) the character of the founding members of a religious movement often gives way to pride in organizations and institutions; (6) organizations usually enslave rather than serve; (7) those who divided over the missionary society have continued to divide; (8) the creation of the missionary society possibly marked the end of the movement's original purpose. When we create our "own" societies we declare our distinction from others and thus our sectarian nature.

Incendiary Instruments

Chronicle and commentary on the attitude that first produced division within the disciple brotherhood over the introduction of instrumental music into their corporate worship. Since there was complete rejection of the instrument in the earlier years of the restoration movement, the author observes that its eventual introduction required both a change of attitude toward the instrument and toward the brethren, which he documents at some length with quotes from Pinkerton, Lard, Christopher, McGarvey, Allen, Franklin, and Garrison. Concludes that the social, political, and historical circumstances of the times were significant factors that allowed the instrument to precipitate division. Calls for a re-study of brotherhood and fellowship in the light of advanced knowledge. Our predecessors declared that a state of brotherhood no longer existed between themselves and those with whom they differed, but they misunderstood the implications of fellowship as the Holy Spirit used the term. We must restore the spirit of restoration by recognizing each other as brothers, based on our faith, and then seek ways to work out our differences. Pledges never to make a test of fellowship out of anything the Lord has not made a condition for salvation.

Adventures in Religion (4)

[Essay]

The greatest adventure of which one can be capable in the flesh is to break through the curtain of the flesh and to become identified with Christ by entering the realm of the spirit, allowing Him to dwell within. To do this we must break through the artificial and the superficial which have prevented us from penetrating but slightly into this magnificent realm. To identify with Jesus is to identify with his purpose— to bring many sons to glory. What we, in our simplicity, call “churches” may hinder, rather than help, through their false standards of loyalty and spurious tests of fellowship.

The Unequal Yoke

[Essay]

Many have interpreted 2 Corinthians 6:14-18 in such a partisan way as to divide brethren and thus contradict the very purpose of God. The text is applied to sincere brothers in Christ who hold different opinions on a variety of tests of fellowship. If having a mistaken idea makes a man an unbeliever there are no believers on earth. The “unbeliever” in this passage was an idolater, and the “unclean thing” had reference to the lewd practices of pagan temples.

The Sand Creek Address

[Essay]

Part of a series of essays on the rise of the factional spirit within the Restoration movement. Discusses at length the Sand Creek Declaration (the “Address and Declaration” written by Peter P. Warren) of 1889, providing an historical overview of its development and noting the significant influence of Daniel Sommer and David Lipscomb in its acceptance and implementation. Attributes the subsequent disintegration of the movement to the factional method of dealing with doctrinal differences set forth in the document. Notes that the Sand Creek meeting was a delegate convention and its Declaration sounded the death knell for local congregational autonomy. It laid the foundation for brotherhood based upon conformity in matters of interpretation and practice rather than the result of common fatherhood. It proposed formal division as a solution to problems among brethren— something never authorized in scripture. Essentially declares that non-conformists are to be disinherited from the family of God and no longer regarded as His children. Dismisses the use of Matt. 10:34-36 and James 3:17 to justify division as a grave misunderstanding of these passages. Concludes with a pledge to make nothing a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition for salvation, noting that our peace is a person, not a plan.

Basis of Authority

[Essay]

While members of “The Church of Christ” are sincere in their contention that the word of God is our only source of authority, they cannot distinguish between revelation (what God has said) and interpretation (what men think he meant by what he said). We are bound to recognize revelation as our source of authority, but we are not bound to recognize the interpretation of any man as authoritative. A faithful church is one that is drawn together by love, not driven together through fear.

Brothers at Law

[Essay]

Part of a series of essays on the rise and growth of the factional spirit and its effects on the Restoration movement. Provides a detailed account of the court battles (the Hammond case and the Sand Creek case) that ensued between the so-called “Progressives” and “Antis” in Illinois following the signing of the Sand Creek Declaration. Takes particular note of the Illinois Supreme Court decision in the Sand Creek case in which the court clearly recognized the nature of the disagreement. Concludes that division came about as the result of a decay of love and the rise of the factional spirit which chose division for preserving doctrinal purity, resulting in a brotherhood based upon conformity. To declare that others who have been born into God’s family shall “no longer be regarded as brethren” is both unscriptural and antiscritptural.

Adventures in Religion (5)

[Essay]

The Bible paints a picture of the believer as a man of action impelled by an inner compulsion that allows no time for rest—a soldier engaged in deadly warfare. Yet modern Christianity has little relationship to the kind of life which was characteristic of Jesus and the primitive saints. We need to recapture the sense of personal adventure in the religion of Jesus, who taught men to live dangerously, implying it is better to lose through use than to fail through fear. Life must be lost for his sake and not undertaken for our own benefit.

The Two Spirits

[Essay]

Factionalism is a demonstration of the spirit which motivates us. Our divisions are fruits of the party spirit whereas love and peace are the fruit of the Holy Spirit. People who have the Spirit simply do not divide and sever themselves into parties. In our legalism we have marked out our own little distinctive trail in scripture resulting in a kitchen stepladder approach to salvation in which the Holy Spirit has been confined to a book rather than allowed to live in our hearts. In the absence of the Holy Spirit the flesh enslaves and produces the party spirit. The secret of unity is the temple image where all grow together, bonded in love and held together by the power of the Holy Spirit.

Factional Flames

[Essay]

Examines the nature and results of that philosophy of brotherhood which has become basic Church-of-Christism in our day. Notes that the Sand Creek Address and Declaration established “separation” as the official means of opposing error (party alliance). However, separation is condemned in scripture, and determining whom we shall regard as brethren is a divine prerogative which we are instructed not to usurp. It is apparent from history that the arbitrary decision to dissolve brotherhood was made with a view to justifying use of the civil courts in property suits. Divisions over a variety of issues were multiplied not because of interpretations of the word of God but as the result of the philosophy of “preservation by separation” adopted in 1889. Provides a brief analysis of the origin and nature of that philosophy then reviews and analyzes the results of its implementation. Asserts that an unhealthy attitude toward scripture, inconsistency, and the development of insular exclusivism created a multiplicity of factions in which intolerance is counted as a virtue and forbearance is reckoned as a sin. Supports his thesis with numerous quotes from the Sommer-Armstrong debates (1907, 1908) over the existence of Bible colleges. During the first part of the twentieth century factionalism came into full flower with all of its shameful consequences.

Adventures in Religion (6)

[Essay]

There really is no point to much of what passes for Christianity these days. Our lives are too shallow. We have lost the sense of adventure of the spirit. We must resolve to reproduce the life of Jesus on earth to the fullest extent. That life will be characterized by (1) love for others that is not based on reciprocity, (2) an association with others based upon their need for compassion, (3) a renunciation of the worship of things, (4) a willingness to forgive, and (5) freedom from concern about the physical and sensual aspects of life.

This Is Life Eternal

[Essay]

The whole purpose of Christianity is to free man from guilt of the past and fear of the future by enabling him to experience eternal life as a present reality. Jesus took our past upon himself by being made sin, by assuming our guilt so that we might assume his righteousness. The Son of God became the Son of man so that the sons of men might become the sons of God. The grave is not the end but the beginning of a richer experience. A Christian does not leave home at death; he goes home. We are protected because we are in him; we are powerful because he is in us.

Decline of Factionalism

[Essay]

A review of the signs of the times that indicate a decline in factionalism both within and beyond the disciple brotherhood. The undeniable facts are that (1) God will not allow his purpose to fail; (2) the power of the cross is sufficient to unite God's people, for (3) God has already demonstrated his power for unifying Jew and Gentile; (4) Jesus would not pray for an impossible conditions; and, (5) many of us can testify that the factional spirit can be crucified. Crumbling walls of factionalism may be explained by (1) a growing sense of shame over our divided state, (2) a realization of its futility, (3) an increase in the level of education in the art of thinking, (4) a depreciation in the value of things that are credited with division in the past, (5) a sense of urgency about the world situation, (6) a recapturing of the vocabulary of the spirit, and (7) a loss of importance of traditions that have supported our divisions. The signs of hope are evident: (1) a restored vision of unity, (2) dissatisfaction with the status quo, (3) an increase in brotherly love, (4) a maturity that rejects public debates, (5) a favorable climate for unity throughout the religious world, (6) a correct estimate of our problem, and (7) an increase in meetings where men are striving to discover solutions to the problem of disunity.

The Hands of Folly

[Essay]

Just as folly destroys the house that wisdom builds, every attempt at unity among believers has resulted in the formation of a new party. We may avoid the mistakes of our predecessors by (1) regarding division as a sin against our brethren and against Christ, (2) becoming more conscious of the rule of the Holy Spirit in our lives, (3) refusing to recognize denominational lines of division, (4) remaining open to those who have shut us out, (5) avoiding the “loyal church” fallacy and remaining where we are, among those who need us most, and (6) grasping the true significance of brotherly love.

Adventures in Religion (7)

[Essay]

True life, which is timeless, lies in possession of the kingdom of God. And while the spirit is temporarily imprisoned in the flesh— which cannot possess the kingdom of God— it may rise above the flesh and repose in God. Just as there may be movements of ecstasy in a physical relationship, those who have become one with Christ spiritually may also have exceptional moments of encounter with the Spirit which constitute a foretaste of the delight which awaits us after death. To one who enters into intimate fellowship with God in a transcendent spiritual experience it is like living a thousand years in a single day. The secret of the mountain-top experience of communion with the divine presence is the utter loss or surrender of self and complete identification with God in the service of others.

Explaining My Position

[Essay]

A rehearsal of the author's position on what constitutes spiritual fellowship, specifically as it relates to endorsement of interpretation. Notes that fellowship is a state or condition into which we are called by the gospel and which comes about as the result of our response to that call. Notes that the gospel consists not of abstract propositions but of facts calculated to prove that Jesus was the Messiah of God. Belief in that fact and obedience to one act (immersion) puts one into the fellowship with God, although he may know little of scripture and be wrong about much of what he knows. It is both unscriptural and impossible to condition fellowship upon the attainment to a certain degree of knowledge, since no two people on earth are identical in the degree of knowledge possessed. Freedom from error is not a condition for reaching heaven. We have no right to make anything a condition for fellowship which God has not made a condition for salvation. Revelation consists of what God said in scripture; interpretation consists of what men think he meant by what he said. Each individual has the right to approach scripture for himself. No man can authoritatively interpret the word of God for another person. Our problem is that we have completely missed the basis of our fellowship.

The Common Life

[Essay]

The term “fellowship,” as used by the Holy Spirit, always involves the idea of sharing and is used to designate our participation in the divine nature and in the society of the redeemed. We are made to share in this common life by coming into the family of God through birth. Anyone who predicates fellowship upon unanimity of understanding lays the foundation for the dissolution of all fellowship. The Holy Spirit is not bestowed on a factional basis. We have been deluded into equating fellowship with our petty arguments over cups, classes, colleges, etc. The fact is, we are all brothers in error, and those who say they are not make the biggest error of all. Fellowship is infinitely more than sharing in activities, such as the Lord’s Supper, Bible study, and a song service. It is sharing in the divine nature, joint participation in the Holy Spirit, the gift of God to all his children. It is not something we can extend or withdraw.

How Far Is Too Far

[Essay]

While often accused of having gone “too far” in his acceptance of those who differ with him over matters of interpretation, the author raises the question, “how far is too far.” Observes that in each instance those who make the statement are willing to go along with much of his teaching on “fellowship” provided they can retain the party of their allegiance intact and undisturbed. Yet the one who goes beyond the party limits goes too far. Asserts that his detractors simply cannot conceive of how any man can love those who differ with him, so they consider that his love is not genuine. But no man can go too far in recognition of his brothers when he goes only as far as God goes. God recognizes all of his children as children. We cannot go too far when we regard all of them as brethren. No one can go far enough until he removes all artificial barriers erected to exclude brethren from brotherhood.

Adventures in Religion (8)

[Essay]

The spiritual sterility which passes for religion in these days has resulted in the development of two sets of religious attitudes— one for public services and the other for all other times. To recapture the significance of the transforming power of the Spirit in our lives we must be willing to run the risk of faith. But the quality of our faith does not depend on the magnitude of the problem being faced. There is a raw recklessness about genuine faith which makes it border upon madness to the casual and indifferent.

Getting Untangled

[Essay]

We are a people splintered by a slogan. We advocate unity “in matters of faith” and liberty “in matters of opinion” (and in all things charity). But since the scriptures do not tell us which matters are of faith and which are opinion, we are divided over our opinion as to which matters fall into which category. In the final analysis we differ in our deductions as to the meaning of certain passages of scripture. Proposes that we solve the problem by (1) accepting each other as brethren, (2) regarding each other as honest, and (3) continuing to talk to each other as we work toward resolving our differences. This does not require compromise of conviction nor geographical relocation but a recognition of brotherhood as greater than our views on any of the things that divide us. None of us is free from error, and we must not equate wrong notions with rebellion against God.

Christ and the Church

[Essay]

The very common incorrect evaluation of the church causes men to trust in the wrong source for salvation. Denies that saving power is invested in the church. The shepherd is greater than the flock, the creator is superior to the created. When we honor the church to the same degree as we do Jesus, we are in error. We are not saved through the church nor by the church. We are the church and we are saved by Jesus, its head. Our task is to preach Christ and him crucified. Since God is not bound by his own authority he is free to deal however he wishes with those who are uninformed or helpless, although we are not free to offer them hope other than what is revealed in scripture.

Adventures in Religion (9)

[Essay]

Observes that while God wishes to deal with us as sons, we demonstrate a preference for the slavery of legalism. Consequently, we have converted the grace of God into a law and imposed our interpretations upon others as the divine intent. The ordinances of God, designed to convey a blessing, have become battlegrounds of partisan hatred. Suggests it is time for a thorough examination of “the pattern concept” of orthodoxy.

The Basis of Faith

[Essay]

Proposes to show why the nature of man required just such a revelation as God has vouchsafed to him. God has subscribed to the criteria adapted to and accepted by man as essential to the integrity of testimony. Thus any requirement by God based upon belief of testimony will conform to the recognized laws of evidence. The Christian religion, being uniquely historical, rests upon the scope of knowledge of its witnesses and the integrity of their character. The four gospels were not designed as biographies but as a record of those things what convinced them that Jesus was the Son of God. Examines the methods of Luke in establishing evidence for the virgin birth and raises the question as to what manner of confirmation would be required to convince those who question the divinity of Jesus. Jesus recognized the nature of the evidence required to prove his claims and was willing to meet the logical requirement for confirmation of those claims. The core of Christianity is the gospel message, not doctrinal propositions.

The Ignorance of Wisdom

[\[Essay\]](#)

Expounds upon the meaning of Matt. 11:25, 26 in the context of modern skepticism. Notes that while the message of God is complete, the discovery of what it contains is not. But some cannot understand the revelation of God because of the blindness caused by their wisdom— the wisdom of this world. Babes, unable to explain what they do not understand, must exhibit trust in him who leads the way. Our faith must rest either in the demonstrations of God or in the explanations of men! Critically examines the explanations offered for Jesus' feeding the multitude with a few loaves and fishes. There is a constant conspiracy of "the wisdom of the world" to rid the world of a belief in the foreknowledge of God. This is reflected in the implications of the so-called "higher criticism" of the old covenant scriptures for which a critical review is provided and to which objections are enumerated. The false premise of the “wisdom of the world,” upon which much research rests, is the result of a philosophy of naturalism which denies supernaturalism and thus closes the door to the only light that can illuminate in the realm of revelation—the light of the Spirit.

The Basis of Authority

[Essay]

While almost every Protestant sect claims that the scriptures are their one and all-sufficient rule of faith and practice, “The Church of Christ” labors under the impression that they are the only ones who are truly honest in their claims. Upon close examination this proves not to be the case. Rather their failure to distinguish between revelation and interpretation and between gospel and doctrine has allowed partisan traditionalism to replace the authority of scripture. The Church of Christ in the United States is a conglomeration of factions, many of which are ruled by editors of party periodicals. The basis of authority for each faction is not the revealed scriptures but the official interpretation sanctioned by the editors. A little reflection will show that this differs from the papal system only in degree.

Problems in Attitude

[Essay]

We could hardly be more divided if Jesus had prayed for disunity and God had commanded it. Two ideas which support the will to divide should be re-examined: (1) the philosophy that purity of doctrine must be maintained by separation from brethren, and (2) the philosophy that brotherhood is secondary to personal conviction and in any conflict between the two, the latter must always be defended at the expense of the former. Notes that no apostle ever encouraged the members of any congregation to leave it in order to plant “a faithful church.” The “loyal church fallacy” is one of our greatest errors. Observes that unity does not require geographical proximity—we are all in the same person whether or not we are all in the same place. To predicate fellowship upon doctrinal attainment is to destroy all hope of oneness. Jesus did not condition fellowship with himself upon attainment to the same degree of spiritual knowledge which he possessed. And we must receive one another just as he has received us (Rom. 15:7).

Sectarianism

[Essay]

Sectarianism originated with a serious misconception of the nature of the ekklesia. The body of Christ is composed of individuals, not divergent sects. Consequently, no coalition of sects can ever become the one body. All sects are useless to the accomplishment of God’s purpose. It is not their multiplication but their abolition which will best encourage the progress of the Way. Sects are produced by rivalry and are wrong in origin. They drive the sheep apart and hold them aloof from each other. Sectarianism is a work of the flesh and is engaged in war with the Holy Spirit. Our task is to bring each person who is dominated by the party spirit to that place where he can be indwelt by the Holy Spirit. We shall not be able to overthrow the party spirit by legalism. It is not by law but by love that God proposes to offset the works of the flesh.

The Real Jews

To fully understand the true nature of the church of God we must grasp the significance of the affirmation that the church of God is both catholic and protestant and composed entirely of Jews. It is catholic because there is only one body— one church — and every person on earth in whom the Holy Spirit dwells is a member of that body. It is protestant in that it is a witnessing community consisting entirely of laity, all of whom are God's priests, called to offer spiritual sacrifices and to declare the wonderful deeds of him who called them. It is composed only of those who are Jews inwardly— the real Jew— who have the faith of Abraham and who have experienced spiritual circumcision in the act of immersion in water.

Adventures in Religion(10)

Eternal life is defined as knowing the Father and the Son. To know God and Christ in the sense of having eternal life is more than knowing about them. To know Christ is to be joined unto him. Legalism, on the other hand, is the stone given to him who asks for bread. Legalism stems from a misunderstanding of the relationship of the written word to the Living Word. The new covenant is not written with ink. To take the word of grace and convert it into a law to bind upon men as a written code of acceptance with God is to doom them to certain death. Law cannot produce life. Men had the new covenant written on their heart years before the apostles wrote the first word of the new covenant scriptures. The scriptures point not to a book but to Jesus, who gives life. God did not “throw the Book at us” but He gave his Son for us. Eternal life is the gift of God through Jesus. Jesus did not come so much to take us to heaven as to bring heaven to us. The great adventure is the mastery of self through allowing Jesus to enter the open portals of your very being. He did not come to bring a new religion to the world but that we might have life.

War in Heaven

[Essay]

In the final day there will be but two classes of people: those who have said to God “Thy will be done,” and those to whom God says, “Thy will be done.” Heaven will be full of the first and hell will be full of the second. Hell is the final abode of the untamed will. Many attempt to storm the portals of heaven by asserting their own worth or importance. But the religion of our Lord is one of a broken heart, of free men who are all slaves — at liberty to serve after the fashion of Jesus himself whose love motivated him to divest himself of all his prerogatives and privilege to become a “slave by nature.” One of our greatest temptations is to believe that we do the will of God when we live to please ourselves.

The Times of the Stork

[Essay]

Examines the trichotomous nature of man as body, soul, and spirit. Notes that while man shares in common with other animals both a body and a soul (the animating principle of the body), it is the spirit of man which exalts him above the rest of creation. Asserts that man who denies God is actually worse off than the lower animals. While the later— who possess no rational faculty, and thus no moral consciousness— cannot refuse the call of the creator through instinct, man is able to resist the call of God precisely because he is rational. The spirit is the responsive mechanism by which intelligent creatures answer the call of God and his demands upon their lives. Thus the appeal of God to mankind is a rational and not an emotional one. The primary purpose of the human spirit is to respond to the light of truth through the eye of the intellect. The human spirit can be happy only when it has (1) freedom from the past guilt, (2) a purpose for the present which transcends self, and (3) hope for the future that transcends death. These are satisfied through faith (past), hope (future), and love (present)— the means by which one identifies with the needs of others and is thus enabled to live on a universal plane. Such love is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit which is given to us.

War Bulletins

[Essay]

In no other area is there such flagrant disregard for what we affirm as there is in the doctrine of “local autonomy.” This may be observed most readily in the use of church bulletins in which the local ministry seeks to discipline and direct the affairs of other congregations, as if they prove their fidelity to God by dissemination of propaganda calculated to destroy the harmony of congregations whose members will not parrot the party line. This type of clerical authority differs only in degree with that of Rome. When something does not please the pope he issues a bull; when something doesn’t please our brethren, they issue a bulletin!

Ernest Beam and Unity

[Essay]

Reproduces “Seventeen Propositions to Promote Unity,”

by Ernest Beam, as they appeared in the Christian Standard of 1949. Beam, who began a paper called The Christian Forum, in 1950, held the same ideal and goal as the author, in spite of basic differences in the proposed methods to be employed in helping brethren throw off the shackles of the party spirit.

On Being Naive

[Essay]

Pleads guilty as charged to the opinion of certain college administrators that his approach to Christian unity is naive, as the word implies being free from guile, simple, sincere and ingenuous. Admits to having a sort of “down-home” directness in his plea that we recognize all of our brothers as brethren and treat them that way, thus applying the “golden rule” to brotherhood. Suspects that this appeal is so homespun and natural that a great many will overlook its potential. Given the fact that we all are in the same family and all have the same Father, it would seem like old-fashion commonsense to recognize each other as brothers.

Fear and Suspicion

[Essay]

In response to an assertion that the Christian Church is plotting to use the author’s influence to woo the Churches of Christ into the Christian Church fold, points out that it is very basic to his approach that each one remain where he is and share his newly discovered truth with those whom he knows best. States that he has no desire to unite “The Church of Christ” and “The Christian Church” and doubts that it could be done or that anything would be accomplished by doing so other than to produce another sect. While often asked if those in the Christian Church are “brothers in error,” points out that the only brethren he has on this earth are “brethren in error.” Some are in one error, some in another, but all are in some error. Observes that he is not in complete agreement with any of the brethren and that if they receive him it must be upon the same basis that God receives each of us— in spite of our differences. Our years of factional teaching must give way to mutual tolerance— not the endorsing of things that are wrong but the enduring of those who think they are right.

What Is Heresy?

[Essay]

Since we are preconditioned by the scriptures to reject heretics, there can be no meaningful dialog between brethren who differ on doctrinal issues so long as we continue to mistake heresy with any belief at variance with the dogmatic norm. The word “heresy,” in scripture, is a sect or party formed for the purpose of separating some of God’s children from the rest. A “heretic” is one who is sectarian in attitude. Such are to be rejected. The current view of “heresy” held by the majority of members of “The Church of Christ” is without scriptural warrant and inimical to the peace and harmony of the body of Christ. It has resulted in every member of “The Church of Christ” being considered a heretic in the eyes of some other members of “The Church of Christ.” Provides ten points of reason essential to thinking ourselves out of our current status.

My Defense

[Essay]

Reports on an article published in the Gospel Advocate by J. D. Thomas entitled “Brother Ketcherside’s New Fallacy.” Provides copies of letters written to the editor, B. C. Goodpasture, requesting an opportunity to reply, and to J. D. Thomas, proposing a public forum in Abilene, Texas, in which to discuss the issues raised in the article.

Wishful Thinking

[Essay]

A plea for unity of believers is no more “wishful thinking,” as one correspondent opines, than a prayer for unity of believers by our Lord. While actual unity is a gift of the Spirit, practical unity must be maintained by the exertion of effort to make peace among brethren. We are not told to achieve unity but to maintain it.

Reply to Brother Thomas

[Essay]

Reply to an article by J. D. Thomas, published in the Gospel Advocate, entitled “Brother Ketcherside’s New Fallacy.” Notes that the term “full fellowship,” which Thomas uses some six times, does not occur in scripture and reflects a misconception of the term. Fellowship is a relationship in which we share as the result of a common Fatherhood. There is no partial state of fellowship. There are no half brothers or stepbrothers in the Lord, only blood brothers of the Lamb. Thomas refers to those who use instrumental music as “brethren.” If they are brethren, then they are in the fellowship and there is nothing we can do about it. Opines that the new covenant scriptures are not clear-cut in the matter of instrumental music nor about most things which we make “tests of fellowship.” Denies that he wishes to “reduce all faith to being simply opinion,” but affirms that it is a matter of opinion as to which matters are of faith and which are of opinion. We cannot force others to categorize all things as we do. Argues not that “full fellowship does not mean endorsement” but that “fellowship does not mean full endorsement.” Notes that in spite of the numerous errors within the congregation of saints at Corinth, Paul considered himself to be in the fellowship with them, yet he never endorsed any of their misconceptions or misconduct.

Confusion of Tongues

[Essay]

It will be exceedingly difficult to restore a true sense of fellowship until brethren know what it is that needs to be restored. They confuse fellowship with a great many things to which it is not related. We must not only speak where the Bible speaks but we must speak as the bible speaks. The Holy Spirit does not equate fellowship in Christ with absolute conformity in interpretation. To do so would render fellowship impossible among finite and fallible individuals. Much of what is called fellowship in these days is not fellowship at all. Those who bitterly oppose the idea that all sincere immersed believers are in the fellowship will invite the whole audience to share in a “period of fellowship” right after the service. Does this mean they “fellowship” the unimmersed who remain and share in the doughnuts and coffee? Fellowship is a state of the heart, not of the stomach. To equate fellowship with coffeemakers and chocolate cupcakes is to profane the word and postpone the recovery of the spirit of the early saints.

The Making of History

[Essay]

In response to articles in the Firm Foundation directed against him, the author writes to its editor, Reuel Lemmons, requesting permission to state his views and to reply to the things being said against him which, according to the author, were a misrepresentation of his views. Provides copies of the exchange of letters between himself and the editor who ultimately declined to grant the permission he had earlier promised and returned the four articles which had been submitted.

The Scattered Flock

[Essay]

An essay rejected for publication by the Firm Foundation. Responding to the charge that he was fathering a new sect, affirms that he is dedicated to the destruction of all sects by grubbing out the root from which they grow— the party spirit. Notes that no sect is the church of God and the church of God is no sect. While acknowledging his heritage in the Restoration movement begun by Alexander Campbell, denies having any illusions about being “another Campbell” as accused in the pages of the Firm Foundation. Asserts that our present divided state is the result of a mistaken concept of fellowship. Affirms brotherhood with every sincere immersed believer. Denies pleading for “fellowship of error” and notes that fellowship is of the Spirit and is a relationship between persons, none of whom are free from error. To deny fraternity because of error is an insult to our mutual paternity.

Walking Together

One of four articles rejected for publication by the Firm Foundation. Responds to the accusation that his interpretation of Amos 3:3 is at variance with many of the best scholars. Notes that after extensive research he failed to find a single scholar of reputation who sanctions the interpretation current among our preaching brethren. Common experience teaches us that we can walk with those with whom we disagree. There is no congregation on earth in which all members agree on everything. Agreement is only required in those areas of interpretation that relate to the party test. Amos is referring to matters of cause and effect. Two people walking together in a desolate region is a clear indication that they have made an appointment to do so. Affirms that he will make nothing a test of fellowship that God has not made a condition for fellowship. States that “If they are good enough to walk with Him, they are not too bad for me to walk with them.”

The Concerned Ones

One of four articles rejected for publication by the Firm Foundation. Responds to the accusation that he is a hobbyist who is not in fellowship with all his brethren and that he advocates “compromise, amalgamation, and finally a loose federation with Christians of all denominations.” Discloses that he borrowed the expression “fellowship of the concerned ones” from Dr. Elton Trueblood. Denies that such are unconcerned about the “unconcerned.” Asserts that, contrary to the accusation, he advocates the destruction of all sectarian and denominational tendencies, and pleads for a recognition that there are Christians in the sects. Rather than expending our energies fighting believers with whom we should be united, we should sit down and discuss our problems as brethren.

Receive Him Not Into Your House

[Essay]

An article rejected for publication in the Firm Foundation. Responds to criticism of his view of 2 John 9. Demonstrates, from a comparison of the first two epistles of John, that the “doctrine of Christ” of 2 John 9 is the doctrine rejected by the Gnostic antichrist— that Jesus has come in the flesh. Our mistaken brethren are not antichrists and the “doctrine of Christ” does not have reference to instrumental music, orphan homes, cups, classes, or the millennium.

Doctrine and Doctrines

[Essay]

The word “doctrines” occurs only five times in scripture but is never used with reference to divine revelation. There was a plurality of apostles but there was only one doctrine! In order to grasp the meaning of the thoughts of God conveyed through the Holy Spirit, the divine agent of revelation, we must discover and employ the vocabulary of the Holy Spirit. If the Spirit has used no language suitable to convey an idea, it is evident that the idea itself was not revealed by God. We demonstrate our fidelity to God by respect for the doctrine of God.

The Unequal Yoke

[Essay]

An exegesis of 2 Corinthians 6:14-18 in response to correspondents who cite the passage to justify their separation from those who differ with them about such things as cups, classes, or colleges. Demonstrates from the context that the injunction to “Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord” cannot have reference to brothers in the Lord separating from each other, and “touch not the unclean thing” cannot have reference to those points of doctrinal controversy over which brethren divide. Points out that the topic of Paul’s discussion has to do with the relationship of saints to paganism. Suggests that the “unclean thing” most likely refers to sacrifices made by the pagans to demons and the licentious practices in connection therewith.

Repairing Lines

[Essay]

A call for the repair of lines of communication between brethren. A reaffirmation of the author’s purpose and mission, and a pledge to make nothing a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition of salvation. Promises to treat as brothers all whom God accepts as sons. Proposes to go wherever the Spirit opens up a door for sharing his thinking with others. Declares himself to be a slave of no man, but a servant to all men.

The Spirit and Unity

[Essay]

Starting with the premise that the Holy Spirit is a personality— not a mere influence or disposition— examines the responsibility of the Spirit in the divine imperative of unity and the furtherance of the fellowship of the saints. Looks at the actions and the exercise of power by the Holy Spirit in the production, promotion, and protection of this fellowship. Observes that the Holy Spirit creates the fellowship by convicting the world in pointing out the true nature of sin and righteousness and the certainty of judgment based upon accountability. The Holy Spirit promotes fellowship by revealing unto us the true nature and status of Jesus and by transforming our lives, from one degree of glory to another on an ascending plane, to make us more like Him. The Holy Spirit providentially directs the affairs of the kingdom of heaven on earth during the absence of the King— perfecting and preserving the fellowship in spite of attempts by Satan to destroy it. Since truth is imperishable, the Spirit operates in and through revealed truth to effect the divine aim. He brings this about through the “leaven concept,” enabling the concerned ones to translate the word into living flesh among those with whom we dwell— affecting the hearts of all who love the Lord with a sense of fellowship, until all the one body may function together in harmony and unison.

The Church Speaks of Discovering and Unleashing Hidden Powers

[Essay]

A speech prepared for the North American Christian Convention. Notes that whatever God wants done in any generation he supplies the ability to do. Expounds upon three areas of neglected power: (1) the priesthood of all believers, (2) the sanctification of all believers, and (3) the unity of all believers.

Terms of Communion

[Essay]

Creedalism, which results from pride and fear, creates another system of justification, which amounts to setting up our own righteousness. It substitutes the interpretation of the party for the revelation of God. No man has the right to bind his knowledge of any point of apostolic doctrine upon any other person who does not so understand it. While we may help each other in the acquisition of knowledge of apostolic doctrine, no one can establish his own doctrinal knowledge as the measure of another's acceptability with God. Alexander Campbell noted in his Declaration and Address that "deductions from scripture are not formally binding upon the consciences of Christians further than they . . . evidently see that they are so . . . Therefore no such deductions can be made terms of communion." That is to say, no other person can formally bind them upon him as a condition of fellowship, because no one else can read his heart and determine the degree of his responsibility. David Lipscomb wrote: "So long as a man really desires to do right, we cannot withdraw from him."

A Realistic Attitude

[Essay]

Suggests that a realistic attitude toward solving the problem of disunity is to recognize that the true cause of division does not lie in the things over which we divided but in the false philosophy that the way to preserve doctrinal purity is to separate from brethren. Things produce strains upon our relationship, but we separate when we quit loving each other. The answer to our problem is first to recapture a real sense of brotherhood. Unless we deny the unscriptural philosophy of brotherhood based upon conformity to a partisan interpretation of scripture rather than upon unity in Christ, we will continue to contribute more to the problem of disunity than to the answer of unity.

Facing a Dilemma

[Essay]

While the Christian world is now seeking to overcome the scandal of schism, the heirs of a project to unify the Christians in all of the sects are now in an embarrassing position: while those we set about to unite have started uniting, our brethren are still divided. Introduces an article in the same issue, “Some Thoughts on Unity,” by Reuel Lemmons.

Reply to Brother Lemmons

[Essay]

A response to an article by Reuel Lemmons published in Firm Foundation entitled “Some Thoughts on Unity.” Notes that while Lemmons maintains that “unity in spite of differences is not unity,” the only unity possible is a unity that recognizes diversity, else who would be the regulator of what free men think if not the pope? What Brother Lemmons means to say is that fellowship can only exist if we all walk in the light of his party interpretation. Our sinful schisms arise from mistaken views about fellowship. Fellowship is the mutual sharing in the life of the indwelling Spirit by every child of God. The apostolic commands to “be of one mind” and to “be of one accord” were written to people already in the fellowship— not for the purpose of creating fellowship, as Brother Lemmons would have it. What he is pleading for is not unity but for the sanctification and maintenance of our divisions until every person sees everything as does his party. He advocates that others abandon their private interpretations, but a man cannot abandon what he believes the scriptures to teach. Are we to allow Brother Lemmons to become the sole arbiter as to whose interpretations are in error? Who is to decide who must abandon what? Paul says, “Your personal convictions are a matter of faith between yourself and God.”

Reviving Hope

[Essay]

Among the heirs of the restoration movement there are signs that our brethren are weary of strife and contention. We have reared a new generation that will not be content with the misuse of scripture to sustain factional aims. Their minds are sharp enough to discern between revelation and interpretation, between the will of God and party tradition. They no longer equate the faction in which they were reared as the kingdom of heaven to the exclusion of all others. They are tired of irresponsible journalism, censorship, and boycott. We are poised for a genuine breakthrough of the Spirit and for the penetration of the hard crust of exclusivism. The factional approach to Christianity is outmoded and outdated and can never accomplish the purpose of heaven.

Saying Nice Things

[Essay]

In his second letter to the Corinthians Paul refers to “all the nice things” he had said about them, in spite of the division, immorality, and beliefs by which they had been characterized a few months prior in his first epistle. While modern day heirs of the restoration movement would have urged the brethren in Corinth to divide in order to maintain purity of doctrine, Paul taught them to love one another in spite of their immaturity of mistaken views. He was able to do so because he differentiated between gospel and doctrine, endorsement and fellowship, knowledge and love, and between the faith that justifies and growth toward maturity of one within that faith.

Reply to Brother Lemmons

[Essay]

Replies to an article by Reuel Lemmons in Firm Foundation entitled “Why We Did Not Run Ketcherside’s Articles.” Denies the accusations (1) that he courts the “Digressives” (a term he deplores), (2) that he insults non-instrumental brethren, and (3) that he has ever used the expression “The Disciples Brotherhood” in reference to heirs of the restoration movement. Notes that Brother Lemmons is still enraptured with the myth that only those who subscribe to the interpretations on controversial issues set forth by the Firm Foundation constitute the one body. Maintains that God’s people are scattered through all our factions. Denies that differences create sects. Observes that the writers of Firm Foundation do not create a sect every time they differ with each other. So long as we love each other as we should, we will not divide into factions.

Reply to the Foregoing

[Essay]

Replies to an editorial by Reuel Lemmons in Firm Foundation entitled “The Teaching of Carl Ketcherside Again.” Responds to specific questions raised in the article relative to the “sincere sprinkled,” the function of baptism, the point at which spiritual life begins, and the identity of those who constitute the visible church. With regard to the church at Pergamos (Rev. 2), notes that not one intimation is given that “the faithful” in Pergamos should come out and start a “loyal congregation,” demonstrating that it is possible to hold fast the name of Christ (v. 13) and not deny the faith even in a congregation where some hold doctrines which Jesus hates and practice things which he deplores. Concludes with seven questions for Brother Lemmons regarding unity and fellowship.

The Optimistic View

[Essay]

There are good reasons for being optimistic about the prospect for a better relationship among the heirs of the restoration movement: (1) The hypocrisy of professing unity while practicing division is becoming recognized; (2) Our brethren are becoming better educated and resent the pat answers that do not furnish adequate solutions to questions being raised; (3) A realistic re-appraisal of our standing before God and the world of mankind is underway. Concludes that our whole problem comes from equating the church for which Christ died with the faction in which we have always lived. We need to cultivate a proper idea of fellowship and we need an example for our day of someone who is just a Christian and a Christian only.

The Manifested Life

[Essay]

An exegesis of 1 John 1:7 in which it is noted that the quality called “light,” which is identified with God in the absolute, is equated by John with love. To love one another is to be in the light. John is saying that if we walk in the light of love for our brothers, as God exists in perfect love for us all, we will not lie when we say that God and ourselves are in fellowship, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son will continue cleansing us from all sin.

Answer to Objections (No. 1)

[Essay]

First installment of a reply to an article in Firm Foundation by Reuel Lemmons entitled “Objections Brother Ketcherside Does Not Answer.” The accusations are that the author (1) teaches that the grace of God is wider than the authority of Christ, and that many may be saved by the grace of God who have never submitted to the authority of Christ; (2) makes a distinction between gospel and doctrine which is foreign to the Bible; (3) teaches that after one has been made a child of God he may make all sorts of errors concerning doctrine, but none of these, regardless of how grievous, except for denying the Deity of Jesus Christ, can be a basis for withdrawal of fellowship. In response to each of these accusations the author claims to share a position in common with the restoration pioneers.

Reply to Foregoing

[Essay]

A review of an editorial in the Firm Foundation by Reuel Lemmons entitled “Hidden Poison and Body of Error” in which Lemmons revisits the objections he expressed in a previous editorial. The author responds by affirming (1) that he does not believe that our obligation to take the good news to all whom we can reach obligates God to damn all whom we do not reach; (2) that the gospel is to be preached to the whole world to make believers, whereas the apostolic doctrine was addressed to saints and faithful brethren; (3) that one comes into the fellowship by accepting the Sonship and Lordship of Jesus and he leaves it by denial of that which he affirms to enter it. Notes that while God threatens to remove His candlestick from Ephesus, he nowhere commanded the brethren to remove themselves from the candlestick. Observes that despite all of the mistaken ideas and impure lives in the congregations mentioned in the new covenant scriptures, not one was ever commanded to divide, and no one was ever commanded to split the candlestick in any community.

Answer to Objections (No. 2)

[Essay]

Part two of a reply to an editorial in Firm Foundation by Reuel Lemmons entitled “Objections Brother Ketcherside Does Not Answer.” Responds to the accusations that (1) he teaches that every sincere believer in the Messiahship of Jesus is a child of God, whether he is ever baptized or not, and is now his brother or sister in prospect; (2) he teaches that there must be diversity of belief among God’s people in order for them to have unity; (3) he refuses to deal with the verb form of fellowship; (4) his idea that error in doctrine, except for that of the anti-Christ, should never cause us to break fellowship puts him in opposition to Gal. 1:6-9 and Eph. 5:3-12; (5) he teaches that sectarianism is a sin, but then urges complete fellowship of sectarians.

Reply to the Foregoing

[Essay]

A review and reply to part two of “Hidden Poison and Body of Error” by Reuel Lemmons, an editorial in Firm Foundation in which Lemmons revisits the objections (and Ketcherside’s replies) expressed in a previous editorial. In his response the author affirms (1) that one is begotten of God when the Spirit quickens him through the gospel upon his belief that Jesus is the Son of God; it is by immersion that one is born into the family relationship; (2) that fellowship in Christ is not conditioned upon uniformity of opinion but upon oneness in Him; (3) that the passages cited do not obviate the author's position that fellowship is a relation between persons, but acknowledges the propriety of Lemmons' pointing out his use of the word "fellowship" as a verb in a previous issue of Mission Messenger, for which the author expresses regret. He denies that the unimmersed have entered into the fellowship, and he denies that he urges "complete fellowship of sectarians." Rather, he affirms that he is in fellowship with Christians who are in the sects.

Answer to Objections (No. 3)

[Essay]

Continuation of a response to objections raised by Reuel Lemmons in his Firm Foundation editorial, "Objections Brother Ketcherside Does Not Answer." Affirms that (1) the sons of God are all in the church of Christ, but the church of Christ is not confined to the restoration movement; (2) every sincere immersed believer is God's child and is in the fellowship of God's Son, some of whom may be in all the sects, all of whom are our brothers; (3) Since all of God's sons are brothers and constitute the brotherhood, and since only one Spirit dwells in all of them, producing unity of the Spirit and fellowship, these are the same in the sight of God; (4) although God is the author of fellowship, we can so act as to have God disinherit us, and those whom he rejects from his family we must also reject if we remain in the family status.

Reply to the Foregoing

A reply to part three of an editorial by R. Lemmons in Firm Foundation entitled “Hidden Poison and Body of Error.” The author (1) affirms the body of Christ is neither a sect nor a party, but composed of every sincere immersed believer who is joined to Jesus as head. It is not limited only to those who oppose instrumental music and certain societies; (2) Denies that there is any person in the fellowship who has not been immersed; specifically denies having contended that the sincere sprinkled or the pious unimmersed are in the fellowship; (3) affirms that the gospel is good news proclaimed by one person, while baptism is the act by which another person responds to it; (4) Does not deny the existence of “practical” demonstrations of disunity but affirms the “actual” unity conferred by the Holy Spirit upon every person in whom he dwells; (5) observes that Brother Lemmons mistakes his fallible interpretation of God’s word as divine revelation, and notes that while 2 Peter 2 does speak of “accursed children,” such are those having “eyes full of adultery”— not those brothers who sincerely differ in their views about instrumental music, cups, orphan homes, etc.

Reply to Brother Lemmons

Response to an editorial by Reuel Lemmons in Firm Foundation entitled “Further Considerations of Ketcherside Unity Movement.” Notes that (1) in contrast to the Ecumenical Movement, his plea is for a destruction of all factions, not their preservation; (2) differences do not destroy fellowship; (3) while it is wrong to disregard any error, it is right to have regard for our brothers in spite of their errors; (4) while one should not accept error anywhere, all of us are in error in some of our concepts; to accept one as a brother in spite of his erroneous views is to do nothing more than God does for each one of us; (5) not all truths are equally important; God has conditioned life upon belief of certain facts, but he has not conditioned that life upon knowledge of all truths at a given time.

Reply to the Foregoing

[Essay]

Response to an article by Reuel Lemmons in Firm Foundation entitled “Love Will Not Whitewash Error.” Notes that the true restoration plea calls for all lovers of truth in all the factions to remain where they are, acting as leaven and gradually destroying sectarianism from within. If we love truth, we will love all of our brethren as that truth enjoins us to do, even those who differ with our concept about the things which have troubled the family. The restoration movement is long overdue a definition and an analysis of “matters of faith” and “matters of opinion.” Everyone agrees that in matters of faith we should have unity and in matters of opinion we should have liberty. But no two agree on what constitutes matters of faith and matters of opinion, so we know neither where to unite nor where to allow liberty. What Paul opposed was not circumcision but binding it upon the Gentiles as a basis of justification instead of personal faith in Jesus. Brother Lemmons is with those who say to the brethren, “Except you agree with us about the instrument you cannot be saved.”

The Relation of Baptism to Fellowship

[Essay]

The “fellowship” is that state or condition in which we have a joint participation with God and Christ and other saints through the Spirit. It includes every person in whom the Holy Spirit dwells. “Baptism” is immersion in water of a believing penitent. It is the enabling act by which a proper subject is transferred from the domain of darkness into the kingdom of God’s dear Son. Gives four reasons for regarding baptism as essential unto entrance into the fellowship. Regards baptism as a test of fellowship because God has made it a condition of salvation. The question is not what a modern dictionary assigns as a meaning of baptism, but what significance was attached to it by the Holy Spirit. When I speak of baptism I must mean the same thing Jesus meant when he spoke of it. Baptism is a positive ordinance (not a moral precept) whereby man reenacts in his own life those acts which Jesus performed for all mankind (death, burial, and resurrection). It is not an act we perform but one performed on us. Lists five objections to the idea that what is important is inward cleansing and that the outward symbol is of no real consequence except as an overt witness to it. It is not simply unity that we seek but unity in Him. Whatever brings us into Him brings us into the unity for which He prayed.

Our History and Our Division

[Essay]

Suggests five guidelines for facing up to our currently divided state: (1) Division is a sin for which we must answer in the judgment; (2) Our schisms are a sign of immaturity and carnality; (3) Our factionalism is a scandal in the mission areas of the world; (4) The spirit of exclusivism is a symptom of ingrown sectarianism and a smoke in God’s nostrils; (5) The branding of brethren with our own labels is uncharitable, unwarranted, and unholy. We have forsaken the ideal of the restoration movement. We would do well to re-examine its foundations as set forth in Alexander Campbell’s fifteen point thesis entitled “Synopsis of Reformation” (enumerated in this article). The first is of particular importance: “The restoration of pure speech or the calling of Bible things by Bible names.” When the language of truth is smothered beneath layers of ecclesiastical linguistics it ceases to be a revelation and reverts to a secret unattainable to the man on the street. Modern gnostics jam the voice of heaven and scramble the message of grace until men weary of trying to unravel it. It is through our grasp of the words of God that we are able to lay hold upon the Word of God who is eternal life. To recapture the vocabulary of the Holy Spirit means embracing not only the form but the signification. A correct attitude toward the word of God will pave the way toward settlement of most of our difficulties.

There's A Difference

[Essay]

Compares the material circumstances and spiritual concern of yesteryear with that of today and wonders whether we may have sacrificed concern for comfort. The essay was prompted by a visit to an old abandoned meeting house followed by a tour of the new facility which replaced it.

A Redemptive Society

[Essay]

Examines the nature and purpose of the church. Observes that it is not composed of sects but of all whom God has called out from the world— individuals who are joined to each other only because they are joined to the same head. The church is a witnessing community, testifying not of its own works but of the works of God. That it is a redemptive fellowship defines its true nature and purpose. Its members are all sinners saved by grace, by trusting in the righteousness of Jesus. It is a community where our selfish instincts are transformed into social interests, a fellowship primarily concerned with persons. Almost all disputes within Christendom have arisen as a result of a misunderstanding of the nature and purpose of the church—that it is (1) an authoritarian structure, (2) the authorized interpreter of scripture, or (3) a social welfare organization. But the church possesses no authority and the doctrine of God belongs to each child of God. There is no “official interpretation” of scripture. The individual conscience is the sole monitor for every true saint. But each is to be restrained by brotherly love, which forbids acting on the ground of superior knowledge. The very purpose of doctrine is to teach us how to be at peace with our brothers. Only as doctrine enhances brotherly love is it translated into a godly life. The church is a redemptive fellowship created to prove the transforming power of love.

Where Would Paul Attend?

[Essay]

The notion that we have restored the primitive order of things is reflected in the question “Where would the apostle Paul attend church in our town,” a favorite topic with many in “Churches of Christ.” The fact of the matter is that “The Church of Christ” is not actually a restoration of the first century church at all but a twentieth century party growing out of the abuse of a nineteenth century restoration movement. Most members of “The Church of Christ believe Paul would have to meet with them because of the “pattern,” by which they refer to the interpretation which their group places upon the sacred writings, that is, their opinions concerning what God means. All groups agree that the pattern is so plain that any person can understand it, but this is about as far as the agreement goes. Ultimately, the “pattern” we follow is primarily a concoction of human judgment, sanctified by traditional observance and consecrated by partisan prejudice. To “study,” as used by partisan preachers, means to “search the scriptures” to work out additional arguments in defense of that for which the party contends. Spiritual principles are reduced to rigid formulas. We approach God by a rigidly prescribed set of stairs which we climb by our own power, rather than humbling ourselves before God that he may lift us by his power (James 4:10). We are saved by faith— not works— but we cannot be saved without works, by which faith is demonstrated.

Orthodoxy and Reform

[Essay]

Every movement to reform religious thinking and practice has terminated in the formation of another sect. The reason behind this tendency is analyzed. While faith must be expressed in forms adapted to each age, culture, and place, such forms tend to become inflexible and serve as a barrier to further reformation. Reformers are radicals and non-conformists and are historically rejected by their contemporaries, only to be revered by subsequent generations. Reformation is a continuous process. Consequently, every generation will witness the struggle between orthodoxy and reform. While the forms of expressing faith are an outgrowth of the anxious concerns of honest men for serving the needs of their generation, binding these upon men as the will of God is an unwarranted usurpation of authority. It is a mistake, however, for reformers to reject all current forms simply because certain ones confuse the will of God with those forms. The non-instrumental “Churches of Christ” have, for example, reduced all religious experience to simple formulas: “five steps to salvation” and “five acts of worship.” The wrong lies in binding these forms upon others as the will of God and un-Christianizing those of past centuries who never discovered such formulas. While none of the so-called “five acts of worship” are ever referred to as such in the new covenant scriptures, to abandon such forms would merely render us helpless in our effort to express the will of God. The church of God must be adapted to meet the needs of those in all times and climes. While Jesus Christ is the same, the times in which we live today are not. Orthodoxy creates a new “faithfulness” with the passage of years. As a usurper of the throne room of the mind it has been the bane of all reformatory movements.

With Simple Joy

[Essay]

Religion, like a river, becomes tinged with the culture through which it wends its way, as may be seen clearly in the contrast between primitive Christianity and contemporary. Our pattern is a person, and we need to recapture the true sense of being in Him. We need to be a simple people, fashioned not according to the world, but refashioning the world. If we recapture the simplicity of the early church, we may help restore its unity.

Full Speed Ahead

[Essay]

As “Service” was the guiding star in the career of Harry Grattidge, Captain of the Queen Elizabeth, so must it be in the lives of those who have enlisted on the Ship of Zion. We must think in terms of vocation rather than vacation. By fragmenting and departmentalizing our lives (often making Christianity a one day a week proposition) we split our own personalities and lose the purpose and continuity of life. We are obsessed with the idea of more leisure time and social security. There can be no retirement from the Lord's service. We must either wear the armor or give up the fight. The religious world is looking for leadership, but we cannot lead while plagued with division and schism. The restoration of the ancient order and spirit is not complete. We have not finished our task!

Prophet and Priest

[Essay]

While the early function of the priest was to assure correct observance of ritual, that of the prophet was to assure a correct attitude of heart. In the absence of the prophet we tend to adopt attitudes that lead to sterility. We need a "prophetic vision" for our day, as the current status of the disciple brotherhood will reflect. We share a common background of regarding ourselves as the only sincere religionists, concluding that only the unreasonable or imbecile would fail to see everything exactly as we did. With regard to those within our own movement with whom we differed, they were either hobbyists or sectarian, depending on whether they opposed what we had or had what we opposed. The "faithful church" fallacy constantly betrays us into trusting in our own righteousness. We are simply not identical with the church of the New Testament. The "Church of Christ" does not date back beyond the 1906 U.S. census. The primitive church had no name except a common noun reflecting relationship. None of us is identical in doctrine with the scriptures, otherwise all study should cease! Our distinctiveness relies not on revelation but upon our interpretation of that revelation. We need to recover not the particulars of the early church but the spirit by which it was animated. We will not attain to the ideal while in the flesh but we must press on while we trust in Him for our salvation.

Spiritual Insight

[Essay]

Regarding the relationship of the Holy Spirit to the written word, there are two extreme views: (1) that the Holy Spirit is merely a retired impartial observer, and (2) that the Spirit reveals new truths to individuals regarding pressing problems. Offers an alternative view relative to the person and work of the Holy Spirit. Observes that many a man carries a Bible in his pocket who does not have Jesus in his heart. Eternal life does not rest in knowing the scriptures but in knowing Jesus. We must allow our hearts and lives to be involved in the spiritual until previously undiscovered truths burst upon our hearts with enlightenment that will permit exploration into treasures of wisdom and glory we have never before realized.

The Rim of the Wheel

[Essay]

Compares the relationship of Christians to that of a wheel — bound to Christ, bound to each other, and sustained in our diversity by love (Col. 3:14).

The Inaugural Address

[Essay]

The kingdom of heaven is the rule of heaven exercised by the Son of God. Its inception corresponds to the coronation of Jesus in heaven, announced by Simon Peter. In his inaugural address, Peter defined the nature of the kingdom and gave notice that a new dispensation had begun. This address must constitute the touch stone by which the Kingdom is to be measured in all ages. The materials of Christianity are seven facts, the seven pillars upon which the Christian economy rests. Those who accepted these facts accepted the faith.

Preaching the Word in Writing

[Essay]

Writing allows each succeeding generation to build upon the foundation of previously discovered truth. While the restoration movement was promoted by the creative writing of Alexander Campbell and others, that creativity has been curbed and the movement has foundered in the literary doldrums due to a loss of its original reason for existence. The movement has become a monument, giving lip-service to restoration while practicing retroaction. Only free men can write freely and we are no longer free, since our father chose division as their solution to innovation, rendering our plea for unity ineffective. Yet that plea can be re-launched by writing if it is relevant to the people of our day. Such relevancy will come from a foundation of knowledge of God, a knowledge of the Holy Spirit, and of the revelation of God. Regarding the later we must not accept the word of men as the word of God (e.g., Joseph Smith, Mary Baker Eddy, etc.) or accept the word of God as the word of men (the sin of liberalism miscalled). We need men with the pen of a ready scribe (historians, writers of prose, playwrights, poets, commentators) to present the message of salvation to a neo-pagan world. We need men of courage and ability to storm and recapture the surrendered bastions of literature. We must bring into useful subjection to our Lord every legitimate skill of those who love him.

The Ultimate Conquest

Relates the story of the fall of the geeardee (a term coined from Rev. 12:3) from Ouranos as a result of a battle with Michael after the Prince attempted to usurp the privilege of occupying the Right Hand, which was ultimately reserved for the Logos. Tells how the Pneuma brought order out of Chaos and how He made the first and secondary images and placed them in Paradisia; how the geeardee, through the power of morpheo, seduced the two images, resulting in their being cast out of Paradisia, whereupon the geeardee proclaimed his sovereignty over Atmos and resolved to thwart HIS purpose, unaware of the power of Agape which HE was manifesting toward the images. Upon learning that HE had promised to send Logos to share the estate of the images, the geeardee set about to thwart that plan through the use of thanatos, a plan that ultimately fails. After the Logos begins his reign of conquest, the geeardee enflamed the Ekklesia with the spirit of Party, but Agape is eventually discovered to be the antidote against which the geeardee has no effective counter-measure, assuring Agape's ultimate triumph.

Pentecost

Pentecost occurred seven weeks after the Passover. At the time of the slaying of the Jewish passover lamb, Christ, our passover, was slain. Forty days afterward he returned to heaven to be Christed or anointed. On Pentecost, an announcement of his inauguration was made in Jerusalem by the Holy Spirit. Pentecost was the beginning of the Messianic Reign. It was the birthday of the church, and it was on the first day of the week. There will be no repetition of the Pentecostal demonstration, since it marked the gathering of the firstfruits and the first fruits come at the beginning of the harvest— not scattered periodically through it.

The Three Births

[Essay]

To share in the salvation to be revealed at the end of time we must enter three domains— the natural, the spiritual, and the eternal kingdoms— each of which is entered by birth through the process of delivery— from the body of the mother, from the body of sin, and from the body of the earth, respectively. We thus come forth from the womb, the baptism, and the tomb. Life begins at the point of trusting faith, but there is a difference between life through Christ and life with Christ. The later is the state into which we enter through baptism. Ours is now eternal life in embryonic state. Our spirits have been redeemed but our bodies have only been purchased— they must be redeemed at the resurrection. To partake of the eternal life of Christ (which is to partake of his flesh and blood) we must be born again.

The Two Great Foes

[Essay]

The two great foes to the preaching of the cross in all ages are Legalism and Liberalism. Legalism is best seen in that advanced by the Judaizers of the first century. Liberalism in every century has been but Gnosticism attired in a garb attractive to the time and place. The most effective antidote to legalism is the re-affirmation of justification on the basis of faith and the possession of the indwelling Spirit as the basis of fellowship with God and his children. Gnosticism (for which the author provides an overview) contrasted the God of the old covenant (a God of wrath) with the new covenant God (a God of love). Proclaiming matter to be evil, it rejected outright the incarnation and the resurrection of Jesus Christ. The Apostle John, who wrote primarily to save the church from disintegration under the impact of Gnosticism, referred to those who deny the incarnation as antichrists. When the church is confronted with such teaching today it must reaffirm the testimony of the witnesses upon which faith is predicated. Eternal life is a person. The purpose of testimony is to produce fellowship, a correct understanding of which is the most important thing when the foundations of the faith are threatened. To walk in the light of love, as God is love, is to share in the common life of the Spirit. Legalism seeks to lift man up to the level of God by his own bootstraps, whereas Liberalism seeks to pull Jesus down to the level of man by its own bookstraps.

The Moment of Truth

[Essay]

Asserts that “the moment of truth” has arrived for the forces of orthodoxy, then files five specific indictments against “The Church of Christ” as it exists in the U.S.: (1) It has abandoned the purpose of the restoration movement. (2) It is out of touch with the spiritually intellectual climate of this generation. (3) It is a victim of its own parochialism, avoiding the ecumenical discussions of the day. (4) Its members profess to deplore creeds but are among the most creed-ridden of religious movements. (5) Every one of its factions claims to “speak where the Bible speaks” and denies that any of the others do. Asserts that a reformation of the movement is essential if it is to regain relevance. Charges that brethren in “The Church of Christ” employ the written word to defeat the plan, purpose, and prayer of the Living Word. The battle to save the restoration movement from itself must be fought upon the ground of scriptural interpretation. Announces a plan to change the content for Mission Messenger in 1965 from “The Living Pattern” to “The Twisted Scriptures” in which to deal with those scriptures quoted and applied for the purpose of separating and segregating brethren from each other.

The Divine Provisions

[Essay]

In order to bring man into a fellowship perfected in love, God has provided him with an object of faith, a source of knowledge and a sphere of labor. The object of faith is a person — not a proposition. While many have difficulty distinguishing between the scriptures and the Savior, the purpose of scripture is to point to Jesus as the Life. While the new covenant scriptures set forth a new way of serving God, there are men in every generation who want to make them a “written code”— a new law as tacked on to Christ. The new covenant scriptures are not a law of God imposed but the will of God exposed. Their purpose is to help us develop that divine nature which will freely and automatically respond in every situation with the divine answer. God’s called ones constitute a new body. One need never join anything after God adds him to the church in order to function acceptably and walk well-pleasing before God.

The Peaceful Harvest

[Essay]

An exposition of Hebrews 12:11. Observes that it is unfortunate that “discipline” has come to have the connotation of punishment since the word means training— instruction given to develop a well-balanced life. All true discipline looks toward the future. The sacrifice of present preference for future good is justifiable only because of the coming reward. Concludes that the approved life is “the disciplined life.” One cannot be a soldier for Christ and keep his civilian status.

Queries to the Editor

[Essay]

In response to queries from readers with regard to his plea for unity the author asserts that (1) the unity of believers is the condition upon which the world will be led to Christ; (2) our task is not to restore a movement but to recapture the ideal of God; restoring the spirit of restoration is to apply to ourselves the remedy recommended for others under the same circumstances; (4) the restoration movement disintegrated when our fathers attempted to maintain purity of doctrine by separation from brethren; (5) debates are divisive in nature, intensify party feelings, make objective search for truth difficult, proceed on the fallacy of “the loyal church,” and demonstrate their futility by their fruits; (6) serving God’s purpose, not “success,” should be our goal; (7) those who regard their party as the one body regard the author as a dangerous heretic; (8) every attempted reform in the past has resulted in another division; (9) urges that everyone stay where he is, thus avoiding the formation of a new party; (10) a cultural and intellectual transformation is taking place in the more extreme segments of the disciple brotherhood; (11) seminaries and parochial schools are supported to defend a partisan position which limits academic freedom and their leaders are hired to keep the schools in line with that position; (12) in God’s tomorrow unity will be realized.

Questions to the Editor

[Essay]

Responses to questions related to the pleas which the author has been making for the unity of believers: (1) what do you believe about the constituency of the church? (2) do you make a distinction between the church and “The Church of Christ”? (3) Do you consider that there may be Christians in the various sects? (4) Does the new testament ever imply that anyone who was a member of the church of Christ belonged to a denomination at the same time? (5) What must one do to become a child of God? (6) Do you regard as in the fellowship those who have been sprinkled under the sincere conviction that this is scriptural baptism? (7) Is it possible that a sincere person who is sprinkled in the belief that it is baptism is a Christian in essence? (8) Are you not inconsistent in drawing a line of fellowship at baptism? (9) How do you regard those who believe in Jesus as the Son of God but who do not as yet understand the necessity of being immersed? (10) Does not the word for “begotten” in 1 John 5:1 embrace the whole process of birth? (11) Do you think that one who has not been immersed into Christ will be lost? (12) Is this not the same as implying that God may save some in their disobedience? (13) Do you think one must know at the time of baptism that it is for the remission of sins in order for it to be valid? (14) Is not “remission of sins” the design of baptism? (15) Can one become a child of God who does not believe God’s word about baptism for the remission of sins? (16) What do you recommend we should do to restore a proper feeling of unity among the believers? (17) Is it possible to retain one’s spiritual integrity and participate in meetings sponsored by various factions? (18) Is this an indication that you have become “soft” and chosen the easy way out? (19) What do you consider to be our most serious problem today?

Another Gospel

[Essay]

Examines the manner in which Gal. 1:6-8 has been twisted to promote and defend schism and division among the children of God. Those who mistake unity with conformity and predicate fellowship upon endorsement, brand as “another gospel” every interpretation which is divergent from their own. Cites correspondence with an elder of the “Fifth and Highland Church of Christ” as a case in point. Then provides a thorough exegesis of the passage under consideration, noting that believers in the days of the apostles were in error on many points (and gives examples), but they were not charged with “preaching another gospel.” Freedom from error is not a condition of salvation, else all men would be damned. No honest opinion held by one who is in Christ and who respects his lordship is “another gospel.” To make one’s standing with God depend not upon surrender to Jesus but upon standing right on other things is dangerously near to perverting the gospel.

Gospel and Doctrine

[Essay]

The second in a series of articles designed to examine passages used to cause division in the family of God. Examines the word “gospel” from the standpoints of etymology, scripture, and scholarship. Quotes from Alexander Campbell and William Hurte in support of his conclusion that the gospel is always addressed to unbelievers, never to believers. Expounds upon the various Greek words used to refer to the proclamation of the gospel. Quotes from C. H. Dodd who, like Alexander Campbell before him, distinguishes between the facts proclaimed as the gospel and the ethical teaching designed for the instruction of believers. The gospel consists of seven facts, epitomized in three — the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus. Examines the use of Rom. 1:15 as an objection to the above. Also examines Rom. 1:17 which is also used by some to support the idea that the gospel contains all God has revealed. Notes that it is a tragedy to interpret the apostolic epistles in such a way as to negate the apostolic gospel. Concludes that our brethren need the grace to distinguish between things that differ.

Peace or Sword?

[Essay]

Responds to a correspondent who complains that in all his writings the author constantly stresses peace and decries division as a sin, whereas Jesus said: “I came not to send peace, but a sword.” Cites numerous biblical texts in support of the conclusion that division among brethren is wrong. Then examines the statement of Jesus in Matthew 10:34-36, noting that the context was a speech made to apostles prior to launching them into a hostile world. When a hate-filled world is confronted with the demand of Jesus for unconditional surrender, antagonism will know no bounds. Peace was not to be broadcast. It was to be the product of personal faith. Surely Jesus did not come to “sow discord among brethren” and thus become an abomination unto God. It is warped and twisted reasoning that prompts men to take comfort in our sorry, sinful state of division by making it appear that it was the mission of Jesus to create such a state of tumult, turmoil, and pandemonium. Concludes with a personal pledge to labor to expose every misuse of the words of the Holy Spirit as well as the ugliness of orthodoxy which proclaims unity and practices division.

Contrary to the Doctrine

[Essay]

An examination of Romans 16:17 as it has been twisted to create, condone, or continue division. Observes that when our application of the word of God produces the very opposite condition of what it was intended to produce there is something faulty with our application. This text is applied by partisans to every honest dissenter from their factional programs, whether they be Bible classes, individual cups, “The Herald of Truth,” institutional orphan homes, or instrumental music. In every instance the factional test is “the doctrine learned.” The context of the passage shows that “the doctrine” is the teaching that division among brethren is a sin. Anyone who disregards this doctrine should be isolated so his factional attitude cannot divide the body. Nothing in the commands “mark them” or “avoid” indicates public or corporate action at all. To employ this passage to project division makes us the ones to be marked and avoided. The author pledges to allow no one to control his thinking down here who cannot assume responsibility for it up there.

Not of Faith

[Essay]

An exegesis of Romans 14:23 and an examination of the manner in which it is abused in an attempt to prove the utter sinfulness of whatever one happens to oppose. Demonstrates that the word “faith” in this passage has reference to personal conviction (to be kept between oneself and God) rather than the faith which saves— that which is to be proclaimed and shared.

Are You a Liberal?

Examines the use of the word “liberal” by partisan leaders to frighten those who would be disposed to investigate beyond the limits of the party walls. Obviously if everyone is a liberal no one is. As a label the word has lost its power of distinction so that the one who uses it must define the word. The author proceeds to list seven “definitions” of what it may mean to be a liberal and pleads guilty to each.

Analysis of Apostasy

An analysis of the biblical use of the word “apostasy” and its abuse by partisans who apply the term to every honest non-conformist. Such partisans first confuse their interpretations with the scriptures and then argue for the authority of their interpretations as scripture. The Greek word is used only twice in the new covenant scriptures: (1) Acts 21:21, where it means “to fall away,” and (2) 2 Thes. 2:3, where Paul says the return of the Lord will be preceded by a “falling away.” The truth is that the Holy Spirit never once used the term with regard to any brother in the Lord. One is not an apostate simply because he cannot conscientiously concur with the orthodox position of a party. Men can be mistaken without being malicious. They can fail to understand without falling away from Jesus. Concludes with references to the current revolt against the sin of oversimplification which makes the adherents of one faction “the good guys” and everyone else “the bad guys.” The forces of reform place the relationship in Christ ahead of the things about which the children argue.

The Unrecognized Unity

[Essay]

The unity for which Jesus prayed might come and we would not recognize it, just as one cannot tell from observation when the kingdom of God comes. Perhaps it will be in us in a very real sense but free from show and overt demonstration. The unity for which Jesus prayed is not a project of conventions nor a product of councils. It cannot be voted in, voted out, or voted on. Unity will never come by legislation. It is a fruit of the Spirit and fruit grows naturally from the substance absorbed by deep roots. When hearts yearn for each other with a deep and abiding affection, when brotherhood is conditioned upon common Fatherhood and fellowship is recognized as the result of mutual sonship, unity will flow forth as a broad and tranquil stream—the unity of the Spirit! Such unity will continue although unrecognized by factional proponents who dogmatically insist that it must come only by surrender to them instead of to Jesus.

The Pervading Silence

[Essay]

The author reveals that his offer in the October issue of 1964 to appear on the college lectureship of any of the Church of Christ colleges to submit to questioning by the faculty remains unanswered. Expresses hope that the time will come when he will have the opportunity to set forth his own position and to defend it before audiences which have heard attacks made which were unfair and unjust.

Walking in the Light

[Essay]

An analysis of 1 John 1:7 shows that the “light” to which John refers is the “love” which God is. This excludes knowledge of or obedience to God’s will, since none can understand or do God’s will perfectly— which would be required for fellowship if light referred to knowledge or performance. Eternal life is not extension of time but expression of love. Love cannot be achieved— by human striving. It is a gift from God, poured out into our hearts by the Holy Spirit, thus enabling the divine nature to become incarnate in us as it was in Jesus. One who loves as God loves abides in the light, demonstrates sonship, has life, is of the truth, enables God to dwell in him, is freed from the torment of fear. To be without that love leaves one in darkness, blinds one to the truth, shows the fatherhood of Satan, is still in the domain of death, is a murderer, and does not know God. Considers the traditional interpretation placed on 1 John 1:7 as one of the most dangerous ever palmed off on unsuspecting men and women. It is subversive of the Spirit and a scandal to the church of God. That interpretation makes fellowship contingent upon living up to the creedal interpretations of the party of which one is a member.

Ecumenical Encounter

[Essay]

Observes that in our day many leaders in sectarian circles deplore division and are engaging in dialogue toward unity. But the heirs of the restoration movement are conspicuous by their absence. They hardly know what is transpiring in the world immediately about them. We spend our time talking to ourselves about others, engaging always in monologue, never in dialogue. In 1866, David Lipscomb and Tolbert Fanning encouraged dialogue with Baptists in the hope of laboring and worshipping as one people. But if Lipscomb were alive today, he would not be allowed to teach in the school that bears his name. We have become sectarian, factional, and frightened. We would not even let our “restoration fathers” in the door.

Receive Him Not

[Essay]

Provides an exegesis of 2 John 10, 11. Examines the factional interpretation of the passage as used to pry apart the living stones in the temple of God— an interpretation which makes unity impossible. It would have us insanely conclude that to greet a brother who differs with us about cups, classes, colleges, or collectives for the care of orphans is to become a participant in some “evil deed.” Reputable scholars all believe that John was writing to counter-act the effects of Gnosticism which taught that only those who could “go beyond” in insight into the mystical infinite wisdom of God could be delivered from the evil of the material universe. Gnostics denied the possibility of the incarnation. John identifies “this doctrine” as the teaching that Jesus is the Christ.” Those who apply it to controversial matters over which they differ with others, and by which their party is identified, are utterly inconsistent in their application of the text. They will welcome such a one into their assemblies (contrary to John’s prohibition) who they say brings not “this doctrine” yet refuse to call on him to lead in prayer, based upon their application of the same text. Such a position is senseless and preposterous. Under no circumstance should this passage be applied to those who believe that Jesus is the Christ.

Conformity or Diversity

[Essay]

If there is unity of any kind among free men, it must be a unity in diversity. Not one of those who oppose unity in diversity is a member of a congregation where every person understands every scripture alike. Each party simply agrees on a factional test which it has made the supreme issue. Upon every other matter the greatest latitude is permitted. If unity were by intellectual agreement it could never produce the peace that passes understanding. Ours is a unity of the Spirit. Harmony is a fruit of unity, not the reverse. Oneness is not exact likeness. In the primitive church there was a diversity of gifts, functions, understanding, knowledge, customs and opinions or varied beliefs. Romans 14 is given over to showing that men should treat each other as brethren in spite of differing personal convictions. We need not agree with each other upon everything either to become brothers or to continue as such. Harmony does not consist of seeing everything alike on the understanding level but of receiving each other on the faith level. To predicate unity upon understanding is to sublimate faith to human knowledge. 1 Cor. 1:10 simply means to desist from factional identifications. Having the same mind refers to purpose (what they were to try to do), and having the same judgment refers to method (how to accomplish it). Toleration is not endorsing something you think is wrong. It is simply enduring one who thinks it is right.

The Baptism of John

[Essay]

Through a series of questions and answers examines the nature of John's baptism and its relationship to the re-immersion of those mentioned in Acts 19. Concludes that this passage does not furnish scriptural authority for baptizing a second time all whose knowledge of the ordinance, and the blessings accruing therefrom, was imperfect at the first. Observes that the men in Ephesus were likely baptized by Apollos at a time when he knew only the baptism of John. John's baptism ceased to be valid at the time authority was transferred to the Son. Paul's question "Unto what then were you baptized?" demonstrates that he had no concept of "unimmersed believers" in the fellowship. It was being baptized under another name or commission which rendered baptism ineffective.

Our Abiding Heritage

[Essay]

An address to the World Convention of Christian Churches in which the author affirms the abiding nature of the word of God as revealed in scripture— authoritative for our lives. That Jesus is Lord is a fact, demonstrable by credible testimony. To accept him as Savior may be purely selfish; to admit his Lordship is an act of surrender. This is the reason that in response to the Good News both belief and baptism are involved. We cannot show that Jesus is Lord unto us unless we do what he says. Yet we cannot do what he says unless he has spoken and we know what he said. The scriptures are authoritative because they constitute the word of the Lord. If we do not accept them, we cannot affirm that he is Lord. This thesis of course is questioned by contemporary scholars who regard the new covenant scriptures as a collection and compilation of the traditions of the church, resulting from the work of the church. But it was the gospel— the seed of the kingdom, the word of God— which produced the church. Those who regard the new covenant scriptures not as the voice of the Shepherd but the bleating of the sheep use the rays of their own enlightenment to burn and destroy our greatest source of strength and hope. Our task is to steer safely between the Scylla of liberalism and the Charybdis of legalism.

Withdraw Yourself

Provides extensive historical background into the circumstances in Thessalonica which prompted Paul's command in 2 Thess. 3:6 to "withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly." Points out that while this passage has been twisted and made to serve as a weapon in the arsenal of factionalism with which to hound honest dissenters out of every faction. Denies that what is commonly called "withdrawal of fellowship" is countenanced or even considered in this verse. The context clearly shows that Paul uses the phrase "walking disorderly" to designate the idleness into which some had drifted. The brethren are commanded to refrain from extending hospitality to such a brother— to take note of that man (individually, not corporately) and have no company with him. But he is to be counted as a brother— not as an enemy.

Statement of Aim

A re-statement of the author's aims and the methods by which he proposes to attain them. Proposes to (1) actively pursue the unity of all believers in order to bring the world into a state of allegiance to Jesus; (2) recapture the spirit of restoration— not restore the movement of predecessors; (3) work within the frame of reference of the restoration movement; (4) focus on splinter parties growing out of that movement; (5) recover oneness through affection, association, consultation, and consecration; (6) recapture a proper sense of relative values; (7) encourage the rejection of all false tests of fellowship; (8) seek peace and pursue it relentlessly wherever the Spirit opens up a door.

End of an Era

For reasons the author states are purely sentimental, he laments the demise of The American Christian Review after 110 years of publication. Provides a brief overview of the history of the paper, from its founder, Benjamin Franklin, to its last editor, Bessie K. Sommer. After undergoing two name changes, the paper eventually reverted to its original name.

The One Faith

While it is common to hear the one faith described as “the system of faith including the whole New Testament,” such a definition is nowhere to be found in scripture. The faith by which we are justified was fully proclaimed by Peter on Pentecost and nothing was ever added to it as a basis for justification. Not one apostolic epistle was written to introduce men to the faith or to induct them into it. The one faith is not a compilation of laws or letters. It is the firm conviction that Jesus is the Son of God and that he was put to death for our transgressions and raised for our justification. The term “like precious faith” has nothing to do with those in the faith agreeing upon every detail of understanding. The “faith once delivered” is not the entire body of new covenant scriptures but that which produces our common salvation. Faith is the foundation of the Christian life and love is its embodiment. Faith has to do with our begetting; doctrine has to do with our development. To confuse faith, which all must have to be in Christ, with knowledge of the word, which all must acquire as they grow in Christ, is a tragic error. The apostolic letters do not constitute the new covenant. The gospel produces the covenantal relationship while doctrine has to do with the conduct of those who are in Christ. The gospel was to make children of God; the apostolic doctrine was to make the children of God better. The apostolic letters are not a pattern or blueprint. Our pattern is a person! Christianity is not Jesus pointing us to a book as a pattern, but a book pointing us to Jesus as our pattern. Since doctrine must be filtered through human rational processes, it cannot serve as a condition for fellowship or as a test of one's relationship to the Father.

Except They Be Agreed

[Essay]

Provides a background for the prophetic work of Amos, then examines the context of Amos 3:3. Points out that the day has come when the iniquities of both Israel and Judah and their judgment have met. Since this is the very nature of divine justice the prophet appeals to natural reactions to illustrate it. He reasons that for every effect there is a cause and the cause may be determined by examining the effect. Notes that the word "agreed" has nothing to do with the attitude, purpose or nature of two people walking together. Rather the agreement is to meet and walk together. The only unity possible on this earth to thinking people is unity in diversity, the kind of unity that exists between the perfect Lord and our imperfect selves.

Playing It Safe

[Essay]

Decries the actions of those who prefer to "play it safe" within the confines of sectarianism rather than risk everything for the sake of unity. "Playing it safe" is the very opposite of the nature of the Christian concept. He who restricts his sharing to those who see everything as he does and who refuses to associate with those who disagree is not following Jesus at all. Saul of Tarsus suffered the loss of all things. He refused to recognize any creed but Christ or any test of fellowship except Christian character based upon faith. He held that all that was necessary to join us as brothers was just what it took to join us to Jesus. God needs preachers and elders who will not “play it safe.”

Keep the Door Open

[Essay]

A response to an editorial in Firm Foundation by Reuel Lemmons in which Lemmons decries division within the restoration movement, urges the use of dialogue as a tool to forge the bonds of unity, and expresses hope for the fruitful possibility of discussing points of difference with mutual respect for the conscientious beliefs of each other. Commends Brother Lemmons for the tone of his editorial but notes that he espouses the fallacy that the faction for which he is a chief spokesman is “the Lord’s church” to the exclusion of the other factions. Observes that while in 1962 Brother Lemmons wrote that “Brethren are united only when they see alike,” it is refreshing to hear him now say that it is ridiculous to think that differences of opinion indicate division. Proposes meeting for open dialogue with Brother Lemmons in a city of his choosing.

The Works of Darkness

[Essay]

Examines the use of Eph. 5:11 to lend sanction to strife and disunion among brethren. Observes that the whole tenor of the Ephesian letter is against such a forced interpretation, and that the apostle would not deliberately write an epistle to prove that we are one body, only to splinter and shiver it to bits with one sentence. We have come to mistake our brethren for barbarians and cannot tell the difference between an honest difference of opinion and a barren work of darkness. We think every error is a sin simply because every sin is an error. The works of darkness in the context of Eph. 5:11 are the perverted practices of pagans — not the rationalizations of the saints. Works of darkness are the deeds of those who abide in darkness. The adjacent context describes those works categorically as fornication, uncleanness, and covetousness. Those who acknowledge the sovereignty of Jesus over their lives make mistakes, but they make them in Christ. They are imperfect in Christ— they are not in the darkness nor of the darkness. Concludes with a plea for men of integrity to examine anew every scripture which has been used to foster and foment division.

The Conflict of the Ages

[Essay]

The two great forces in conflict with each other in the moral universe are the kingdoms of darkness and light. This conflict began in heaven motivated by pride, and will continue until the utter defeat of one or the other. Man was created for the purpose of glorifying God, thus free to choose between moral alternatives. For man to glorify God he had to freely choose to be obedient, which required a test of his willingness. The test was a positive, rather than a moral one. Deceived by the Enemy, the animal man triumphed over the spiritual and man was thrust into the conflict of the ages. God determined to vindicate his right to govern the universe by means of the cross, which became the ultimate power struggle, the crossroads of history, and the crux of destiny. On the cross Christ subjugated the cosmic powers and authorities, bringing them under his authority. But they have not yet been annihilated. We must face them in the war of the ages, but in Christ we are assured of victory. We have available to us the same transcendent power which raised him from the dead— the power of the unconquerable life. The devices of the devil cannot be overcome by natural power unaided. They require superhuman assistance. The great proof of the devil's existence and success is the fact that the majority of intellectuals do not believe he is real. In our day, even the theological world has hailed as deliverers those who, under the guise of rescuing us from outmoded expressions, have left the world suspended in mid-air by a rope which is not attached to anything above. God has been reduced to some innate principle which results in man worshipping himself. In the final analysis, both scientists and theologians and common folk must end up walking by faith. Where their walk will take them depends upon the direction of their faith.

Is God Dead?

[Essay]

Although some philosophers of our so-called post-Christian age have declared that God is dead, and certain clergymen have rushed to conduct a funeral service for the deceased, the author offers five reasons for his own belief in God: (1) Purpose. Posits the logical postulate for creation by intelligent design. (2) Power. Notes that the material universe is subject to universal power which is superior to all that constitutes the material. (3) Plan. A universe such as ours could never have originated except by application of intelligent design coupled with the necessary power to produce the design and start it operating in pre-determined harmony and synchronization. (4) Putative. Man deems there is a God because the demands of nature and reason cry out there must be a God. (5) Personal. Asserts belief in God because of personal experience with God. Relates the personal story of having invited Jesus to come into his life.

The One Foundation

[Essay]

Every religious system has a taproot which serves as its anchor. Christianity proceeds upon the premise that at a certain juncture God revealed himself to man. Unlike Judaism, Christianity did not begin with a book but with a baby. It is not a revelation from God but a revelation of God. It is not a system of abstract truths arrived at by the power of logic, or by inductive or deductive reasoning. Instead it centers around the birth, life, and death of a person and our relationship to that person. The fact that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of the Living God, is the taproot upon which the Christian system rests. However, there is a great deal of difference in the revealed fact of Christ who is the foundation and the facts about Christ as a foundation. Jesus was anointed by God as prophet, priest, and king. All that is necessary to reconcile men unto God— to free from ignorance, guilt, and enslavement— is invested in these three offices. Belief in the proposition that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God, brings about regeneration— an entirely new attitude toward God and man is produced in the hearts of all believers. That which undermines faith in the Messiahship or Sonship of Jesus sweeps away man's only hope and is destructive of man's eternal welfare.

Modern Man and Belief

[Essay]

Responds to the question, "Can modern man really believe in Jesus?" Maintains that all men, modern or otherwise, are led to belief in the same way in response to testimony. To reject testimony one must (1) attack the character of the witnesses, (2) challenge the competency of the witnesses, or (3) show that the testimony is contradictory. Until “modern man” examines the testimony concerning Jesus and is able to give justifiable grounds for rejection of it, he proceeds wholly upon the basis of prejudice. We have a sufficient number of witnesses to establish the fact of Jesus. To reject those facts “modern man” must either prove them to be persons of perfidy, or that they were incompetent or that their testimony is contradictory. To reject Jesus on any other grounds is, in effect, to cancel all history from his life. Notes that the term “modern man” does not refer to a man in a certain era of history, but to a certain kind of man—one who is a man of science who professes to live by knowledge and without faith. Concludes with a personal apology for believing in Jesus, observing that when “modern man” rejects that which has been accepted for centuries upon the basis of evidence, there is as much reason for questioning the motivation of “modern man” as for being suspicious of the evidence.

The Divine Revelation

[Essay]

An essay on the meaning and nature of divine revelation. Examines the contention that the canonized form of scripture was produced by the church. Notes that Rome employs this reasoning to establish the absolute authority of the church, whereas Protestants use it to deny that there is any absolute authority for the church. Observes that the Bible was written to the church, not by the church. The books were not accepted as canonical because the church had produced them but because it had received them. Canonicity did not create authority or increase it, but simply recognized it. Predicts an increasing disregard and irreverence for the sacred scriptures as men continue to confuse liberty with license. If Jesus and the apostles misrepresented the origin of the apostolic message, we cannot rely upon the content of it. The Bible is not an authorized collection of books, but a collection of authorized books. With regard to a “theory of inspiration” acknowledges no exclusive theory, but observes that one could be mistaken about the nature or means of revelation without affecting the fact of it. Asserts that the skepticism concealed behind clerical garb rests entirely upon the assumption that God has not revealed himself — either because he is non-existent or because he is powerless or indifferent. Concludes that if God could reveal his will but would not, he would not be God; if he would but could not, he could not be God.

Unity in Christ

[Essay]

A speech delivered at the Hartford forum on unity. From Ephesians 1:3-11 observes that unity is the purpose, will, pleasure, and design of God. Consequently, unity will come because the divine purpose cannot be frustrated. Concludes that the certainty of unity may be predicated upon rationalization, philosophy, or faith. Whatever God ordains as his will must be done as his will ordains— this is the divine imperative. What God projects as a design of divine purpose, he will perfect as a sign of the divine pleasure. God allows no abortion of his plans. While it is not ours to say how unity will be brought about, it will not be achieved by creeds, concordats or conventions. The unity we seek is the unity of the Spirit— produced by the Spirit. It must come!

Divisive Party Loyalties

[Essay]

An address to the Seventh Consultation on the Internal Unity of Christian Churches. Expounds upon three reasons why the party spirit is so heinous in God's eyes: (1) It supplants the cross of Christ as the force which makes unity possible and substitutes something else around which men must rally to be considered worthy. (2) It reduces the ordinances of God to mere functional rituals, making baptism the initiation into a party and rendering the table of the Lord a factional weapon of discipline. (3) It captivates the heart which should be the sacred citadel of the Holy Spirit, demanding allegiance to it as a test of loyalty to Jesus. Predicts that in this age of decaying values our future problems will not lie with brethren who have diverse convictions but with those who have none.

The Church of God

[Essay]

The Lord's church embraces every one of the Lord's people and its numerical strength cannot be ascertained. One becomes a child by adoption; he becomes a partisan by deduction elevated to dogmatism. Christian stature is measured by faith, whereas partisan attainment is measured by knowledge of the group requirements for fellowship. The real test of the non-partisan is his ability to ignore the artificial barriers and to associate freely with all his brethren.

The Life and the Joy

[Essay]

Expounds upon the joy that comes to those who share in the fellowship of the Spirit. The word koinonia means "sharing," not the sharing of things but of a common life. Whatever creates that common life creates fellowship, for fellowship is that life. Whatever makes us a child of God brings us into the fellowship, into the life we share with the Father. Thus it is silly to talk about fellowship as something we can extend or withdraw. One cannot even put a living chicken back into an egg. How can he think of putting a child of God out of the divine family? The expression “withdraw fellowship” is not in the Bible. To share in the common life does not mean that all will have knowledge or understanding equal to that of God or of each other. Factions which have pressed the life out of the sharing hold that standing with God depends upon being correct about the one thing that really counts, but that one thing differs with each party. To make fellowship a relationship to things is to squeeze the life out of it. Then it is no longer the life but the things that are held in common. The party becomes a corpse without life and without joy. Those who band together because they share in the same knowledge actually stay together because they share in the same ignorance.

The Supreme Court

[Essay]

All communication requires interpretation on the part of the receiving mind. Interpretation of divine revelation is the application of the thought processes of the human mind to the communication from the divine mind in an attempt to determine what is meant. Revelation is what God said, interpretation is what we think he meant by what he said. In civil matters, the Supreme Court is the authoritative interpreter of the meaning of the law. But God has authorized no official interpreter nor interpretation of divine revelation. In such matters the supreme court is the individual conscience.

Approach to Authority

To reach a solution to the problem of division among the heirs of the restoration movement we must go back to the initial division and heal the primary breach. Rather than engaging in partisan debate based on differing presuppositions regarding a philosophy of interpretation of scripture— a philosophy of interpretation based upon interpretation— the author proposes that we recognize the fact that we are all in Christ and members of one body by the new birth. Entreats that we not bind our deductions upon others farther than their own knowledge commends acceptance of them. Maintains that while the authority of Jesus is absolute, no human theory of it based upon deductions from scripture need be so. Suggests that the first thing we must do to heal the gaping wound is to (1) restore the right of every individual to interpret the Word of God for himself without the benefit of clergy and (2) make effective the function of congregational autonomy. One need not sacrifice his personal conviction about a thing to have brotherly love toward those who do not share his views about it. Our fathers excommunicated one another making a test of fellowship out of something God has not made a condition for salvation. We will continue to be divided until we return to the place where we first defended schism as the way of righteousness and restore a genuine sense of brotherhood. Our obligation to love all our brothers is not based upon silence but upon the repeated assertions of the One who died for the sins of us all.

Introduction to Worship

An examination of the words in the new covenant scriptures which are rendered “worship,” especially in the King James Version. Notes that proskuneo, the principal word for worship, is never rendered by any other word. Observes that (1) none of the words translated “worship” is ever applied to anything the assembled church does on the Lord’s Day; (2) the expression “the worship” is not in the new covenant scriptures; (3) the term “acts of worship” is not in the Bible; (4) Christianity has no sacred places, days or rituals. The very purpose of the teaching of Jesus was to show that every facet of life was to be worship rendered to God. True worship is when the spirit speaks to and meets with God. The place where God dwells is the human heart and he dwells in us in and through the Holy Spirit. The “many mansions” of John 14:2, 3 are the many hearts which have his commandments, keep them, and love him. True worship is the tuning of the heart to throb in harmony with the pulsation of the infinite.

Holy Places and Days

[Essay]

Any place where God touches human life is holy ground and no place is a sanctuary merely because it is a place. Early Christianity recognized that all one had was God’s when the heart was given to God. There was no “worship service” because all service was worship. Service to humanity, the relief of human suffering, the supplying of human need— this was the greatest expression of worship. Our compassion and mercy must be as full and free and as continuous as that of God. Nothing must ever become more hallowed than the provision for suffering humanity. The picture Jesus gave of the final judgment had nothing to do with liturgy, litany, rubric or ritual. Whether we have fed the hungry, given drink to the thirsty, received strangers, clothed the naked— this is the real test of true worship, not the kind rendered at a certain mountain or in a certain city. In Jesus there can be no separation between secular and sacred. It remains, therefore, that the only thing which is secular is sin! Jesus never ceased to worship God, nor should we.

The Church Christ Founded

[Essay]

Reports on an editorial in a Catholic journal in which a missionary in Japan told of being asked by an elderly man on a bus, “Whatever happened to that church Christ founded?” Notes that the Catholic editor showed how far short of the ideal of Christ is the Christian witness in Japan. The author lists four characteristics of the church that Christ founded: (1) Spirit-filled, (2) a community of daring adventurers, (3) vibrant with hope, and (4) a fellowship of the Spirit. Contrasts these characteristics with churches within the restoration movement. Closes with the words of the Catholic editor: “Christians today will not be known in any other way than were the first Christians about whom their neighbors were forced to exclaim: ‘See how they love one another.’”

Acts of Worship

[Essay]

Nothing we do when we assemble on the Lord’s Day is ever referred to as “worship” in the new covenant scriptures. The expression “the worship” does not occur in the Christian scriptures. There was no distinction between the spiritual and the secular in the primitive church. The whole body was offered as a living sacrifice and whatever was done in the body was worship. The breaking of bread was, at first, done daily and always as a part of a common meal. Gradually, over the centuries, the breach between the secular and the sacred widened and a special ritual supplanted the simplicity. Early disciples had no procedural form for their meetings. Expressions of inner adoration by outward demonstration were spontaneous. (The new covenant scriptures do not support the ideal of congregational singing.) All of us may worship the same God but in different ways. All worship is individual by nature. Forms of public expression of praise may be as varied as there are individuals and cultures. It is not external conformity but the indwelling Spirit which is vital to the divine-human relationship. It is righteousness, not ritual, which joins us to the Lord. All that we do in word or deed, whether assembled or alone, when done to revere God, is worship.

Worship and Money

[Essay]

Worship is the prostration of the heart, filled with a sense of dependency, before the presence of God, the reaching out of the inner self to draw God close and to draw close to God. In one in whom Christ dwells there is no distinction between what is God's and what is his. The artificial distinction between what the individual may do and what the church may do is like arguing what the arm may do apart from the body. The three-part division of "the work of the church" is an arbitrary arrangement, as is the idea of a church treasury. In many places men are taught that they must contribute every Lord's Day, regardless of the frequency with which they receive their income. There are those who teach that all charitable acts must be done "through the church" so that "the church will get the glory." All of these rules have grown out of interpretations of 1 Corinthians 16:1, 2, with other unrelated texts brought to bear. But (1) Paul states that giving was not a command; (2) those in Macedonia who were poor were not asked to give; (3) the church in Corinth was in existence for four years before asked to contribute; (4) it was a matter of congregational discretion as to whether they would participate; (5) the gift was voluntary— not an exaction of law. Most commentators agree that the money was collected at home and kept there until delivered to Paul’s messenger. By no means can “giving” be construed to be an “act of worship” and no such act was ever an identifying mark of “the Lord’s church.”

Twentieth Century Witness

[Essay]

After observing the need to be better equipped to meet the intellectual challenges to our faith by being engaged with our culture, examines the “God is dead” theology of Thomas J. J. Altizer. Makes observations regarding the irrelevancy of the response of “Churches of Christ” to this and other questions confronting the intellectuals of our day. Suggests seven things Churches of Christ must do if they are to have an impact upon thinking minds on college and university campuses: (1) become relevant to the lives and conflicts of men and women in our present world; (2) recapture the vital unity of the Spirit; (3) seek new ways of demonstrating the workability of our plea for unity in diversity; (4) be forthright in our dealings with the world and quit using propaganda as bait with a hook concealed; (5) free our missionaries on foreign fields from sectarian restraints; (6) follow Jesus into the world by infiltrating the neo-pagan intellectual world of our day; (7) recapture the word “witness” in our confrontation with the world.

The Dynamic of God

[Essay]

Expounds upon the four dimensional power of love as set forth in Ephesians 3:14-19 (from which the title of the bound volume of Mission Messenger for 1966, Deep Roots, was taken). Observes that God not only supplies a knowledge of what is required through his word, he supplies the strength to accomplish it through the power of the Spirit. That power is the power of Christ's own love. It is a love that is unlimited, that never stops to count the cost or to ask what the stakes are. One who knows this kind of love knows something that is beyond knowledge—it cannot be attained to merely by the study of books, not even a sacred book. It is irrational by every standard of judgment on earth. But to surrender to it is to have fulness of being. Love is the only power which can span the gaps of a broken fellowship. There is no limit to its faith, its hope, or its endurance.

Apples of Gold

[Essay]

An introduction to a series of essays to be published throughout the current year under the same title as this essay. Informs that the year will be devoted to a study of words used by the Holy Spirit. Further states that the design of the study is to edify the brethren by sharing with them the result of intensive research which seeks to lay hold upon the thoughts of God by grasping the words of God.

Example and Pioneer

[Essay]

According to 1 Peter 2:21, Christ left us an example after which to pattern our own lives. Each of us should measure our lives by His, not by another for whom we have admiration. In Hebrews 12:2 we are told that Jesus is the archegos or “author” of our faith. He marked the path, put up signs to warn of danger spots, and left encouraging notes along the way. Thus it is that Jesus marked out the trail and finished the course, showing what it means to have real trust in God.

Aprons and Overalls

[Essay]

Short essay in which the concept of humility is defined. It is observed that the Christian is to wear humility like a garment, “clothed with humility.” It is our badge of subjection, identifying us as slaves in the service of Christ.

Strategy for Peace

[Essay]

In the interest of inspiring a definite strategy for waging peace, six guidelines are suggested: (1) Acknowledge our guilt for perpetuating partisan principles and positions inherited from our fathers; (2) Restore the cross of Jesus to the center of all Christian concern; (3) Recapture the local autonomy of the congregation in truth as well as in theory; (4) Recognize that fellowship is not endorsement but a family relationship produced by the indwelling Spirit in children of God; (5) Begin at once to recognize both privately and publicly all of God’s children and our brethren; (6) Substitute meaningful dialogue for debate. We can unite in Christ without any of us giving up any truth he has ever held.

Paper Curtains

Observes that for brethren within many segments of “The Church of Christ” the kingdom of heaven is circumscribed by their factional fence, and their factional journals are used as paper curtains to assure that the only light that reaches those within is filtered through the party organ. But this type of tyranny is not limited to editors. In many areas the minister of the local “Church of Christ” is the self-appointed umpire for the index expurgatorius. To reach those inside one must go over or around the preacher, otherwise they will never know anything except what he wants them to know. All sectarianism is alike in attitude. It always uses the same old weapons— censorship, boycott, and threat of excommunication. But better days are coming. The Spirit is mightily at work! The day of sectarianism is doomed.

Jealousy and Envy

Makes a proper distinction between jealousy and envy, which the careless student thinks of as synonymous. While envy is always sinful, jealousy may be either good or evil, depending upon its object. God is referred to as the “Lord, whose name is Jealous” (Exodus 34:14). To be jealous is to be struck full of passion, or to be inflamed with intense desire or longing. To envy is to look at from the wrong angle or from a contrary direction. Jealousy is always related to fear, frightened at the prospect of losing what it claims and cherishes. Envy is accompanied by suffering, pained to see another enjoy and experience what it covets for itself.

Carnal Weapons

[Essay]

Observes that men often misunderstand 2 Corinthians 10:5 in which Paul says “The weapons of our warfare are not carnal.” The false teachers at Corinth were charging him with a policy of double-dealing. His real conflict is not with men but with their deceptive fantasies, or sophistries. Our weapons must be adapted to the kind of war being waged. The opposite to deceptive fantasy is true knowledge of God and this must be the weapon with which we storm the ramparts and capture the fortress of human minds.

Through the Dust

[Essay]

The word minister (diakonos, from dia, through, and konos, dust) is never used in the new covenant scriptures to designate any specific or exclusive form of service. Rather it designates every form of service. Every Christian is a minister if he serves God and his fellows. One enters the ministry at baptism. We must recapture the primitive concept of the universal ministry or continue enlisting soldiers who never intend to fight. Any sign with the names of the ministers of a congregation should contain the whole roster.

Crumbling Wall

[Essay]

Not a single segment of the “Church of Christ” is escaping the spirit of reform. An enlightened membership is beginning to break the stranglehold of spiritual bureaucracy. Some are discovering that Romans 14 was written to tell brethren how to treat one another in spite of differences. Some in the factions are starting to receive their brethren as God received them. Nothing will stop the great revolution that is now underway. There are already signs that the power of editors is on the wane, that the sheep on the hills are beginning to struggle homeward. Some day there will be one flock. That day is coming.

The Old Lady

[Essay]

Although The Church of England, often referred to as The Old Lady by the British, is regarded as being a little dodderly and senile, living in the past and with nothing worthwhile to contribute to the present, the church of God is ageless and timeless, speaking to men where they are and as they are. It is vibrant, rejoicing, exuberant, filled with faith and filling others with hope. While it is the fate of every sect to grow old, the one body can never die as long as its head lives. And anything for which men can now give statistics of membership is nothing but a sect. The church of God is composed of all the saved of all the earth.

The Fiddlers

[Essay]

Just as Nero fiddled while Rome burned, many of our brethren are focused on what is inconsequential and irrelevant to the burning issues of our time. Rather than being actively concerned about the men who are dying in the jungles of Vietnam or the multitudes of people who are threatened with starvation, most of our brethren are busy giving lengthy orations on things the world happens to be ignoring— such as whether it's alright to eat in the meetinghouse or whether the Herald of Truth violated congregational autonomy.

The Baobab Tree

[Essay]

The legend of the baobab tree is that the devil picked it up and thrust its branches into the ground leaving the roots sticking up into the air. In a lot of areas this appears to have happened to the church, where things are the reverse of what they were in the beginning. The church will never turn the world upside down until we get the church right side up. If it claims to be like Jesus it must be willing to minister— not be ministered to— and willing to give its life in order to gain it. Many congregations are like the baobab tree, fat tubs, preoccupied with their own little rounds of trivia, living for self, loving their own concerns, leaving the world to flounder in a morass of problems, with no helping hand extended for fear of getting the robe of righteousness soiled and sticky.

The Headless Horseman

[Essay]

The “institutional church” in our day, like the fictitious headless horseman in the story of “Ewen of the Little Head,” has lost her head, yet is so designed, drafted, and departmentalized that she can function automatically, spasmodically and by reflex action, unaware that the Spirit has departed from her.

Combat Cooties

[Essay]

Like the bedbugs used in Vietnam to sniff out the enemy, many things considered at one time to be devices of Satan are now being used to arouse concern for the Christian concept and to whip Satan over the head.

Life's Final Star

[Essay]

Brotherhood derives from fatherhood. Fellowship is the result of mutual sonship. Of most importance to God is the maintenance of the family relationship. Making peace with a brother is more important even than bringing a sacrifice to God. Men have broken up God's children into warring clans. This is a sin of the deepest dye. It is a grave offense against heaven to make any opinion the basis of our recognition of one another and of our oneness in Christ. The recapture of the true meaning of brotherhood is the most important task of the fragmented church.

The Need for Reform

[Essay]

Noting the recent example of B. L. Wittenbrink of assailing his Catholic hierarchy for a preoccupation with relatively trivial concerns while ignoring human needs and injustices, observes that we in Churches of Christ are able to pass by on the other side, wholly oblivious to the frightful agonies which affect human personalities. Suggests that members of Churches of Christ pray for God to raise up reformers among us with the bravery of some within the Roman pale.

Quenching the Spirit

[Essay]

Decries the abuse and misuse of talent as brilliant and erudite members of the body are consigned to the role of silent spectators of a well-managed drama performed exclusively by one man hired for that purpose. Asserts that every gift is intended to be exercised and that it is the duty of the congregation to provide an opportunity for the growth and development of every member to his highest potential. Observes that it is by teaching that one really grows in all of his mental faculties. Notes that it is useless to pretend that we are interested in restoration of primitive Christianity unless we include a realistic return to the priesthood of all believers and the ministry of all the saints.

Lapsing Into Latin

[Essay]

Satan has deceived us into adopting the fallacy that purity of doctrine can only be secured by separation from brethren who differ with us. Our divisions are proof that we have denied the scriptural injunction to guard the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. We are as divided as if God had commanded us to do so, and we willfully perpetuate our parties under the guise of fidelity to Christ. Anyone can see what the will to divide has done to us. Res ipsa loquitur (the thing speaks for itself)!

The Realm of Truth

[Essay]

Fellowship in Christ is the sharing of the life of the Holy Spirit. Fellowship is not endorsement or Jesus could not be in fellowship with any of us. Neither is it perfect conformity or none of us could be in fellowship with Jesus. Our hope of heaven is not contingent upon our freedom from error but upon our attitude toward it. We must receive one another as He receives us all.

Moral Agency

[Essay]

The term “free moral agent” is redundant and unnecessary since by definition to be a moral agent is to have the freedom to choose between moral alternatives. One must exercise that right by using the power of discrimination which weighs alternatives and guides to decisions. Such decisions must be governed by an ultimate, however, if they are to become a guideline for life. All law, so far as man is concerned, is summed up in love— an act of will— directed toward God and man. To love God is to give him what he deserves— to reverence him. This doesn’t require a continual consciousness of God since God is served and glorified in every pursuit of life when we are wholly surrendered to him, having made him the supreme preference of our lives.

The Tether

[Essay]

Whatever one makes a test of fellowship becomes the center of his life and thought, and the rope of the party will allow him to crop the truth only so far. But a great transformation will come. Brethren will start pulling up their stakes and moving closer to our Lord as the only center of their lives— tethered to the stake which God drove down at Golgotha.

The only rope about our necks will be the invisible cord of love.

Beware of Gribbles

[Essay]

Our greatest danger in the restoration movement is not the frontal attacks of atheism, skepticism, and agnosticism but from “spiritual gribbles” (gribbles are marine crustaceans that gnaw away at underwater wooden structures until they weaken and fall). Many brethren have not caught the spirit of the Spirit and they bore away at controversial matters and build parties and sects around their views. The restoration ideal has not been successfully attacked by its enemies. It has only been made to appear ridiculous by its friends. The depth of a man’s love for God may be measured by the nature of the things which he allows to separate him from his brothers.

Facing Death

[Essay]

The apostle Paul found himself in a “strait” between two conflicting desires, having a desire to “depart” and be with Christ (Philippians 1:23). The word “depart” (Greek, analuō) was used by the Greeks to express (1) the act of loosing the moorings of a ship to set it free, (2) the act of taking down a tent after the battle to return home, and (3) the loosing of the yoke or saddle girth to remove the burden from the back of a pack animal. In death the loads of life are lifted, the burdens taken down, and the spirit is set free. We can readily see why Paul, writing from prison, would want to depart.

The Nature of Reform

A correspondent laments that prominent leaders will not acknowledge the contributions of Leroy Garrett and this author to the ferment of thought and allow them to speak at the ACC lectureship. The author notes that the history and nature of reforms remind us that one must be dead at least 100 years before existing structures acknowledge indebtedness to its reformers. Asserts that what is important is the cause. We are all expendable. Should we go to our graves “unwept, unhonored and unsung” it is of no consequence. The nature of reforms indicates that reformation will come, but it will come gradually and almost imperceptibly. Everyone will deny they are changing but all will be doing so. As Jesus becomes more important to us, so do our brethren. Suggests we not get perturbed about recognition for a couple of earthen vessels. Notes, “If we were to hold our peace the stones would cry out.”

Out of This World

It is the responsibility of each generation to work out its own technique for effective encounter with “its world.” Today we have an intellectual revolution. Higher education is the real battleground for the mind of modern man. While the strategy of many has been to withdraw and create artificial worlds of their own, talking only to each other and making the walls of their barricades thicker, the community of saints must recapture this territory from which it has retreated. We must (1) lose our anti-intellectual bias, (2) conquer our awe of degrees, and revere all men for their work of faith and labor of love, and (3) recapture the field of higher education for the Christian dynamic.

The Meaning of Grace

[Essay]

Many among us have made grace meaningless by legalism. They believe that the function of grace was to bring another law. They cannot distinguish between a written law and life in Christ from the indwelling Spirit. If we are to make grace meaningful we must restore to it the meaning attached to it by the Spirit after appropriating it from the Greeks and using it to describe God's giving of Himself in Christ. There are no conditions attached to grace. All one must do is to reach out and take it, but the reaching is not a condition attached. It is merely a means of appropriating it by the individual. But acceptance of it requires utter negation of self, which pride resists. While the grace that brings salvation teaches us, grace is the teacher, not the act of teaching nor the thing taught.

The Fulness of Godhood

[Essay]

Notes that the Greek words translated "Godhead" in Romans 1:20 (theiotes) and Colossians 2:9 (theotes) are not the same. The first refers to the traits of God which may be learned, while the other refers to his person which may be known. In theological terms, these refer to God's transcendence and to his immanence respectively.

The Power of Christ

[Essay]

Sets forth the opinion that the epistle called "Hebrews" was addressed to Palestinian Jews, while the temple was still standing, (1) to counter the lure of defecting again to Judaism and (2) to show that in Christ we have something far superior to that which the Mosaic economy could offer, despite the pageantry and pomp of the temple. God's remedy against defection is to instill a proper understanding of our relationship to Jesus in which every aspect of life is brought under his lordship. To be in Christ is to be plugged into the very source of divine power. There are seven things affirmed about the status of Jesus which indicate the nature of his power: He is the heir of all things, the maker of the worlds, the brightness of God's glory, the express image of God's person, the upholder of all things, the purger of our sins, and he is seated at God's right hand. Here is the power to perform all that life demands of one.

Simple Solutions

[Essay]

There is an aspect of the party spirit that manifests itself in the glib answer to every human situation. Much of this stems from insecurity. Salvation depends upon being "right" on every issue. No one in the parties is in error. All of them have the truth and all disagree as to what it is. The sectarian must "pigeon-hole" everyone for its own security. Such a procedure avoids the responsibility of enlightened human contact and exchange. It is simple, easy and quick— too simple to be Christ-like and just simple enough to be Pharisaical. God never lumps people off. He deals with each person where he finds him. There are no easy answers, no simple solutions. However, security doesn't lie in having all the right answers but being in the right person. Rather than drafting decrees to cover every exigency we are better off if we relax in his arms and treat others as we would be treated.

The Spiritual Principle

[Essay]

Every institution is built upon a principle to which it traces its inception, which determines the nature of the institution. The community of believers is built upon the historical fact that God has manifested himself to the rational beings whose chief purpose in existence is to glorify Him. To that end divine disclosure was essential. It was afforded in three aspects—creation (the power of God), incarnation (the person of God), and revelation (the purpose of God).

The Mission of Wholeness

[Essay]

Heirs of the restoration movement seem to have a mistaken view of mission which has kept them from effective encounter with the world. Within our monastary walls we are insulated from the world. But fresh winds are creeping through. There is a revolt against making God a partisan ruler who is made to like what we like and hate those we hate. There is an uneasiness over the compartmentalization of life in which worship is reserved for certain times, places, and structures. Perceptive saints believe that every thought, motive, and act rendered in reverence is worship. There is a revolt against “phony charity,” which dubs as the “social gospel” any real compassion for human misery that never counts the cost or gain. The gospel of our Lord is not anti-social. When he ransomed man he delivered the whole man. As His body upon earth we must be concerned with every aspect of life.

Our Real Estate

Our concern in taking the world for Christ is often not to find where stark need exists but where we can find a building site. We cannot always retreat from reality to the affluent suburbs. We must go back into the world, some of which is messy and often bloody. To be effective in the inner city we must go there and get accustomed to the conditions on the ground. Often we are held back because we have no church building. But meeting in an apartment as a “church in the house” may be more appropriate. While it is not wrong for saints to own communal real estate we are at fault in our reasoning when we use the lack of church-owned real estate as an excuse for not penetrating an area.

The Restoration Principle

The restoration principle has been opposed as being inherently divisive. Proposes to define, outline, analyze, describe, and tell why it is a valid approach to unity. Restoration does not mean the reproduction in our day of any congregation mentioned in the new covenant scriptures nor the duplication of customs and conventions of a long-departed generation. Restoration involves stripping away the accumulation of philosophic opinion, metaphysical speculation, and theological interpretation which have obscured the message of heaven. While the current call for renewal by our religious neighbors is commendable, renewal requires a return to a previous state—the very thing that is condemned by many who are critical of the restoration principle. Renewal, however, can only come through a recovery of the apostolic proclamation, purpose, and power. The apostles were uniquely commissioned as ambassadors whose message is to be accepted as authoritative, since they spoke in behalf of Christ. Their authority was not to cease with their death. The life of their message was permanent. Restoration means the recapture of the importance and relevance of the message from heaven. True unity is that given by the Spirit. It is not ours to discover a way to achieve it but to recover and receive it. Every person who responds in God's own way to God's own gospel is made a member of the one body, the members of which will be varied in degree of knowledge, temperament, disposition, social status, and race. Concludes with a list of seven items which are valid for recovery of the design of God for the community of believers in our day.

Two Unity Movements

[Essay]

Compares and contrasts the modern ecumenical movement with the restoration movement which began in the autumn of 1809. Both movements hold in common: (1) A conviction that schisms among Christians constitute a scandal to the church; (2) a belief that the prayer of Jesus for unity can be understood and answered; (3) an acceptance of the proposition that Jesus is Lord; (4) a goal of one church as the body of Christ, on earth; and (5) a relevance to our age, its culture and society. Areas of difference include: (1) The revelation of God is incomplete and open-ended; (2) the apostles simply recorded the struggle of a primitive people to discover truth; (3) man is free under God to experiment with religious structure upon the basis of present utility; (4) there is no definitive response to the Good News universally binding upon or demanded of mankind, but each man may surrender to God upon his own terms; (5) the essential thing being to hold up the light, the instrument for doing so is purely incidental and expendable. Concludes with the assertion that renewal must begin with a renewed interest in searching the sacred scriptures, noting that we must either receive the word of the Lord, or reject the Lord of the Word.

The Bible and Reformation

[Essay]

Recounts the radical reformation of Josiah, king of Judah, and the impact upon his kingdom of having discovered the book of the law of the Lord in the temple at Jerusalem. Then observes that there has never been a religious reformation worth mentioning that did not result from rediscovery of the Word of God and its importance to life. Notes that a great revival was sparked by John Wycliffe's translation of the Word into English. And it was to scripture that Martin Luther made his impassioned appeal before the German emperor and the Imperial Diet at Worms. Observes that in his "Declaration and Address," with which the restoration movement began, Thomas Campbell proposes "to patronize nothing but the inculcation of the express Word of God." Concludes that renewal will only come through recovery of the dynamic of God.

The Reconciling Community

[Essay]

Ours is a ministry of healing through reconciliation. If we are to speak meaningfully to the intellectual world we must (1) cease to identify with any sect or fragment in a divided Christendom; (2) project the community of saints as large enough and flexible enough to embrace all who have been received by Christ; (3) make it clear that the ordinances of God (baptism and the Lord's Supper) are not partisan administrations; (4) communicate to the world of our day the Message in a manner that is understandable and relevant. The world is still open for a non-sectarian plea, but it is not receptive to such a plea made by sectarians.

A Non-Partisan Faith

[Essay]

In response to the question “Just what are you trying to do?” the author explains his mission and message, his view on baptism, his preaching, and his present aim— to get those in all factions to recognize that all of us are brethren and start treating each other as such. States clearly that he is not trying to get groups together, as that would do not good if their hearts were not changed.

God and Surveyor 3

[Essay]

With each scientific breakthrough the question is asked, “What does this do to the concept of God?” Such was the case with Surveyor 3 that landed on the surface of the moon. Notes that it should be expected that creative intelligence can produce a complex machine, but the complexity of Surveyor 3 can’t compare with that of man. Our concept of God should only be disturbed if Surveyor 3 were to make a man from the dust of the moon and give him life. While expressing support for space exploration, regards the space race as a little silly, indifferent toward world poverty, and sometimes careless. Expresses concern that we not make a garbage dump out of the moon like we have with the earth. While the Russians may be godless, God is not Russianless. While they may have defamed God by turning their cathedrals into museums, notes that we have done the same thing but we still pretend to “worship” in them. While the Russian cosmonaut reported that he had not seen God up there, we should be worried if he had, and worried more if God had not seen him.

The Devil and Factions

[Essay]

After affirming a belief in the existence of the devil, considers the strategy he might use against “a project to unite the Christians in all of the sects.” Then examines the schemes Satan has used to deceive the heirs of that “noble experiment” into thinking that the way to be faithful to their leader was to slash his body to ribbons. Notes that after a century of civil war a generation has arisen that is questioning the assumptions and influences upon which the party spirit has fed. Predicts that one day our brethren will be able to distinguish between the coat handed down by their fathers and the robe of righteousness handed over by the Son.

A Letter from Texas

[Essay]

In response to a letter objecting to the author’s teaching on fellowship, notes the inconsistency with which brethren categorize things as matters of faith, matters of opinion or matters of indifference. Calls attention to the absence of scriptural authority for asserting the prerogative of defining for others what constitutes matters of faith or matters of opinion. Points out that “the Christian Church” and “the Church of Christ” are not churches at all but factions which grew out of a nineteenth century unity movement. There is only one church. Consequently one cannot fellowship error, but those who are in the fellowship of the Spirit are in the fellowship with every child of God on earth— all of whom are “brothers in error,” as there are no other kind. Notes that the faith that saves, which is to be proclaimed, is not the same as personal faith (Rom. 14:23) that is to be kept between oneself and God. Too many of us equate God’s revelation with our interpretation and conclude that because one is infallible the other must also be.

Liberty and Expediency

[Essay]

The divine purpose is not the selfish gratification of one, but the salvation of all. We must each examine our freedom and rights to assure that we do not violate the moral restraints imposed by God. Guidelines for interpersonal relationships are suggested: (1) There are values superior to individual rights; (2) No individual can insist upon his own rights to the destruction of the right of others; (3) The strong individual in Christ is the one who is willing to forego his personal rights for the common good. On the other hand, there are certain freedoms which should be cherished and defended: The liberty (1) to examine and search the scriptures personally; (2) to form conclusions and render judgments upon the basis of personal understanding; (3) to implement one’s understanding in his own life; (4) to be judged by conscience and Christ, to stand or fall to one’s own master; (5) to serve in a congregational capacity with those whose joint service appears most compatible to one’s understanding. But one must be restrained with regard to (1) binding his deductions as terms of communion; (2) making a personal interpretation a test of fellowship; (3) forming a party around his deductions; (4) placing a stumblingblock in a brother’s way; (5) imposing his thinking upon a congregation as a condition of recognition as brethren; (6) assisting any congregation in excluding any other.

The Clergy of God

[Essay]

Christianity was designed to penetrate a pagan culture, but Christians are a growing minority group. Our hope is in his helmet that guards the rational processes. We must recapture the secret of the electrifying results of the primitive saints. It was faith in a Message that was the dynamic to save. The primitive saints were living reproductions of Christ. They were characterized by service and giving. They had no concept of simply “going to church.” At their meetings they reported results of their encounters with the Enemy and went back to the battlefield to fight. Today we have been deceived into thinking of the body of Christ as the institutional church into which we gather as stockholders but do not go back into the conflict. The church has come between us and Christ. Current membership is made up of paying observers who did not enlist to fight. Our hope lies with the small pocket of concerned ones who are distressed by the difference between profession and practice. These, like leaven, must penetrate the masses at the expense of their own existence. We have been victimized by the Enemy into dividing our forces into clergy and laity. Such an idea is foreign to God’s program. We must make clergy of the laity. We must recognize that public proclamation of the Word is only one form of ministry— not the only form. The universal ministry of the saints is the dynamic which can change our modern world.

Belief and Unbelief

[Essay]

Rejects the notion that all who never heard of Jesus will be eternally lost. Observes that the foundation of faith is the belief of testimony. Where there is no testimony there can be no faith.

But intellectual assent is not the faith that saves because all intellectual states are involuntary. The faith which saves is an act of the will— a voluntary surrender or commitment of the whole being. One can only believe to the extent that he understands. Involuntary ignorance is never a sin and cannot be. Absence of faith is a mere vacuum, an unreality, and no one will be eternally doomed because of that which is unsubstantial. No honest intellectual doubt or distrust is the unbelief that damns. Such an intellectual state has no moral character. Disbelief or unbelief will no doubt damn because it is an act of the will. It is the rejection of truth. But there must be revelation before there can be unbelief. There can be no unbelief further than there is light. Where the gospel has never been heard there is no unbelief of the gospel as there is no belief of it, and there is no indication that God will damn those who have not heard and do not know. However, Jesus said, “No man cometh unto the Father except by me.” Any person who is saved will be saved by the merit of the sacrifice of Jesus. He is the only access to the Father. Those who are accepted because they are not responsible— infants, imbeciles, those born prior to Christ, and those who never hear the gospel— come under the blood, as does every responsible person who is saved!

Restoring a Movement

[Essay]

Every century has produced movements to restore the primitive order of Christianity. Historically such movements originate in reaction and revolution, and generally gravitate into other sects with their own institutions, organization, and vested interests. The search for truth gives way to the defense of traditional positions, and adherents fragment into parties, intensifying the very situation which the movement was created to alleviate. A sect creates its own little world and equates it with God's big one. Historically no sect ever returns to a movement status. In the case of our own movement the hope of creating an exception to "the law of sectarian progression" lies in the renewal through recovery of the concepts and ideals which launched the movement in 1809. We must (1) once more become a unity-oriented people; (2) affirm that "the Church of Christ upon earth is essentially, intentionally, and constitutionally one;" (3) make a clear distinction between the divine revelation and human interpretation of it. We can never be a genuine movement for unity so long as we postulate that oneness depends upon attainment to the same level or degree of knowledge.

Church of the Firstborn

[Essay]

In the "church of the firstborn" (Hebrews 12:23), the word "firstborn" is plural and has reference not to Jesus but to the saints whose names are written in heaven. God's children are so designated because God claimed the firstborn of Israel as His own. They were his by right of adoption. The Hebrews understood this so the writer had to make no explanation. When the word "church" is used properly in a universal sense it must embrace every saved person in the universe. When employed to designate the saints in a given city it must include every saint of God in that city. It is easy to equate the limits of God's grace with the boundaries of our acceptance. If, as John observed in his Revelation, the throng of those in heaven who have "washed their robes and made them white" was such that no one could count, it seems unlikely that the number on earth can be counted. The brotherhood of believers is as vast as God's redemptive love.

Thoughts on Repentance

Repentance involves (1) taking a second view of sin— a rational view— and then (2) changing the mind as a result. God's kindness, tolerance, and patience are intended to guide the transgressor to a change of heart, a change which is moral in character. Conviction of sin, consciousness of guilt or a recognition and fear of retribution are all passive states and thus cannot have moral character attributed to them. Repentance, for the same reason is not sorrow for wrongdoing nor grief for its consequences. They may cause one to take a second view of life and therefore lead to repentance, but they are not of themselves repentance. Repentance is an act of volition, a positive phenomenon of the will— a deliberate choice involving a complete change of purpose and intention made in the full light of intelligence. All life can be summed up in two terms— selfishness and selflessness. Repentance is the act of turning from the former to the latter by a surrender of the self to Jesus as Lord. Consequently the penitent loathes sin and recognizing that he cannot win the conflict by himself, places himself, through full commitment of self, in Him, where sin is not imputed or counted unto self, for he has no self. Self has been crucified. Impenitence is not the love of sin, it is an act of the will, a voluntary choice to pursue one's course, taken in full light of the consequences. It is rooted in the worship of self— installing self as usurper of divine prerogatives— an obstinate state of mind, determined to be served at all costs.

Speaking Unto Edification

While all we do should be done to glorify God, when the saints are assembled all activities should be aimed at edification (1 Corinthians 14:26). Among the spiritual gifts, prophecy was to be preferred, since it has as its objective to edify, exhort, and comfort. Edification means to build up, to instruct, to promote spiritual growth. Exhortation has to do with motivating or stirring up, inciting to action. Comfort has to do with encouragement, to strengthen. To build character, to stimulate the will, to strengthen the spirit— these should be the aim of the assembled saints.

The Denouement

[Essay]

In Colossians 3:4, Paul sums up the hope of the believers. J. B. Phillips translates his statement as “One day, Christ, the center of our lives, will show himself openly, and you will share in that magnificent denouement.” The word denouement (to untie a knot) refers to the final revelation or occurrence which clarifies the nature and outcome of a plot. The coming of Jesus will make all else in God’s program for the universe fit into place. It is the key to all of the mysteries of life through the ages.

The Progress of Reform

[Essay]

Quotes Alexander Campbell’s statement in 1938 that “the good cause of the restoration . . . is plead with increasing success and prosperity. . . .” Asserts that the same words may be used to describe the influence of a growing movement for renewal upon the splintered and fragmented body of restoration heirs. Gives examples from personal correspondence and recent events. Restates the “thoughts on fellowship” about which he began to write some ten years prior: (1) Fellowship is the sharing of the common life created by the indwelling Spirit of God, a state into which we are called, not something to be extended or withdrawn. (2) Harmony is not essential to fellowship but is the goal of those in fellowship. (3) Fellowship is not the endorsement of another's position or views. God did not endorse a lot of things done by the saints in Corinth but they were in his fellowship. (4) Fellowship is not contingent upon unanimity of opinion. The only unity available to thinking men is unity in diversity. The unity of conformity must first reduce men to robots. (5) Equality of spiritual knowledge is not the foundation of fellowship. Jesus would be lonely if he eliminated all of his "brothers in error." Concludes by explaining how he has avoided creating another faction.

On the Rocks

[Essay]

The English word "scruple"— from scrupulus, "a small sharp stone in the shoe"— is used by J. B. Phillips to translate dialogismos in Romans 14:1. A scruple is the fruit of conscience which has been impregnated by doubt. The apostle uniquely enjoins that when two try to walk together while one has a pebble in his shoe, the one who does not may have to slow down voluntarily to walk with his brother. He who is free from scruples should never have contempt for his brother who does because (1) God has received them both, (2) both belong to a common master, (3) each must act according to personal conviction, (4) premature judgment of the other is playing God, (5) a thing which is right in itself is wrong for one who has the conviction it is wrong, (6) a brother must never be sacrificed to gratify self, and (7) all are to pursue things that promote peace.

Heretics and Reform

[Essay]

Rome's greatest error was to equate persistently held unorthodox opinions with heresy. Yet to seek to regulate men's opinions by threat, or to alter them by force or coercion, is to make hypocrites of the weak and martyrs of the strong. Every faction skims off the brains from the top and retains the mass of the unthinking below. Every protest movement throughout history began as a rebellion against intolerance and ends by becoming more intolerant than that which it abandoned. The persecuted of yesterday becomes the persecutor of today. Those who react against the power structure (e.g., Tertullian, Luther) act differently when they create a power structure of their own. The heroes of today were the heretics of yesterday. No generation ever recognizes its own prophets. There are two persons humanity can never tolerate— a man who lives too far below their standard, and the one who lives too far above it. They imprison the first and crucify the second. All the nails that ever fastened men to a cross came from a box labeled "Heresy."

Hippies and Missions

[Essay]

Highlights from a conversation with Matthew Ikeda, a young Japanese doctoral student, about the motivation behind the loss of young intellectuals to the drug culture, and about the attitudes and practices of many foreign missionaries, notably those who tend to confuse western culture with citizenship in the kingdom of heaven. Notes that we do not take Christ to Japan, for He has already been there.

Family Culture

[Essay]

A review of Alexander Campbell's book, Family Culture; or Conversations in the Domestic Circle at the Carlton House, published in 1850. In the book the reader is present during family devotions and Bible study which occur in the early morning and in the evening. The family is taken through a thorough study of the first twenty-two chapters of Genesis and discussions on Luke's account of Christ.

A Good Question

[Essay]

Responds to a question concerning statements in a previous article (Belief and Unbelief) and how they relate to 2 Thessalonians 1:8, which speaks of (1) those who “know not God” and (2) those who “obey not the gospel.” Points out that a man cannot decide to be under the Lordship of Jesus if he never heard of Jesus. Whereas the entire world of rational beings has testimony related to God in nature. When man, by reason, follows this clue to its logical end he will either acknowledge God or reject him. To act out of reverence for God in the light available unto one is to “know God” as the term is here employed. There is a vast difference between a refusal to acknowledge that of which you have heard, and involuntary ignorance which you cannot help.

The Community of God

[Essay]

Makes numerous historical observations regarding the geographical setting of Peter's great confession of Jesus as the Messiah at Caesarea Philippi. Concludes that it was the fact of the Messiahship that constitutes the “rock” upon which Jesus promised to build his ekklesia which, it is suggested, is best translated by the word “community.” Goes on to explain the meaning of the word ekklesia, the origin and development of the word “church” and its use by the translators of the King James Version. Concludes by responding to questions raised by those who read the essay in advance of its publication.

The Reason Why

[Essay]

Declares that he wishes to be a Christian, and a Christian only, but does not wish to be a part of a “Christian only” party. Being a Christian only makes it possible to share in the truths of all other Christians without sharing in the errors that give them their distinctive, hyphenated identities. Considers himself to be a catholic, baptist, methodist, presbyterian, episcopal, one of the brethren, one of the united brethren in Christ, a friend, part of the church of God as well as the church of God in Christ, a protestant, a conservative, and a liberal, in the true sense of each of these terms. Concludes that no sect is big enough to include all the truth or all of the saved. If men will be disciples of Christ Jesus it will be in spite of their parties and not because of them.

A College Student

[Essay]

Observations concerning the rigidity of the sectarian system within the “Churches of Christ” which prompted a letter to the author from a graduate student who complains about the arrogance and dogmatism within the church in which he grew up. The author expresses sympathy with those in scholastic disciplines who are taught to think for themselves, and who find that the one place they are prohibited from doing so is in the congregation. Encourages the student in his decision to “stay with it a little longer” and urges “all of our younger brethren” not to defect, predicting that we shall win the battle for returning sanity in a movement which has been tearing at its own flesh. Expresses confidence that one of these days we shall see fellowship in its true light and will be able to join hands with all of God’s children to bring a powerful witness in our neo-pagan world.

The Crisis of Change

[Essay]

The assumption that the community of saints during the lifetime of the apostles was a smooth-running organization of conformists is shown to be fallacious in light of history and the new covenant scriptures. The primitive saints were not conformists. One congregation differed from another. Jerusalem and Antioch were not alike. There were grave cultural differences which were bridged only by mutual love for the Lord Jesus. Therefore the real goal of restoration-minded believers in our day should be the recapture of the noble spirit of tolerance which preserved the one body from disintegrating under serious tensions and stresses. To love and revere those who differ because they are the offspring of a common Father, and to view the relationship thus established as more vital than the peculiarities of those within it is no task for little souls.

Absolute Proof

[Essay]

Reacts to a letter from a university student who insists that if he cannot have absolute proof of the existence of God he is ready to abandon what he was taught as a child in order to maintain his “intellectual integrity.” Observes that while we must all eventually arrive at a personal and disciplined faith, there may be no absolute proof given the fact that the prover is fallible and all of his proofs must be relative. God is greater than any criteria we have by which to measure. It is a fallacy to assume that everything must be proven to be believed. If God is personal, the real proof of his existence must be person-to-person. To affirm the non-existence of God requires the possession of unlimited knowledge and infinite vision. But if man is powerless to present absolute proof of God’s existence, his powerlessness does not constitute absolute proof of God’s non-existence. No fact is affected by one’s ability or inability to prove it. No scholastic discipline can provide absolute proof of anything. Intellectual integrity is not conditioned upon demand for absolute proof in advance of faith but unprejudiced examination of data with an open mind to testimony which may appear subsequently.

A Personal Decision

[Essay]

While expressing appreciation for an offer to help dress up Mission Messenger and make it a little more appealing, states that the journal is not an organization and that he is not carrying on a crusade nor leading a movement: that he is weary of institutionalized religion and tired of vested interests and party machinery; that Mission Messenger will remain plain in appearance (it’s for plain folks!); that it will die and be buried with him.

The Fellowship of the Unashamed

After a brief review of the courageous lives of those ancients who died in faith, seeing God's promises only at a distance, observes that a new army of faith, the fellowship of the unashamed, began to form and march under the orders of the Risen Lord, invading every part of the earth and penetrating every stratum of society. Although they had none of the "advantages" of any of the machinery deemed essential in our day to promote and procure success, they had three things: a divine relationship through the Spirit, a divine mission with the Spirit, and a divine service in the Spirit. Theirs was the life of the Spirit of life in whose power they went forth conquering and to conquer. Concludes with a challenge to become a vital part of the fellowship of the unashamed— "Instead of taking danger out of life let us restore it; instead of removing risk, let us renew it." We must quit talking about holding services and start to render them. Crosses were not made to sing about, but to carry and to die upon.

A Marked Copy

Reacts to a copy of a letter sent by a preacher to his congregation, warning them of the ability of Carl Ketcherside to "completely undermine the church as we have known it . . . as if he had a new . . . commandment. . . ." The author makes a number of observations regarding his own writings, then notes that "the church as we have known it" is not really the body of Christ. We should rather be concerned to return to the community of saints as God wants it. Concludes with other observations related to his own struggle with partisan pride and intolerance.

One Day of Life

[Essay]

Acknowledges several personal barriers to service which the Lord enabled him to overcome, resulting in a sense of inner peace and freedom from fear. Then shares the events of a twenty-four hour period of his life in which the Lord opened several doors of opportunity for him to share with others in various discussions. Lists four things which originally acted as mental barriers and made it difficult for him to openly witness to his convictions.

The Solvent of Doubt

[Essay]

Reflections upon a letter from a college student majoring in art in which the student expresses doubt about the existence of God— that each person creates his own image of God. Observes that modern art thrives upon distortion and seeks to reduce the real to an unreal imagery. While we need to alter our concepts of many things as we mature, to postulate that we invent that about which our concepts alter, and that such alteration is proof of invention is itself and immature concept. The mere ability to conceive of God, and the universal exercise of that ability, seems to constitute a very strong presumption that God exists.

Priests and Pontiffs

[Essay]

Maintains that the only way God can bridge the great gulf between himself and the world is to penetrate it as Word become flesh. He did this through a Son. Jesus was God incarnate. He came to the world and he calls us to do the same— to be God in the flesh, “little Christ.” To go into all the world for him was not a geographical concept. It did not mean covering every mile of every road to contact every man, but accepting the burden and the concern and the sensitivity of every sinful being on earth, wherever that being was. To fulfill our mission we must start as he did. The word of God must become flesh— our flesh. As did he, we must translate the word into life. We must become bridge-builders (pontiffs) so those who inhabit the fragmented world may cross over that bridge which God has built in Christ. We must never forget the purpose of our anointing— to allow the word of God to become flesh in our flesh. This is not a work we can relegate or delegate to others. Wherever one’s lot is cast, there is his “world.” It is into that world that he is sent as minister, priest, and pontiff.

The Ministry of the Cross and the Growth of the Church

[Essay]

In an address at Milligan College, suggests a few areas in which we need to revise our thinking in order to recover the power of God for our age. We must (1) quit talking about the symbols of our faith and begin to exemplify the reality of our divine-human relationship; (2) relinquish the hope that we can conquer the world by a group of professionals; (3) develop a strategy for the recapture of those territories from which we have withdrawn and forfeited to the enemy (such as education and science); (4) recover our faith in the attested truth of God so that it may be built not upon the wisdom of men but upon the power of God.

Heralds of Hope

[Essay]

After a series of quotations from several historians of the early church (Celsus, Newman, Fisher, de Pressense, Justin Martyr, Irenaeus, and Tertullian), takes note of those factors contributing to the spread of the faith throughout the known world. Concludes with observations concerning implications for our day: (1) we must recapture the concept of every Christian is a minister of God; (2) we must recapture the concept of the transformed life; (3) We must crucify our prejudices; (4) we must recapture the raw courage of faith; (5) We must recapture the impact of the message of hope.

God and Time

[Essay]

Response to a letter from a college student inquiring about the nature of God and time. Notes that there is only one honest motive for belief and that is to be intellectually consistent with fact or truth. Cautions that one can make an idol out of a concept as well as out of a tree trunk. Whether Paul Tillich meant to posit a non-personal God from Paul's statement that "in him we live and move and have our being" may be questionable, but one would have to wrest the passage in order to do so. Any real approach to God must be predicated upon belief in his existence, and it must include the idea that he is not impersonal. Regarding the concept of time, asserts that what we call time is simply our way of measuring that segment of eternity in which our existence is cast. Time is for man. Neither God nor lower animals would require it.

Conflict with Caesar

It is evident that the success of the early Christian movement was due to a divine power shaping its destiny. The secret of their strength is to be found in the following: (1) Their relationship to Jesus was not an organizational one, but personal; (2) Every saint was a soldier, a runner, a fighter in the arena; (3) Their message was not a recital of decrees or a repetition of dogma; (4) They knew the value and power of the fellowship created by the Spirit and found comfort and strength in an association composed of those who rejoiced at the great salvation wrought in their behalf. Observes that in order to recapture the dynamic of the early Christians in our day we must (a) cease to equate our sectarian structures with the one body filled with and impelled by the Holy Spirit; (b) cease to judge loyalty to the King by an attitude toward secondary matters in the Kingdom; (c) stop trying to deceive men by false claims about our identity, projecting an image that is patently false; (d) start “leveling” with our generation and stop concealing our partisan bias in clever phraseology; (e) begin practicing congregational autonomy in honest fashion; (f) find a way to implement in a meaningful way the priesthood of all believers; (g) cease to think of what is done in our religious edifices as service; (g) stop dividing life into sacred and secular compartments; (h) cease talking about holy days, places, and liturgy; (i) revive the message of hope and proclaim anew the resurrection.

The Uncommon Faith

In spite of the great power of heaven demonstrated in the manifestation of divinity in the slave garb which made it possible for him to share with the earthborn ones, some must still seek reassurance in lesser demonstrations which, ultimately, are symptoms of doubt. For the man of unadulterated trust there is no need to ascend into heaven and bring Christ down. Such a man does not require a “burning bush” or to be fed by ravens. Our problem is we find it easier to walk by sight than by faith—afraid to trust the testimony of the ages. Gives personal testimony that such additional proof is not required.

As Shaw Said It

[Essay]

Commenting on a quote from George Bernard Shaw, notes that the outstanding thing about the primitive community of grace-sharers was its roominess, in contrast with the narrow Jewish sects and Greek cults. The Way could unite the world because it ignored the distinctions which kept it divided. We need to restore the roominess of the ransomed community. God’s house is big enough for all his family. The Father has begotten no surplus or unwanted children.

The Stumblingblock

[Essay]

Our movement, that began as a project to unite the Christians in all the sects, has ended up more divided than those whom we sought to unite. This came about by a false philosophy developed in our initial fracture. The symbol of that philosophy is the use of instrumental music. To those who oppose it, it is viewed as an indication of rebellion. To those who defend it, it is visible proof of their liberty. It is apparent to thinking men that we must go back and heal this original fracture or remain a divided movement. The alternatives are to continue to attack each other, or simply to ignore each other. The first approach has not worked for over one hundred years and the second is not the way of Christ—it is dishonest. The real hope lies not in one party surrendering to the other but both parties surrendering to Christ. To undo the factional error of our fathers, instrumental music must be removed from the category of a test of fellowship. Suggests five considerations which may make the task of reconciliation easier: (1) The use of the instrument is not a test of one's respect for the authority of Christ; (2) Both those who defend and those who oppose instrumental music do so upon the basis of deduction— based upon a philosophy of interpretation growing out of presuppositions formulated by collating and interpreting isolated passages. (3) Each side approaches the scriptures with an interpretive bias for which there is no specific authority; (4) We must reject as childish the notion that we cannot be in fellowship with “brothers in error” since we are all brothers in error, although not all in the same error; (5) The use of instrumental music does not negate our relationship as brothers. Concludes with a personal declaration regarding fellowship in spite of differences.

Transplanted Hearts

[Essay]

In response to a letter in which the death of a well-known individual is offered as evidence that God does not exist, observes that except for the publicity it was given it was no different than the death of any other person on earth. So the essential question becomes simply, “Why do men die?” Then the death of any specific individual (regardless of the circumstances surrounding his death) cannot be used as the proof of the existence or non-existence of God. The best way to determine whether God exists or not is by taking him at his word in unreserved obedience. He has promised to give a new heart to those who submit their will to his unqualifiedly.

The Unsearchable Riches

[Essay]

Just as nothing has been added to the material universe since creation, nothing has been added to God's revelation since John penned the book of Revelation. Yet, as in the natural realm, so in the spiritual, there will be unexplored depths to beckon men on until Jesus comes. The Bible is an inexhaustible storehouse written for all men of every age. It offers each generation new fruits which have never before been gathered. Nothing would discourage study more than the realization that there was nothing to be achieved by it.

The Question Box

[Essay]

Responds to questions prompted by his article titled, "The Stumblingblock" (Volume 30, No. 7) in which he proposed that the question of instrumental music cease to be regarded as a "test of fellowship" among brethren. The ten questions and answers appear in three categories: Debating the Question, Congregational Singing, and The Possible Effect.

Moral Philosophy

[Essay]

Responds to a letter from a graduate student of philosophy who asserts that "every moral or ethical precept enunciated by Jesus was borrowed from a prior source and was not a divine declaration” (as the student was taught to believe). Observes that moral obligations are inherent in the nature of man as a social and rational being. Laws may define and clarify them but they can never create them. Since brilliant thinkers existed long before Jesus, we should not be surprised to find a wealth of wisdom literature in the philosophic works of many ancient people. However, one of the clearest examples of a unique ethical precept enunciated by Jesus is his teaching related to love—agape— that active and benevolent good will which stops at nothing to accomplish the good of its object. It required the cross to demonstrate its depth and give it meaning. Until this time, the natural concept was that love is responsive to that which was lovable in the object. But agape is exactly the opposite. It is the ability to love the unlovable, thus creating worth in the object. The uniqueness of Christianity is not in the code of morals which it predicates but in the revelation of God himself in Jesus as the manifestation of eternal life. Heathen philosophers discovered moral truths but they could not find power to implement them in their own lives. Christianity is not an ethical code trying to make us good from without, but an inner transformation which purifies from within.

More Questions

[Essay]

Responds to additional questions prompted by his article titled “The Stumblingblock” (Volume 30, No. 7) which proposed that the matter of instrumental music be removed from that category of doctrines regarded as tests of fellowship. The questions are: (1) How can we overcome the problem of division on a local level? (2) How would you approach the problem of a Christian Church and Church of Christ in a small town who have little contact with each other due to bitterness created in the past by outside evangelists? (3) What can a group of concerned students in a non-instrument oriented Christian college do to further unity as you see it? (4) It seems to me that you have sold out and adopted the policy that if you can't beat 'em, join 'em. What do you say? (5) What should a congregation do where half the members want to put in an instrument and half oppose it? (6) If we silence our instrument when non-instrumental brethren are visiting, should they not put one in when we visit them? (7) I would like to call on the Church of Christ preacher to pray when he comes to our service but I fear dividing the congregation. What should I do? (8) I cannot see how we can demonstrate unity while meeting in separate places — some using the instrument and some refusing to do so. Concludes with practical suggestions for achieving unity.

About Authority

[Essay]

Responds to recent assertions that there is room in the kingdom for diversity in understanding, opinion, and method of operation, so long as the authority of Jesus is respected as absolute. Notes that upon closer examination, those making such statements still insist on the infallibility of their partisan deductions with regard to controversial issues— precisely the spirit which prompted our schisms at the outset. It is not becoming of them to insist upon respect for the authority of Jesus in areas where he has said nothing while coldly disregarding what he has repeatedly said in another area of such importance— the sin of division and the crime of “setting at naught a brother” for whom Jesus died.

Rivers of Living Water

[Essay]

Describes in detail the elaborate ceremony associated with the Jewish feast of tabernacles, the feast at which Jesus stood up and cried out: “If any many thirst, let him come unto me, and drink . . . out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water,” referring to the Holy Spirit that they that believe on him were to receive after his departure from the earth. Discusses the relationship of thirst and belief, noting that the believer is to be the channel through which the Holy Spirit abundantly flows. Points out that the fountain of living waters is the result of the indwelling Spirit, noting that the Spirit (1) was to be a gift, (2) could be received only by those who believe in Jesus, (3) could only come after Jesus was glorified, and that (4) we can only become channels of blessing by receiving the Spirit. Shows the fallacy of arguments claiming that the Spirit is identical with the word of God and that the promise of the Spirit was given only to the apostles. Asserts that the community of God is a fraternity of the Spirit— filled ones who (1) worship by the Spirit, (2) glory in Jesus Christ, and (3) put no confidence in the flesh. It follows that the community of God is a spiritual community because it is the community of the Spirit.

The Big Mistake

[Essay]

Maintains that the gravest error contributing to division in the religious world is the mistaken view that the new testament is composed of twenty-seven books or letters. Asserts that not one word of the new testament has ever been written with ink or put on paper. The word “testament” means “a covenant.” The old covenant was written on two tablets of stone, consisting of ten commandments. The new covenant is written directly on minds and hearts. The Big Error is in perceiving the new covenant to be a new law and salvation as contingent upon one’s understanding it all perfectly and obeying it meticulously. But many died for the faith before a single apostolic letter was written. The new covenant is a person (Isa. 42:6; 49:8) and the relationship created by the new testament is a personal relationship. Jesus is God's new testament. The new covenant was completed on Pentecost. Nothing was ever added to it. The gospel is good news consisting of seven facts. The apostolic letters were all written to people who were already in the testamental kinship. The letters were intended for the instruction of God's children.

An Open Proposition

[Essay]

Asserts that the position of brethren in "Churches of Christ" on fellowship is a flat denial of the principle of the restoration movement as set forth in "The Declaration and Address." It is contrary to the fundamental teaching of the apostolic epistles, and is both unscriptural and anti-scriptural. It is carnal, spiritually immature, and divisive in its very nature. It is an approach to unity that is dishonest—professing respect for the authority of Jesus but cloaking the fact that it substitutes partisan interpretation as the real authority. The exaltation of views relative to the millennium or instrumental music to the realm of tests of fellowship negates the divine dynamic of brotherly love. Concludes with a proposal to hold a public discussion with Reuel Lemmons, editor of the Firm Foundation, at a place of his choosing. Pledges politeness and decorum and to act in kindness and love. Observes that it is tragic for us to continue divided and dividing while the rest of the world thinks in terms of unity and uniting.

Body and Spirit

[Essay]

God's direct involvement with mankind occurred through the Word becoming flesh. Just as Jesus entered the physical body of man to do God's will, man must enter the spiritual body of Christ to do God's will. One in whom the Spirit does not dwell is not in the body, the ekklesia. The body of Christ is a fellowship of the Spirit. The body is a creation of the Spirit. It is the action of the Spirit in and through baptism which brings us into our corporate relationship with one another and with Christ. It should be noted that: (1) the body of Christ is not composed of sects, denominations or parties; (2) The Holy Spirit never created a sect or faction; (3) The body of Christ was vitalized by the Spirit on Pentecost and has never died since that day; (4) The party spirit is always working to divide; (5) The unity of the Spirit is absolutely unaffected by racial or social differences; (6) The work of the Spirit does not cease with our introduction into the one body. We dare not limit fellowship to the adherents of any one historical movement.

Two Letters

[Essay]

Contrasts two letters— one from a young doctoral student disillusioned with “Church of Christism,” and another from an elder in the Church of Christ who asks what it is this “college-educated bunch of complainers” don’t like. Lists ten attitudes against which younger brethren are revolting: (1) The pre-occupation with partisan issues above human welfare; (2) The arrogance of clericalism and the hypocrisy which pretends that we do not have a professional clergy; (3) The assumption of infallibility in interpretation of Scripture; (4) The studied refusal to take a positive stand upon the important problems threatening the world of mankind; (5) The hypocrisy involved in making it appear that we have no partisan power structures to restrict or restrain brethren; (6) The unwarranted equation of the restoration movement with the one body to the exclusion of those outside one of our factions; (7) The scrapping of scriptural texts, selecting isolated passages to create a system and defending the same as the will of God (“church of Christism”); (8) The closed door policy toward meaningful dialogue with other sincere students of God’s word; (9) The intrusion of censorship groups which judge fidelity to Christ by the brotherhood journals to which one subscribes; (10) The vanity of those who have majored in Bible and conclude that this makes them experts in all other fields.

The Moral Being

[Essay]

By nature man is a moral being. The exercise of the rational powers with which he is endowed leads to the development of a principle within to which he is obligated. This principle produces a sense of moral obligation or oughtness which is not subject to further definition since being primary there are no simpler terms into which one can break it down. Since man is a moral agent it is essential that he understand the conditions imposed upon him by virtue of the rationality of his being. Moral agency grows out of the fact that man can not only conceive of right and wrong, he can choose to perform what his conscience endorses as right. Moral obligation is the obligation to choose an ultimate end of life as the highest good in the universe, as well as the necessary means by which to obtain that end. Man cannot be made a moral being by law or statute— by imposition of authority from without. Man is conscious that he is free, and it is this nature that makes him a moral agent. Any religion which attempts to make man be good by authoritarian pronouncement is doomed to failure.

The Spirit and Liberty

The first community of saints lived, walked, and rejoiced in the Spirit, apart from whom they would have been helpless. The people of God are more than a group of individuals who believe in God. They are God at work in his world, the temple of God, a living vehicle to take God to men. They experienced persecution of every kind but they drew upon the power of God. That same power is available to us. But in its absence we have been seduced into believing that we can generate our own power through printing programs, advertisement, and the perfection of liturgy and ritual. Yet the structure we have created is dead. We go to great lengths to breathe life in to it, but it is the life of the system. We mistake mass enthusiasm for the dynamic of God within. The answer to our condition is simple: we must leave our nets— the things in which we have trusted for security, support, success, and welfare— and follow Jesus. Our task is to recover the sense of closeness to God through recognition of the power and purpose of the Holy Spirit. We should take note of what the Spirit did for the first believers: (1) granted strength and power in their inner being; (2) overpowered and overcame the temptations of the flesh; (3) experienced a life on an altogether different level than that in the flesh; (4) allowed to enter the sphere of God's grace; (5) articulated their deepest yearnings, translating them into the language of heaven. Our life in Christ is dependent upon our relationship with the Spirit through faith.

Throwing Down Error

While commending the general attitude of a fellow-editor's plea for unity, asserts that there is a concealed "booby-trap" in his proposal that states that "when each has thrown down what error he may have possessed and embraced the truth his brother has been able to show him, we . . . will have undenominational Christianity.” The questions are: Does this brother affirm he is free from error or does God endorse his ignorance? Is there any person on earth in the fellowship who is not possessed of some error? If one does not need to “throw down what error he may have possessed” as a condition of entering the fellowship of God, why must he throw it down to be received into the fellowship of men? How much error can one hold and still be in the fellowship? Who determines the amount of error acceptable to God? Who is the official interpreter? Any person who makes freedom from error the basis of unity can never make Jesus the common denominator for oneness. When you substitute knowledge of propositions for faith in a person as the basis of unity you become a schismatic. If a person is right about Jesus, he can be wrong about a lot of things and still be saved; if he is wrong about Jesus, he can be right about everything else and still be lost. The solution to the problem is simple: we must receive all whom God receives upon the same basis that he has received them. Freedom from error is not a condition of entering heaven or none of us would ever make it. It is one’s attitude toward truth that makes the difference.

At the Milepost

[Essay]

An informal “chat” with readers about finances, fees, and future plans. Suggests that there must be a complete revolution in our concept of ministry and in our relationship to structures and a distinction made between what we have concocted and what God has created. Mentions plans to present an occasional article from a brother who is “different,” considering that honest dissent is wholesome. Pledges to allow each man to stand upon his own merits without condemning him ahead of time because someone has placed him in a partisan stereotype. Notes the staleness of what regularly appears in some of the brotherhood journals. Observes that the brethren are going around and around on the partisan treadmill, answering questions no one is asking and saying nothing that touches life as we have to live it.

Commandoes for Christ

[Essay]

After announcing the theme for the present year—Commandoes for Christ—expresses a sense of inner urgency to share in the months ahead what may appear evolutionary. Observes that our illusion that we are conquering the world for Christ must be recognized for what it is. We are losing the battle, but it was not intended to be thus. Soldiers of Christ were to be “more than conquerors.” There was to be discipline, hardship, suffering, and endurance. But somewhere along the line the Enemy convinced us to withdraw from the combat zone and build fortresses into which to retire in safety. We have created the institutional church and become victimized by our own creation. What we think of “the church” bears little resemblance to the ekklesia of God. But to be effective, one must work within an existing fellowship. Those who try to reform by starting over historically always create a group more sectarian than the one they abandoned—due to the fact that it was started by sectarians. Revelation 2, 3 reveals that God accepts the faithful within unfaithful congregations, and he never recommended that the faithful pull out and start a rival institution. The institutional church of our day is a vast mission field. After surveying the current situation of the institutional church and suggesting a complete tactical change, concludes with an outline of a ten-point program to be elaborated in future essays.

The Place

[Essay]

Artfully describes the special place where he used to go often as a young preacher still going to high school, a place that had a special pull on his heart, an isolated, moss-covered ledge extending out above a gently winding river, a place that helped to clear the cobwebs from his brain and air out the musty corners of the soul. Observes that when you have known such a place you can go anywhere on earth without doubting the existence or the providence of God. Once you have come to know the Presence in your life, nothing else that happens can stifle or erase it.

The Concerned Remnant

[Essay]

It is evident that “the church” in our day is wholly unlike “the Way” as depicted in Luke and Acts. We seldom think of “the working of his mighty power.” There is no thought of wrestling with the cosmic forces of the universe. Instead, we find that (1) we have watered down sin until it is no longer considered an offense against God; (2) We have lost the sense of the need for personal reconciliation with God; (3) We have been betrayed into resting our hope in an institution rather than in a Savior; (4) We have allowed ourselves to be brainwashed into dividing our lives into areas called secular and sacred. The real question is how shall we recapture our freedom and regain the power which can make us “more than conquerors through him that loved us”? The ground for optimism lies in the ekklesia within the ekklesia— the remnant of concerned ones— who remain within the institutional church but come together as cell groups to become the leaven in each congregation, to work toward a restoration of freedom in Christ and a return to the power of God in the life of the body.

The Touch of Life

[Essay]

The religious establishment of our day does not exist to further and promote the ideals of Jesus upon the earth. Reform is long overdue. Jesus did not come to establish a new religion in the earth. He came to put an end to “religion” as a means of serving God. The only religion acceptable to God is life itself. It is going personally to ascertain the needs of widows and orphans with a view to relieving them. There is no intimation of anything done in a chapel. It involves worship in spirit and in truth. It is expressed in concern for the helpless and with the life of integrity. The scriptures are not to be converted into a legalistic code lest we nullify the purpose of the cross. Jesus came that we might have life— through a vital personal relationship— not religion. The scriptures are to lead us to Jesus and Jesus’ message is always “Follow me!” It is possible to get so wrapped up in religion that we actually forget about the life that Jesus came to bestow and confuse religious activity with that life. The life of Jesus touched all of life about him, and he was no less the Son of God when dealing with the physical needs of mankind than when dealing with the spiritual. Salvation is for the whole man. Jesus describes the criteria for the final judgment in terms of active concern for the needy— not upon doctrinal correction. Jesus would say, if your enemy hunger, do not preach him a sermon, but feed him. Jesus may be nearer the slum dwelling than he is to the modernistic suburban cathedral. Our plea is that we cease to trust in our rituals to purchase God’s approval and move into the world in meaningful encounter.

Opening Our Windows

The division within our movement nullifies our appeal for unity and gives lie to our claim of superior knowledge of the will of God. Our orthodox editors continue to claim it is simply a question of respect for the authority of the word. But the arrogant assumption that only one minority group has any real respect for the authority of Jesus is merely an escape from facing up to meaningful encounter with those who differ with our interpretations. It is time for sweeping reformation. There are things we must surrender: (1) We must reject the concept that restoration of the ancient order means the reproduction in our age of any congregation established by or existing in the days of the apostles; (2) We must divest ourselves of the notion that every method of Jesus in the implementation of his divinely ordained purpose is equally important with that purpose; (3) We must forever free ourselves from the grave error that fellowship is equivalent to endorsement; (4) We must rebel against factional leadership whose purpose is to maintain our sectarian status quo and who thwart every move toward a greater sense of oneness; (5) We must develop the courage to speak out boldly against the intolerance and bigotry which characterizes the sectarian attitude of which our brethren are victims.

The Unmistakable Scent

Provides details of a typical Roman victory procession as a historical backdrop to understanding Paul's statement to the Corinthians that "God . . . leads us on Christ's triumphant way and makes our knowledge of him spread throughout the world like a lovely perfume!" (2 Cor. 2:14-16). Notes that wherever Christians go the scent of Christ is perceived— those who are heading for death imagine it to be the smell of doom. To the rest it is the very breath of life itself.

Spiritual Pioneers

[Essay]

Christians in our day have often lost the spirit of adventure contributing to a mere “treading of the courts” by apathetic worshippers. We have allowed ourselves to become blinded with the rays of tradition. What is called “Christianity” by millions has produced a lukewarm institution that makes even God want to vomit. But our hope lies not in the apathetic mass but in the lives of the venturesome few: the missionaries who cut themselves loose from financial apron strings; the school teachers who go into the ghettos, the college youth who open up inner city “coffee houses” as a lifeline to those battered by waves of passion and storms of hate; university students who dare to challenge the smut-merchants, parents who maintain unswerving discipline and who refuse to lower their ethical standards. The spirit of daring is not dead. To these the Way is not one of cold indifference. They have the courage to go wherever the action is.

Vocabulary Problems

[Essay]

Almost every word employed by the Holy Spirit through the envoys of Christ has been abused and given a misleading connotation in our generation. It should be one of our tasks to rescue that terminology and restore it to its proper place so that it will once more communicate the thought of God. We need to emphasize that every Christian is a life recruit in full-time service for Jesus, and we are God’s children wherever we are.

We must abandon our unscriptural and misleading distinctions which perpetuate the idea that life is compartmentalized into “secular” and “spiritual.” The “high calling of God” is not to enter the pulpit but to come into Christ. We must recognize that while we are all important to the body we cannot all do the same thing in the same way. We must avoid the conclusion that the only way men can function is through organized activity. One must avoid being motivated by a spirit of sectarian rivalry. We must cease to think of our brethren as cogs to keep the wheels of the institution turning.

The Planned Experience

[Essay]

If death is all there is then there is no sense at all to existence. But if suffering and death are part of a plan leading to a transcendent experience, they are at least understandable. Statements by Paul make it evident that if one can grasp the significance of grace and come to rely on it, he has the foundation for a sane evaluation of self and destiny. The legalistic approach makes God a police judge instead of a Father, and leaves us unfitted for a life free from worry and concern for self. Grace frees us from inner dread. One may even choose pain if he realizes that it is a road to a better life (e.g., a cripple submitting to the pain of corrective surgery). Pain is only intolerable when it seems pointless. A Christian does not leave home when he dies, he goes home!

The Complete Eclipse

[Essay]

In 2 Corinthians 3, Paul makes it clear that the former covenant, and the temporary glory associated with it, has been completely eclipsed by the glory of the new. Not only has the law been done away, we have been freed from the law as a means of hope of justification. But men have changed the epistles of love into a written code and like the Jews their hearts are hardened and they cannot realize that Jesus did away with the veil. Let us remove the veil so we can see clearly that we are not under law but under grace.

The Cultural Challenge

[Essay]

A challenge to the whole general approach to the life and needs of the latter half of the twentieth century, which is affirmed to be irrelevant and out-moded, and ineffective. The body of Christ must change as human demands change. The change must come in our approach to life and the environment in which destiny has placed us. Our world has shifted from a rural to an urban culture, and this makes some of our methods as outmoded as a scythe in a thousand acre wheat field. A good example is our three meetings per week, which has become a fixed and formal pattern. While it suited the needs of a rural lifestyle it is likely not best suited for our day (for reasons enumerated). The same may be said for “revivals” and “gospel meetings.” As a remedy it is proposed that we (1) re-evaluate our meetings to determine if we are simply maintaining a tradition which is no longer meaningful; (2) play down the idea of church and recapture the idea of a divine family; (3) put our meetinghouses to use to serve real needs; and (4) stop the brain drain and talent waste by drawing upon the intellectual resources of the whole body of believers. We must place preachers in the role of parent or coach—inspiring others, providing incentives, training and disciplining each member until he responds automatically to the openings and opportunities which are presented.

God's Man Yes

[Essay]

Exposition of 2 Cor. 1:19, 20, in which Paul refers to Jesus as the divine “yes.” The implications are that (1) Jesus is not a doubtful quantity; faith in him is established by the same rules that govern the establishment of fact by witnesses; (2) Jesus is the expression of the creative power which made the universe; men look for thrills in gambling and drugs because they no longer conceive of themselves as working together with God, plugged into the power source of the universe; (3) Every divine promise finds its affirmative in him; (4) Only through Jesus man finds his ultimate in spiritual enrichment in sharing the glory of God.

Living Letters

[Essay]

Although God announced numerous covenants, there were but two designated the first and second, the old and new. Both covenants were written by “the finger of God,” the Holy Spirit—the first upon two tablets of stone, the second upon the tables of the heart. But not one word of the new testament was ever written with pen or ink. There are not twenty-seven books in the new testament. The new covenant is not a written code as was the old—it is inscribed on the sensitized heart of every recipient of grace, enabling us to “reflect like mirrors the glory of the Lord.” This glorious relationship is actually a new birth, introducing us into a new humanity through a process of inner transformation. The purpose of the new covenant scriptures is to develop responsible citizenship; they are love letters from the Father, regulating conduct and behavior. But our relationship with God is not created by conformity to a written code. It is carved into the heart by the Spirit.

Commandos I Have Known

[Essay]

Explains that commandos are soldiers who often fight apart from the regular army, but always as a part of it; they are always where the action is, so they must be versatile and inventive, adapting their strategy to the changing tides of the conflict. Tells about numerous commandos for Christ that he has met, including a lead miner, a cotton farmer, the wife of a successful salesman, a fork-lift operator, a gasoline service station operator, a college student, a pharmacist, and students planning to become involved in the political realm. Concludes by noting that all truth is one truth. Therefore, no one ever teaches any truth without teaching God's truth. Every good gift comes from God and all must be channeled into his service.

Harvard Experience

[Essay]

Gives a summary of an exchange with several scholars (Krister Sendahl, John Lord O'Brian, Robert Hutchison, Charles Warren, and James Fisher) at Harvard Divinity School on the theme "Toward a Conservative Ecumenism." His presentation dealt with the extent, nature, place, and purpose of unity. Provides a summary of remarks by Stendahl, Hutchison, and Fisher. The encounter was written up in the Boston Globe.

Meeting an Author

[Essay]

Provides details of an encounter with Dr. Joseph Fletcher, author of Situation Ethics, during a two hour lecture by Fletcher on “Verbal Tools in Christian Ethics” at Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge. Dr. Fletcher’s theme had to do with “Pauline ethics.” While Fletcher maintained that there was a difference in the ethics of Paul and the ethics of Jesus (described in the essay), when asked by the author if the two differed in their understanding of agape, Fletcher opined that they probably did not. When Fletcher asked the author to share with the class his personal views on agape, the latter suggested that if Jesus and Paul were present and could be questioned, any apparent difference in the view of ethical behavior might melt away.

Student Revolution

[Essay]

Recounts details of events witnessed at Harvard during the student revolt of April 9. Observes that most of us are still living in the dreamy past, in an era of the easy answer philosophy. We still want to stroll down the violet-bordered lanes of childhood, in a world where everything was either black or white. We plaintively ask why people cannot be satisfied with the good life of ease and comfort. We have worked hard for what we have and ask why we cannot now enjoy it. We point to our gleaming automobiles, our sparkling appliances, and our shiny gadgets. But we have reared a generation which sees these things of our culture as symbols to hide sham, pretence, and hypocrisy. They do not equate life with things. They are not unaware of the millions who are starving nor that our foreign policy is selfish.

There is also a feeling that the church is sometimes more concerned with itself than with the needs of suffering humanity. It is important that we listen to our young people and not be bothered by their long hair to the point of forgetting the humanity of our sons.

About Our Buildings

[Essay]

Points out that while the primitive saints owned no “church edifice” our tradition has come to equate the spiritual strength of a congregation with the real estate holdings, not upon its service to humanity. In our day it is often unwise to erect “church buildings” in certain areas, yet these are the places where the penetration of the Presence is most desperately needed. While not suggesting that we abandon our structures, does suggest that we re-examine them and their purposes and convert them into meaningful units in the service of the Master. Suggests that our buildings be converted into launching pads, filling stations, and arsenals, that we stop our simplistic approach and equip our brethren to cope with life as it is and where it must be lived— in school, office, shop, and neighborhood. Our buildings must be considered as radiation centers from which power reaches out to touch life where it is and as it is. We must not enter them to hold a service, since service is what we do in the world, not what we do in a “church building.”

Our Real Purpose

[Essay]

The purpose of Mission Messenger is to plead for the unity of all believers in the Lord Jesus Christ. Yet unity is but a means to an end— it is the means by which the whole world will be led to believe that God sent his son. Until we can demonstrate that we have a unitive principle magnificent enough to hold us together, we labor in vain to influence others to think in terms of the one body and one Spirit. Two perversions of the truth have made us a laughingstock in the eyes of those who know that our divided status belies our words: (1) We have applied scriptures designed to separate us from pagans to our relationship with other children of God; (2) We have propagated the inconsistent view that fellowship in Christ is contingent upon conformity of interpretation of doctrinal matters. It is time to recover the majesty and might of the kingdom Jesus came to proclaim. Let us answer the prayer of Jesus in our generation. Let us cease the sectarian double-talk and let the world know that we are for unity— not unity at any price, for the price has already been paid, at Calvary.

The Magnificent Concern

[Essay]

Reflecting on 2 Corinthians 8:1, 2, observes that when we are moved to generosity we need to recognize that we are the recipients of grace, not the dispensers. There is the danger that we may feel that we are essential to God and that grace could not come without us, when the fact is that we could not go without grace. The purpose of life is to glorify God and we do this when we share unselfishly with others.

Student Attitudes

[Essay]

Notes the growing state of student discontent in the liberal arts colleges maintained by Churches of Christ. While students would like to hear controversial figures and have the opportunity to openly question them, administrators are generally dedicated to maintaining the status quo. Does not share the feeling that students ought to simply accept what they are taught without question. If we have become the most ardent challengers of the whole religious world, we ought not to object when we are asked to sup from our own spoon. Each generation must honestly face up to its own errors in thinking if it is to eliminate rather than perpetuate them.

Men and Morals

[Essay]

After noting that his purpose in life is to “serve his own generation by the will of God,” proposes to face up to the so-called “new morality” or “situation ethics.” Asserts that the real basis of situation ethics is that circumstances alter cases and mercy is often preferred in spite of our laws. Further observes that Jesus emphasized the spirit behind the law, which is the foundation of situation ethics. The new covenant scriptures are God’s response to human situations, telling us how Jesus would react under such circumstances. Gives brief account of his own spiritual encounter some years prior. Then gives an overview of the historical origin of the phrases “new morality” and “situation ethics” by John A. T. Robinson. Reviews the thesis of Robinson’s book, Christian Morals Today. Robinson does not believe there is a Christian ethic for all times but that as times change Christians must change with them, continually revising our views as to what is moral and non-moral. Cites as proof the changing views of theologians regarding war, capital punishment, homosexuality, and suicide. Promises a continuation of the essay in a subsequent one (“Freedom and Ethics”).

The Authority Totem

[Essay]

Asserts that brethren in the Churches of Christ confuse their deductions with God’s declarations and regard the rejection of their interpretations as a disregard for the authority of God’s word. This has resulted in a restoration totem pole with a couple of dozen grotesque figures squatting on each other and representing the factional image passed along to us by our factional forefathers. According to this hierarchy of doctrinal positioning, a sectarian is one who has what we oppose, and an extremist is one who opposes what we have. This results in absurd simplistic propositions for eliminating division. Our difficulty is not a question of attitude toward the authority of God but an attitude toward brethren. In accepting a brother one does not accept the errors of his thinking. No one can be accepted unless it be in spite of his errors. Concludes with an appeal to reject the errors of our forefathers and to resurrect the ideals which gave us birth and unfurl the flag of peace as the rallying standard for the Christians in all the sects.

Authority of the Word

[Essay]

An address to the Fourth Annual Unity Forum. Denies we are divided because of a disrespect for the authority of the scriptures else we would not appeal to them even in debate. Rather, we are divided over our deductions from scripture. Revelation is what God said; interpretation is what men think he meant by what he said. The fact is that we all examine the word of God upon the basis of our pre-suppositions derived from a philosophy of interpretation— which we confuse with the basis of authority. Rules of interpretation attempt to measure what God has said by something he did not say. Our problem is not speaking where the Bible speaks, or remaining silent where it is silent, but that we approach the speaking and the silence from different positions, neither of which is dictated by the Bible. Concludes by responding to several objections to his thesis: (1) will this not place us in fellowship with brethren in error? (2) Is not one condemned who brings another gospel? (3) Can two walk together unless they be agreed?

Freedom and Ethics

[Essay]

Continuation of an earlier review of “the new morality” as defined and described by John A. T. Robinson in his book Christian Morals Today.” Regarding chapter 1, “Fixity and Freedom,” concurs that (1) one must have an accepted ethic to avoid becoming unglued or fragmented in the absence of a proper standard or guideline; (2) Jesus did not come to give us a classified code of ethics; (3) love is the one absolute in the divine-human encounter, and (4) it is in application of love that we experience the greatest diversity. On the other hand, (1) does not concur with the documentary hypothesis as applied to the old covenant scriptures; (2) does not agree that there is a difference in the ethical teaching of Jesus and that of Paul; (3) denies that there are no changeless principles. Observes that if there are no bounds of relativity then relativity is an absolute. If it is a measuring criterion, who is to do the measuring and upon what immovable object shall he stand to plumb the depths of the universe? Agrees with a great deal contained in the chapter titled “Law and Love.” Agrees that love abolishes law as the foundation of our vital relationship with God and that the Christian ethic can never be set forth as law plus love or law qualified by law. Maintains that we must go beyond the situational ethicists and explore the nature of the love that fulfills the law. There must also be a definition of the “situation”— its antecedents and consequents. Believes that man’s tendency will be to accept current standards of morality in a given situation rather than to weigh the effects of his actions dispassionately.

The Spring of Action

[Essay]

Taking the mainspring of a watch as his point of departure, notes that human beings, like a watch, receive their motivating power from within. Man is a creature of motivation, subject to drives, desires, and ambitions. Being a creature of will he can surrender to these or subjugate them. Notes that the apostle Paul declares that his heart was an open book, readable by God, and that there was no selfishness in it. Every action he performed grew out of the love of Christ, implying that love and selfishness are antithetical. The very essence of the Way is that Jesus gave up everything. He was the great unselfish One. If the love of Christ is the motivating force of life, that life will be different. If one can cleanse his heart of unworthy motives and allow the spring of action to be love, his whole existence will be transformed.

Law and Morals

[Essay]

In his book, Situation Ethics, Joseph Fletcher asserts that there are only three possible approaches in reaching moral decisions: legalistic, antinomian, or situational. The author dismisses the antinomian position as having no place in the Christian life. Provides an extensive analysis of the legalistic approach, characteristic of many within the restoration movement, and rejects it on the basis of his analysis of scripture. Then concludes by examining the “law of liberty” for which a summary of concepts is enumerated: (1) The Christian is not subject to a written code imposed from without; (2) the new covenant scriptures were never intended to be compiled into a code of statutes but as a collection of love letters, designed to serve as guidelines of behavior; (3) In interpreting the new covenant scriptures one must resist the impulse to show himself as an “enforcer of the law;” (4) If the new covenant scriptures are a legal code, I must comply in absolute obedience. I cannot have law and grace— it is law or grace; (5) The absolute in our relationship to God is love agape! Love, rightly understood, properly defined, and correctly applied, is the foundation of Christian ethics.

Ministry and Ministers

[Essay]

Our brethren have no adequate concept of ministry as set forth by the Holy Spirit. Every child of God on earth is made a full-time minister by the same act that made him a child of God. We enter the ministry by accepting Jesus and we leave it by rejecting him. It is a bit dishonest to pretend that we in “Churches of Christ” do not have a clergy-laity system. One who follows his conscience and chooses to minister for Jesus in a way other than pulpit proclamation does not thereby forsake the ministry or leave full-time service.

Inside the Circle

Through the blood of Christ those Gentiles who were outside the pale are now inside the circle of God's love. There is nothing else that can purge the conscience of guilt. And it is sin and guilt which make us hate those of another race. It was not our goodness which eliminated the fence that separated us from God but the boundless love of God in allowing the Son to die. This is the divine answer to racial problems. No one can be "with us inside the circle" (Eph. 2:13) who is not first with us within our hearts. When we cease to see men with different colored skin and see only men for whom Christ died, we are on our way to the removal of the pale from our hearts. We need to have our hearts gently touched and strangely warmed by Jesus until the glow of a transformed life acts as a magnet to draw those inside who are still without the pale.

The Supreme Dynamic

The last in a series of articles on morality and ethics. The position taken in this article is that love is the standard by which all else is measured. Our problem centers around the nature of love. The love that God had for the world, that Jesus manifests for us, and the love we must have for both God and our brothers is agape. (1) This love, which is poured out into the heart of the believer by the Holy Spirit, is not an emotion or sentiment, but an act of the will. (2) This love— the life of God incarnate, in us just as in Jesus— is always active in the accomplishment of its purpose, which is also the divine purpose. (3) The opposite of this love is not hate (which is the absence of love) but selfishness. One can hate without ever exercising any conscious feeling of animosity. (4) This love, which can love its enemies— something impossible for human love— creates value in its object. It is not a reaction to something loveable or pleasing in the object. Love is that active and beneficent goodwill which stops at nothing to achieve the good of the beloved object. It gives assurance that we have passed from death to life; it completely banishes fear; it is indestructible. To say that love transcends all legalistic code is to say that the life of God is not confined to statutes. Paul says love sums up all the commandments, thus law has no more claim upon one who really loves, since love cannot do wrong.

The Fading Fear

[Essay]

Reports on a meeting of top-level men in Churches of Christ with a prominent brother from the Christian Church. The mention of the event never leaked to the orthodox journals, but the effect has been seen from coast to coast. Also reports on the Manhattan Church of Christ entering into “the fellowship of giving and receiving” with an important Christian Church family. Also mentions that the administration of Pepperdine College reached the conclusion that the use of the instrument was no barrier to fellowship and both have spoken for the North American Christian Convention. Other similar reports are given as evidence that the futility of preaching unity while practicing partition is being recognized. Calls for a bold new approach: (1) freely admit our error in equating the restoration movement with the kingdom of heaven; (2) let the non-instrument brethren openly admit that our fathers were wrong when they made a test of fellowship out of instrumental music; (3) concede that we have betrayed the original restoration ideal as set forth in the “Declaration and Address” by Thomas Campbell. Our position on instrumental music is a deduction, an inferential truth which should not be bound upon others as a test of fellowship (proposition six of the “Declaration and Address”).

The Capture of Thought

[Essay]

We are engaged in a struggle for the minds of men. Men's hearts belong to God. Our task is not to discourage men from thinking. To stifle original thinking is to eradicate the image of God from the heart. We are to capture every thought and bring it to acknowledge the authority of Christ, whether that thought be labeled literary, scientific, mechanical, poetical, fictional or whatever. We need to encourage literary genius in our day. Let us not deride creative hearts, regardless of the art form. But let us recognize that all truth is one truth and all truth is God's truth.

Words of Lipscomb

[Essay]

Three quotations from the writings of David Lipscomb, former editor of the Gospel Advocate. The first gives insight into Lipscomb's thinking about the racially segregated churches, a concept and practice for which he could find no precedent in scripture. The second discloses his position on sectarianism. The third has regard to the fact that the only servants God has on earth have imperfect hearts.

Things to Come

[Essay]

The time has come for a real searching of God's word, our present condition, and our own hearts. Our present course is shameful. What is the real basis for our division? Every one of our factions says it's a lack of respect for the authority of the word. Yet every one believes that it alone respects that authority while all of the others do not. If the Word is as plain and simple as the brethren declare it is, why are there any divisions at all? Do only dishonest persons divide? We cannot continue in our childish course. It must be admitted that our attitude toward the new covenant scriptures has created division among honest and sincere brethren. There must be something in the way we regard the scriptures. The author announces plans to probe the difficulty of the restoration movement in which he will challenge the whole ground of Church of Christism and its mistaken view of the design and purpose of the apostolic writings. Intends to show that what our brethren call the pattern was not prescribed by God at all but is a compilation of partisan deductions and traditional preconceptions.

The Secret Plan

[Essay]

Expounds upon the significance of Eph. 1:9, 10, where Paul states that God has allowed us to know the secret of his plan in which he purposes that all human history shall find its fulfillment in Christ. Notes that (1) God is the God of a plan, that our universe is not the product of blind chance but that all that is made is linked together by the Maker into an unfolding pattern of such beauty that man must have a transformed nature to ever appreciate it. (2) God is the God of a secret, concealed for ages and revealed only after his children had reached maturity. Notes that we are fortunate to live in the age of the shared secret. (3) God is the God of human history which will be consummated in Christ. He is our existence, our motivation, our ground of being. (4) God is the God of fulfillment. There are no spare parts scattered over the workbench of time. Every desire, every thirst, every hunger, every legitimate drive finds its fulfillment in him. The secret is out; the dawn is coming, and he stands on the far-off shore beckoning.

Consecrated Diversity

[Essay]

Address to an academic institution. Notes the example of Jesus who chose to present himself to mankind as a teacher and a priest— who was one of the people, revealing the sublimely sacred as being truly secular— as a teacher-priest. Suggests that academic teachers are in a unique position to serve students in their capacity as teacher-priests. Enumerates a variety of ways in which this is true. Then focuses on the man in the pew, where the numbers and potential strength of the church lie. Maintains that these ought to be developed by church leaders to become teacher-priests in whatever walk of life they may find themselves.

The Slave Mentality

[Essay]

While expounding on Gal. 4:31, notes that the way in which we look at ourselves is going to affect our whole attitude toward God and our demeanor toward one another. The law enslaved and made prisoners of men. If God is regarded as a tyrannical slave-owner we will get the idea that the community of saints is a group of unreconciled individuals living in slave quarters. But if we recognize that we are sons, born of the free woman, we can sit down together at the table without hostility and inner trauma. There is an insecurity which characterizes those who see security in law-keeping. They try to save others but dare not testify that they themselves are saved. They cannot really forgive for they are not sure they are forgiven. They develop a smug hypocrisy which makes bold claims while filled with inward doubt. What a sense of freedom comes when grace swoops down and lifts the crushing burden off one's back. We are sons of the free woman— grace!

The Priority Value

[Essay]

Describes the controversy that arose in the early Christian community over the issue of circumcision. Observes that Paul wrote that the only thing that matters is “faith which expresses itself with love.” Notes that while circumcision is no longer an issue, we have substituted other issues in its place. Yet Paul’s observation in Gal. 5:6 still holds. We are always getting caught on the “either-or” hook: “either circumcision or uncircumcision.” We say a thing has to be either right or wrong, but we overlook the fact that regardless of which it is, it still may be relatively unimportant. All truth is equally true but not all truth is equally important. It is not true that everything in the Bible is equally valuable to know. Some things have no real validity in Christ. The essential thing is to be in Christ. If Paul were writing directly to our situation he would say, for example, In Christ Jesus there is no validity in using instrumental music, or in not using it, it is a matter of faith which expresses itself through love.

Facing the Issues

[Essay]

A critique of an article titled “Faith or Opinion” written by Rueul Lemmons and published in Firm Foundation in the September 30, 1969 issue, which gives the highlights of a meeting of leaders in Churches of Christ and Christian Churches to discuss ways of getting the two bodies closer together. Notes that while the article alleges that the problem between the two groups continues to be one of faith versus opinion, the real issue concerns who shall be the infallible interpreter of scripture for other men. Goes on to examine and refute each of the arguments used to support the idea that the instrument is a matter of faith rather than of opinion (Nadab and Abihu, Hamburger in the Lord's Supper, areas of silence, and others). Concludes by first noting that such meetings as the one referred to in the article by Lemmons are not really for the purpose of seeking truth, since the participants seem to think they already have it. Denies that we must locate all of our issues in either faith or opinion before we can be one. One man's faith is another man's opinion, by definition. Rather than rejecting the brethren first and then discussing how to get them back together, suggests we receive the brethren first, then seek to resolve our problems. Proposes to make nothing a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition for salvation.

The Supreme Need

[Essay]

The Galatian letter stands as a constant reminder that men may be formed in Christ without Christ ever being formed in them. When we begin to trust in legalistic performances as the basis of our justification, we stifle the Spirit and thwart the further development of the transformed life. The image of Christ can only grow in an atmosphere of freedom, and this freedom is a product of grace. When we cease to trust in grace we are automatically cut off from the transforming power. It is only through complete surrender and utter abandonment of self to the Spirit that one can free himself from the flesh, that state of alienation from God where law reigns and one is under its dominion. Our supreme need is to have Christ formed in us.

According to the Pattern

[Essay]

Relates numerous examples of division within Churches of Christ over the years, then asserts that these are merely symptoms of a deep underlying fallacy entrenched in our thinking. Proposes an objective study of the underlying causes and basic reasons for our divisions. Notes that divisions have resulted from a fear of violating a divinely ordained pattern. Yet suggests that the whole “pattern concept” which makes of the apostolic letters mere legalistic documents be examined. Observes that every faction among us rejects as being a part of the pattern that which every other faction accepts as an essential part of it. It is not enough for one party to say that all that is necessary is to take the word of God for what it says, since that is precisely what each party feels it is doing now. Each party feels that it has an infallible interpretation and those who do not concur with the party exegesis do not understand the Bible at all. In each instance the pattern is the partisan interpretation which is equated with the will of God. This is creedalism in its worst form. Concludes with a series of questions and observations which will be explored in subsequent essays.

Our Personal Pattern

[Essay]

Observes that among the heirs of the restoration movement it is taken for granted that the new covenant scriptures constitute a detailed blueprint designed to meet every exigency and provide for every emergency, and that loyalty to Christ consists in finding and binding oneself by these details and binding them upon others. Asserts that there is no such legalistic pattern— that our pattern is to be found in the person of Jesus. While affirming the infallibility of God’s revelation in scripture, denies the infallibility of any human interpretation, including his own. Maintains that a “pattern” was needed by Moses as the agent charged with building something never before seen, whereas no pattern was needed for the real tabernacle since it was constructed by God himself. The apostolic letters were written not as a pattern but to call men back toward an ideal involved in their acceptance of Jesus. That ideal is the character of Jesus himself. It was never their intention to compile a code of laws. Insists that our pattern is not a law but a person. Jesus is our pattern and love is our guiding principle. Love is the summation of all law as well as the consummation of all law. If we view the new covenant scriptures as a code of laws we must have an official interpretation. In the case of the law of love, Jesus— our pattern— is the interpreter, the conscience is the immediate judge, and God is the final judge.

A Pattern of Freedom

[Essay]

While affirming belief that the scriptures are the word of God, as well as respect for both their origin and the authority for which they were given, asserts that to make a divisive instrument of that which was intended to unite us runs counter to the divine purpose. Notes that (1) God has always sought to insure the togetherness of his people. In a previous age this was done by law, but he now accomplishes it through love; (2) the previous covenant was written on tablets of stone, whereas the new covenant is written on tablets of human hearts; (3) to convert the grace of God into a law is to deprive us of the very thing we hope to achieve by such action; (4) the righteousness of God is not revealed in a law but in persons; (5) when the apostle says we are no longer under a custodian, he means we are no longer under a law; (6) all law requires interpretation and he who interprets regards his interpretation as law; he will regard those who fail to conform to his interpretation as violating the law. The apostles wrote to deal with specific conditions which change from one generation to another. But all such problems are problems of relationships and the principle by which relationships are governed never alter. Their validity inheres from the authority of their author. In carrying out the divine purpose the primitive saints made use of the means available to them and we are free to do the same. The relative importance of certain truths may fluctuate in different eras and in diverse areas. The method of implementing principles or truths may vary according to custom, environment or tradition, as may be seen in the cases of the washing of feet and in the feminine veil.

The Supper Pattern

[Essay]

The Lord's Supper serves as a good illustration of how honest men divide over what they think is involved in "the rigid pattern concept of the new covenant scriptures." It is especially important because it was to serve as a viable witness to our oneness. In it we give constant testimony to faith, hope, and love — a visible testimony to the unity of the one body. To insist upon the use of unleavened bread and one container is to assume that the historical account narrating the action of Jesus was intended to be a meticulous law of procedure binding upon Christians at all times and places and a criterion for judging the spiritual worthiness of others. Yet none of the postulates used to support such claims can be proven by a single passage from the new covenant scriptures. They represent a philosophy of interpretation, based upon rationalization and presupposition, a philosophy which is applied inconsistently. It simply ignores that Jesus sat down when he preached and opened his eyes when he prayed. It insists on unleavened bread— which was never commanded— yet glibly explains away footwashing and the holy kiss to which we have direct commands. The basic fallacy is in the assumption that the new covenant scriptures were intended as a written code of legalistic procedure to be applied irrespective of circumstances, thus knowing nothing of mercy. For to show mercy is to condemn the whole philosophy. To face human deductions to the point of division is not fidelity to God but a failure to understand the divine purpose. Our task is not to lay down laws governing the Supper but to live up to the love which it entails and embraces.

Sources of Our Patterns

[Essay]

When men believe that God provided a specific detailed pattern they must find one for everything. Most of our patterns consist of a combination of elements derived from three sources: (1) cultural and environmental factors; (2) reactions to other religious groups whom we consider as apostates or compromisers; (3) misconception and misapplication of scriptural passages lifted from their contextual setting and used to establish our preconceptions and presuppositions. So long as we think God intended to provide us a microscopic pattern with all details filled in we will be searching through our factional microscopes and arguing minutiae. If we realize that we have general guidelines and not a rigid set of regulations we will be free to work as best we can in whatever situation we confront.

There will come a great realignment of our forces which will ignore the battle lines of yesterday. More and more we will come to see that God has not imposed upon us a rigid and stereotyped pattern, but has given us guidelines within a historic situation.

That Glorious Generosity

[Essay]

Observes in Ephesians 1:4, 5, (1) the plan of God for a community of saints, not as an afterthought but as a fellowship designed for our spiritual growth toward maturity; (2) the purpose of God to have a family with whom to share his love in a reciprocal relationship; (3) the praise of God's glorious generosity which is our perpetual responsibility; and (4) the perfection or guiltlessness which is imputed to us because we are in Christ, resulting in our sharing in his eternal love.

The Money Pattern

[Essay]

Suggests that the reason we are divided over the apostolic pattern is because there is none. Our pattern is a person. The purpose of scripture is to bring us to him in a vital relationship known as eternal life. We have been the victims of eisegesis rather than recipients of exegesis. A case in point is the issue dubbed by the term "institutionalism." The whole thing centers around how a community of saints may spend its money, stemming from a mistaken view over what constitutes worship. The word "worship" is never once applied to anything we do on the Lord's Day morning. The terms "acts of worship" and "the worship" are not in the Bible. The concept of a public collection from the members every Sunday results from taking a specific instruction (1 Cor. 16:1-4) and elevating it to a universal law. This particular collection came about as the result of a spontaneous desire on the part of the givers (Rom. 15:26). All of this talk about “giving of your means” every Sunday as a legalistic requirement of heaven is just so much froth dreamed up by the Establishment for the perpetuation of its own image! The overwhelming majority of commentators agree that the money was to be set aside at home. Concludes that there is not one indication in scripture that any congregation of saints ever took up a public contribution every Sunday. To declare that this was a “divine pattern” is simply not true.

Internal Power

[Essay]

It is a tragedy that men so often live beneath their potential, oblivious of the power of Christ which can be theirs. The very power which created and sustains the universe is available to us through Jesus. It is the power to overcome self, but it is never imposed. Jesus will only dwell and work in the heart as we allow or permit. Christ will enable us to go as far as we are willing to go, but this requires absolute trust and complete surrender. It does not take much of a man to be a Christian but it takes all of him there is. Only when we give in to him can he freely give out to us!

The Name Pattern

[Essay]

Acknowledges that an essay written many years ago, “Whose Name Shall the Bride Wear?” written to prove that the Church of Christ was not a denomination, was actually more sectarian than those whom it was seeking to reach. Maintains that the ekklesia had no specific name in its inception. The saints were corporately designated only by simple nouns describing a relationship (functional unity, divine origin, present authority, in relation to government, in relation to heritage). To select any one of those terms and make it the means of identification for a specific group of believers is to create a denomination, and to do so in order to separate those Christians from others is the very essence of sectarianism. Examines the use of a lower case “c” in “church of Christ,” noting that sectarianism is an attitude of heart, not an accident of spelling. Notes that the term “Church of Christ” is not even found in scripture. Observes that if the church is to wear the name of the groom, contrary to the custom of the middle east at that time, it would be called the “church of Jesus” since “Christ” is his title, not his name. Quotes from Alexander Campbell in support of his abhorrence of sectism. Then quotes from G. C. Brewer’s lecture at Abilene Christian College in which he states that “to exalt any one of these [names] into the patented name of the church is to sectarianize that expression. If we have not done that very thing with the expression church of Christ then why do we not vary our terms in speaking of the church?” This topic is continued in the following issue of the paper.

A Sectarian Name

[Essay]

Continuation of a previous essay on “The Name Pattern.” Examines the arguments, and the scriptures upon which they are based, used to support the idea that the church has a formal and exclusive title— “the Church of Christ.” Examines Acts 4:12, Acts 20:23, Eph. 3:14, 15, and Heb. 12:23. Concludes, as earlier, that there is no official title for the ekklesia of the new covenant. While the expression “church of Christ” may be employed as a name of the church, it must never be employed as the name of a church. Acknowledges that there are Christians in the sects, that these are in the church of God by divine appointment and in sectarian pastures through personal choice, influenced by tradition, teaching and early training. Maintains that our task is not to unite sects but the Christians within them. We cannot accomplish this by creating another sect.

The Apostolic Attitude

[Essay]

Denies that we are under a legal code of statutes. Holds that such a system belongs on the other side of the cross. Law was to last only until faith came. One is either under law or under faith— but not both. Law does not rest on faith. But if we are not under a written code, what is the purpose of scripture? The primary purpose of scripture is to bring us into a vital relationship with Jesus Christ as Lord— eternal life. But if one thinks he has eternal life in the scriptures, he may become so devoted to them that he never comes to Jesus at all. The purpose of the law was to bring us to Jesus as the source of life. But if we are not led into a life giving relationship with him, all of our scriptural knowledge will go for naught. To have life in his name is to have life in his person. This life come to those who receive him. The first to do so were Jews who had no intention of abandoning the law of Moses. They were not looking for another law in the instructions of the apostles. The apostolic teaching was not then, nor has it ever been since, a written code or law for justification. Such a law requires machinery to enforce conformity; it requires interpreters of divine meaning. We serve in a new way— the way of the spirit. We are no longer under the way of a written code. The apostolic letters were designed to convince their recipients of the love of the writer. When we make of them a written code we revert to a pre-Calvary means of justification, living B.C. lives in an A.D. world.

Right On!

[Essay]

The title reflects the fact that the author is in revolt against the sectarian status quo. Observes that God's children are divided in open defiance of the divine will. But unity will not come at the hand of factional partisans nor by those who are dependent for financial and emotional support upon our partisan establishment. Predicts that our silly "Berlin walls" will be beaten down by courageous younger men who grasp the difference between being faithful to Jesus and being a satellite to a sect. Resolves to recognize and receive all of God's children as brothers regardless of their thinking about instrumental music, "institutionalism," the millennium, or spiritual gifts. Determines to pursue "the more excellent way." Urges that we abandon the philosophy of divisiveness and recognize that unity is not based upon conformity but upon community in Him. It is not knowing all of the same things, but all of us knowing the same One that makes us one. Insists that we be men and show the world that the bond of peace is not an imaginary and visionary something but a real tie that binds.

The Happiness Pattern

[Essay]

The purpose of the apostolic letters was not to produce life but to inform those in Christ that they already had it. Where the term "word of God" is used with reference to birth or begetting, it never refers to an apostolic epistle. Faith comes by the gospel. In the new testament preaching always concerns the proclamation of the good tidings of God to the non-Christian world. The apostolic letters do not comprise a written code. They were never intended to be a compilation of laws. They are guidelines to happiness (2 Cor. 1:24). The Living Way marked out the Way for us which, in most cases, calls for the use of commonsense and judgment, tempering our actions according to the needs of our brethren. Some things are always wrong. Others are wrong only under certain conditions. Our pattern is Jesus. The good news about him leads to faith in him— belief into him which involves commitment or surrender to him. In him we become partakers of eternal life, his life. In him we grow and mature in various aspects of life. It is here that the apostolic letters fulfill their role.

Brother Thomas on Unity

[Essay]

A review and reply to an article by J. D. Thomas entitled “Observations on Unity,” published in the Gospel Advocate for August 6. Reproduces the article in its entirety for perusal by the reader. Observes that the article is actually an apologetic for division and that Thomas’ definition of unity is wholly without scriptural basis. Notes that Thomas’ references to “full fellowship” are evidence that he is not dealing with fellowship on a scriptural basis. Rather, he seems to have it confused with endorsement. Concludes that the whole burden of Thomas’ essay is there will be no unity until everyone sees everything just as he does, which means that our unity is not in Christ’s redemptive act but in Brother Thomas’ expository ability. Commends Thomas’ attitude exhibited in his statement that “It is nothing less than stupid for us to fight one another, as well as its being sinful.” Adds that it is also stupid for us to perpetuate division and schism.

Irrelevant Antagonism

The antagonism between Jew and Gentile was simply a reflection of the way they stood with reference to God. Jesus did not unite them by removing the antagonism but by reconciling them both to God through the sacrifice of one body on the cross. If anything else could produce harmony the cross would not have been necessary. It is the place where one act made irrelevant the antagonism between bitter rivals. It is the answer to all partisan hostilities. Our “circumcision” today is anything external in which man trusts as a symbol of his covenant relationship with God. So long as men trust in such symbols of faithfulness the cross is made of none effect. Such trust causes men to forget grace and attempt to be justified by law. At the cross every man is seen for what he is— helpless, hopeless, unable to keep law perfectly. Here his complex schemes of doctrinal orthodoxy are shown to be cobweb ladders which he has built to try and achieve reconciliation, always too short, always ineffective. He cannot even attain to his own ideals. The cross does not make us alike. We are simply all reconciled to God. Being right on every point of doctrine is of no consequence. We no longer receive one another because of attainment or achievement. The ultimate criterion is in the fact that we have been given life together in Christ, making utterly irrelevant the antagonism between us.

No Human Invention

One’s view of the veracity of Paul’s claim that his gospel came to him by divine inspiration will determine whether it has authority over his life. While we cannot prove that Paul was correct in his statement, the agony he willingly endured for the sake of his gospel proves that he believed what he said was true.

However, the real proof of the authorship of the gospel is inherent in the message. The nature of the gospel proves it is no human invention. It runs counter to all that men would devise if they were to attempt a plan for universal redemption. The gospel begins not with one of humble parentage being elevated as a god, but with one who was God emptying himself, adopting the nature of a slave and making himself “of no reputation” through (1) the circumstances of his birth, (2) the place of his birth, (3) his boyhood home, (4) his choice of disciples, (5) his daily companions, and (6) the manner of his death. The whole scheme of redemption bears the imprint of the divine mind upon its very face. The gospel is not merely words announced, but a life shared with us.

Miracle at the Pool

[Essay]

Jesus was always conscious he was doing the work of the Father. This enables us to know what God wants his sons to do by observing what his Son did. The “greater works” which are laid upon us are not in the domain of the material (since no one could do a “greater” work than raising the dead) but in the area of human nature and its transformation. While Jesus was attending a Jewish feast in Jerusalem he left the temple and went to the pool of Bethesda where he healed a lame man and commanded him to take up his bed and walk. The Pharisees became incensed because the man was carrying his bed on the sabbath. But Jesus demonstrated that God was not interested in days but in men. When faced with the conflict between a crippled man and a code of laws, the human need took precedence. This is what the sabbath was all about. Life is cheap to a legalist. Human values are far down the scale. Men exist only to keep the law alive, even if they die in their attempt. Religion is life. It is not a code unloaded from above but a life shared from above. It is a life of service. There is no other way to serve God than by serving men made in his image. Just as Jesus proved he was the Son of God by working like the Father worked, we must show that we are the sons of God in the same way.

These Tremendous Issues

[Essay]

Observations based on the first thirteen verses of chapter three of Ephesians as translated by J. B. Phillips. Notes that the noble secret of which Paul speaks is that the Gentiles are to be equal heirs with God's chosen people. This is part of the eternal plan for the unity of all things in the universe in Christ Jesus. It is an announcement that the war is over, hate is dethroned, and selfishness is revealed as a blatant usurper. Blood washed away the barrier between the circumcised and the uncircumcised. Angels were not in on the secret but they are witnesses of the unfolding of God's complex plan— how the diverse elements can be united in one body by the cross. These are the tremendous issues of which Paul speaks before which all other pale.

That Inner Illumination

[Essay]

Expounds upon the “inner illumination of the spirit” to which Paul refers in Eph. 1:18. Notes the difficulty translators experience with the word pneuma which may refer to the Spirit of God or to that divinely given attribute within man. Holds that the spirit of man is capable of being floodlighted or given insight by the Holy Spirit. But distinguishes revelation from illumination, the former relating to the impartation of truth undiscoverable by other means while the latter having to do with perceptiveness of that truth. The Spirit will not impose the Word upon our minds but infuses the mind into the truth to the extent of its willingness and capability. (No two persons in the world have the same capacity for understanding.) Our willingness to accept new truths may be affected by prejudice, loyalty to the party, indifference, or fear of loss of prestige or power. When one arrives at the point where all else is counted as refuse and he surrenders himself unreservedly to the Spirit who dwells within, his heart is prepared for illumination.

The Satisfying Bread

[Essay]

After describing the background which evoked the statement of Paul in 2 Cor. 9:10, suggests that Paul may have been quoting a popular proverb related to sowing by scattering seed in broadcast fashion. To sow sparingly for fear of weather conditions or insect invasion would result in a poor harvest. Observes that in the sharing of life's bounty we must remember that all will not turn out as we planned. Those whom we help may not respond as we hoped. So we must decide whether we are giving in order to purchase goodwill and commendation or whether we are motivated solely by a spirit of altruism and compassion. The harvest starts in one's own heart before the planting begins, and the seed is fertilized and watered by one's attitude. When the strings of the heart are drawn taut by the hands of stinginess God cannot deposit the riches of His grace in that heart. It is only as we are willing to turn loose of the seed which God places in our hand that we can expect a harvest.

The Butting Brethren

[Essay]

Observations regarding attacks upon the author by other writers. Notes that since he did not change factions, but merely stopped being factious, his brethren in the factions don't know what to do with him. States that he has simply resolved to love all his brethren without going anywhere— without changing parties. States that it is a genuine thrill to know that the only brethren he has are brothers in error. Observes that he is not concerned with the fact that things being said of him are untrue, since one of these days everything is going to be straightened out. By following Jesus as closely as possible he has learned how to love even those who think they are his enemies. Notes that it isn't always easy, but it is always satisfying. Resolves never to return to the narrow, bigoted, sectarian outlook which shackles the heart and quenches the Spirit.

The Ascent of Faith

[Essay]

In preparation for essays dealing with Romans 8, provides an introduction to Paul's letter to the saints in Rome. In this letter Paul sets forth for those whom he had never met what the life of faith was all about. States that the theme of the letter is justification by faith, then defines faith as more than mere mental assent. It involves the surrender of self without reservation to him who is its object, an embracing of the Son of God so fully and completely as to lose one's own personality in identification with him. Observes that justification is necessary because of our guilt. Man cannot obtain justification by undoing a single sin, nor by living a sinless life. We cannot win, merit, or deserve it. Through the death of a sinless person God made it possible for justice and mercy to meet and merge without clashing. One who gives up his life on earth to become identified with Jesus in his sinlessness is simply counted as righteous by God. Man can never save himself by his own wisdom nor by his own legal rectitude. But through faith he is acquitted by God, made free, and given a new life. He is reconciled to God. He has peace with God, restored to the state of being with God which man enjoyed before sin came. The love of God is poured out into his heart by the Spirit. Selfishness is washed away. We live not because of our sinlessness, but because of the sinlessness of Jesus. We are declared righteous. Our sins are not counted unto us! His righteousness is!

Taking a Stand

[Essay]

Notes that the latest controversy over which the “some-whats” are attempting to force all to take a stand concerns the work of the Holy Spirit and how they stand on Pat Boone’s claim to have spoken in tongues. Urges that the question is simply not worth exalting to the status of a prime target. Insists that whatever one thinks about the matter has nothing to do with one’s relationship to Jesus. Notes that if you really love Jesus you can love Pat Boone and all of the rest of the brethren. Concludes that a good way to demonstrate that you do not know the Spirit is to kick up a fuss and disturb the peace about how you think he works.

Flesh and Spirit

[Essay]

Follows a previous introductory essay on Romans 1-5 with an exposition of the theme of Paul in Romans 6-8. First explores the way Paul relates grace and baptism, observing that either all who died to sin were baptized or Paul’s entire argument is rendered ridiculous. Quotes W. E. Vine’s statement that “the word baptizo was necessarily transliterated into English, as there was no equivalent in our language. . . . To baptize . . . involves submersion and emergence— death, burial and resurrection.” The man who has been baptized had died to sin. He is therefore free to be joined to Christ. He is free from law. While the goal of law is conformation, what we need is transformation, freedom to serve God in a new way, the way of the Spirit— not under a new law but in a new way, the way of the indwelling Spirit empowering us to withstand the cosmic forces of evil. To be in Christ is to sustain an intimate relationship with him. In him no condemnation resides. To walk after the flesh is to be without God in the various relationships of life. We cannot reason ourselves out from under the domination of the power of evil. We must be rescued by a superior power. There is no plan or human organization which can provide the power to free from the lower nature. What we must have is an inner dynamic— the power that comes directly from the indwelling Spirit. The Spirit is a personality as may be seen from an examination of his attributes, abilities, the ascriptive terms used to refer to him, his actions, and his association with the other two personalities of the Godhood.

The Spirit of Life

[Essay]

In Christ the animating principle is the Holy Spirit and the life we share is the life of the Spirit. This is what Paul referred to as “the law of the Spirit of life.” “The law of sin and death” is the principle which prompts one to sin even against his own wish — “the sin that dwelleth in me” (Rom. 7:17). This continual conflict creates an agonizing situation in which the way out is the indwelling Spirit who infuses us with new life. The lower nature makes it impossible for man to achieve righteousness by law-keeping since he is powerless to obey it in perfection. Jesus fulfilled the law and earned the right to adopt men unto himself. Because of his sinlessness he could take our sin and purchase our freedom from the guilt and consequences of sin, and make us partakers of the divine nature. To be carnal minded is to be alienated from the life of God; it is to be dead while one lives. To be spiritually minded is to be in the dominion of the Spirit, to put on the new nature of God's creating. It is to have peace with God.

Re-Baptism

[Essay]

From an extended quote from Alexander Campbell, in the Millennial Harbinger of 1836, it is evident that the only thing which can justify re-immersion is a confession on the part of the candidate that he did not believe that Jesus was the Messiah, the Son of God, at the time of his baptism and that he now believes and desires to be buried and rise with Christ in faith of a resurrection to eternal life. The instant that re-baptism is preached and practiced on any other grounds, (1) we have contradicted in some way and made void the word of the Lord, "He who will believe and be immersed shall be saved," (2) abandoned the principles of the present reformation, (3) instituted experience meetings, committees for examining candidates, (4) changed the bond of union, and (5) made something else, other than the belief of the gospel facts, the faith of the gospel. Includes a significant statement by David Lipscomb regarding the correct motive for baptism.

Spirit and Word

[Essay]

Responds in the affirmative to the question, peculiar to members of “Churches of Christ,” does the Spirit operate independent of the word of God? While believing scripture to be a product of the Holy Spirit, a revelation of the divine mind, denies that the Spirit retired after sixty-six books had been bound in a single cover— although denies that he is revealing additional material today. Notes that the Holy Spirit operates on the heart of the alien only through the gospel, when it is heard. But he dwells with and in the saints of God, and he did so for decades before the first apostolic letter was penned. The Holy Spirit sheds abroad the love of God in the heart, the love that enables God to love through the believer. The Spirit puts to death all the base pursuits of the body; he makes it possible for us to cry “Abba! Father!” He brings us into a genuine relationship with the Father; he comes to our aid in times of weakness in prayer; he pleads for us; he translates our groanings into words which reach the ear of heaven; he provides that eternal life which we share, since he is the very source of life to God’s children. He makes it possible for us to experience the dimensions of God’s love and to know that love, though it is beyond all knowledge.

The Indwelling Spirit

[Essay]

A commentary on Romans 8:9-12. Observes that regardless of our claims, one simply does not belong to Christ if he does not have the Spirit of Christ. When Christ dwells in us through his Spirit the attributes which belong to the divine nature are ours in which to share. The same power that was exercised in raising Jesus from the dead dwells in us through the Holy Spirit. The resources of power which were employed to raise Jesus from the dead are now available to all those who live in him. The lower nature has no further claim on us. The only thing that counts is a new creation. It is not enough to feel like a new man; we must become new men. And that is exactly the function of the Spirit of God.

The Spirit of Adoption

[Essay]

A commentary on Romans 8:13-17, focused primarily on verses 15-17. As an illustration of the consequences of living after the flesh, tells the story of a derelict who, as a young man, was baptized by the author. Laments not knowing enough at the time to tell him about the Spirit who would come in and help in time of need. Notes that to be led by the Spirit is to surrender to the influences and guidance of the Spirit— a proof of divine sonship— to be led by that love which is shed abroad in our hearts by the Spirit. Enumerates the effects of slavery to sin in contrast with what it means to be adopted by God as sons. Provides a lengthy overview of the adoption process and the extent parental rights (patria potestas) in Roman culture (noting that adoption was not practiced within Jewish culture). Calls attention to the fact that a witness was required to corroborate one's adoption should his rights of inheritance be contested. Points out that God's adoptive children have the Holy Spirit as their witness, enabling them to use the term "Abba" (Daddy) as evidence of their sonship. The indwelling Spirit is our guarantee that we are going to inherit every provision of grace. Concludes with the story of the martyrdom of Rawlins White. Expresses a personal note of gratitude for the influence of White's life and death upon his own life.

A Universe on Tiptoe

[Essay]

A commentary on Romans 8:18-23. It was to those living in an atmosphere of crushing sorrow and complete despair that Paul wrote his letter to the Romans. In chapter 8 he met the problem of human suffering and gave answer to it— temporary suffering is not to be compared with the splendor that is to come when the sons of God march in the great triumphal procession of the redeemed. The original term for “eager expectation” is translated by J. B. Phillips as “standing on tiptoe.” Creation will share in the liberty and splendor of the children of God. We will be raised in glory although sown in humiliation. So long as the physical body of man suffers and is tormented by pain, so long will the universe be subjected to corruption, crying out, moaning and groaning because of its ignominious state. All creation is forced to agonize because of sin, including the children of God. For this reason we cannot assume that because one suffers he is out of harmony with God. The faithful children of God are destined to dwell in three states or kingdoms: nature, grace, and eternity. These are entered by being born of the mother’s womb (generation), the water and the Spirit (regeneration), and of the grave (resurrection).

The Power of Hope

[Essay]

A commentary on Romans 8:24-27. Observes that while all men have hope, the hope of those who know the Lord increases as they grow older, whereas the hope of those who do not know him wanes with age, often being supplanted by dread and despair. Hope is a joyous anticipation of the future, combining desire and expectation in equal proportion. Although Paul says we are saved by hope, he does not mean that hope is the cause of our salvation. It means that we have been saved but there is more to come. There is something for which the universe is joyfully and triumphantly expectant. When hope becomes reality it ceases to function as hope. Hope is grounded in endurance. It is validated by God's love. Love is the soil in which hope grows and blossoms. Hope comes to our aid in counteracting despair and makes it possible for us to endure and hold on in spite of suffering. But we have another helper in the Spirit who comes to the aid of our weakness when we pray. The Spirit translates our inward inexpressible desires into prayer, putting them in the words of heavenly language. We do not need to learn to pray so much as we need to learn to trust. The Spirit pleads for God's own people in God's own way.

Quenching the Spirit

[Essay]

A response to an inquiry concerning what it means to quench the Spirit (1 Thessalonians 5:19). Suggests that the phrase is probably directly related to the stifling of the prophetic gift, but should not be limited to this, since it could apply to any sublimation of the Spirit's work and influence. Just as a fire may be quenched in three ways— (1) by pouring cold water onto it, (2) smothering it with non-combustibles, and (3) by neglect— so may the Spirit's influence be put out: (1) through bitterness, complaining, bickering and backbiting, (2) becoming involved in the affairs of this present world, and (3) by failure to nourish the inner man through prayer, study of the word, and the mutual edification of the saints.

Answering the Buzzer

[Essay]

A review of an article by George G. Beazley, Jr., ecumenical officer of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ), titled “Beazley ‘Lashes Out’ at Attacks on Ecumenical Groups” (The Christian, Feb. 14). Responds to Beazley’s concern that ecumenical institutions “are in real danger of being destroyed” and that cutting off funding due to mistakes in spending money is not the way to deal with such mistakes. The author opines that the consultation on Church Union is a tragic error and would forfeit every principle our fathers fought for. Asserts that cutting off funding is exactly the way to deal with repeated mistakes in spending. Contends that what we need more than anything else is to get back to a real, genuine, vital, and personal relationship with God through the blood of his Son and the power of the indwelling Spirit. While there may be nothing wrong with institutions, when men begin to consider them indispensable to the purpose of God they become dangerous.

The Spirit at Work

[Essay]

Responds to the question from a correspondent, “Is there any scriptural teaching that the Holy Spirit will not or cannot lead a child of God into contact with an open-minded soul in need of salvation, or bring to memory a scripture appropriate for the occasion? Expresses reluctance to write on such matters due to the fact that one must relate personal experiences to justify his position. Affirms belief that the Spirit is actively working through the children of God using their unique personalities to do unique things. Holds that God is interested in every phase of our existence, that when we are completely surrendered to his purpose he can providentially shape our destinies. Concludes with a personal testimony as to how God has, on numerous occasions, provided unplanned opportunities for him to share with those who were ready for a new dimension of life.

God Works for Good

[Essay]

A commentary on Romans 8:28-30. God is interested in everything we do, and the greatest thing about his being Lord of all is that the Spirit can so order and arrange everything that it will work out for ultimate good. Everything is going to work out to his praise. “We know” is positive. It lifts the matter out of the realm of speculation, and it excludes no area of life. There is a purpose behind this universe, and purpose implies design. I can look for his hand in anything that happens, thus giving life new dimensions. Sometimes what first appear as perplexing detours turn out to be highways to success and happiness. It is unfortunate that verse 29 has been made the ground for the most bitter theological conflict in the Christian realm. Obviously the passage is inserted merely to demonstrate that the truth that God’s concern is to “call many sons unto glory.” Before the foundation of the world, God conceived the idea that men would respond to a divine call by their own choice. He not only foreknew this but destined in advance that such persons would become like the image of his Son. In the matter of obedience all were left free. Our ability to rely upon God for the power to be free from ourselves (our flesh) provides strength, confidence, and incentive to meet the trials and temptations of each day.

The Backlash

[Essay]

There is a backlash of unrest and resentment which currently characterizes “the Church of Christ.” The whole factional mess is seething with unrest and discontent. It stems from the fact that institutional arrogance and insolence have had their day. This kind of appraisal brings deep resentment because it is regarded as speaking against “the Lord’s church.” Yet this is one of the problems: we have confused an early nineteenth century restoration movement with the one body. While we set out to convince the world that all who believe in Christ Jesus on the basis of apostolic testimony could be united on a foundation of one provable fact— that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God. Yet the non-instrument Churches of Christ made the use of instrumental music an article of faith and elevated it to creedal status. What we need to do is to go back to the fork in the road and admit that we were wrong in setting up a non-instrument creed as the basis of our hope of eternal life. We will never again be a project to unite the Christians in all of the sects until we can unite the Christians in the restoration movement. The question is not the right or wrong of instrumental music, but whether any opinion or view should be elevated to creedal status. We must banish every creed but Jesus, chop down every party standard, eradicate every test of fellowship except the one God enunciated!

More Than Conquerors

[Essay]

A commentary on Romans 8:31-39. If everything fits into a pattern for good, then nothing that happens can work our ultimate defeat. The problem of doubt about future victory is settled for the believer from the moment in which he accepts that God actually and purposely delivered up his own Son for us. Agape is the love that knows no bounds. Those who do not grasp the intensity of agape can never understand how God could “spare not his own Son.” If God did not forbear to give up his own Son, surely he will not hesitate to bestow all else that is required to fulfill the divine purpose as relates to all of us. He cannot condemn one whom he has justified. Justification is not subject to reversal. In Christ we are free. We are safe. We are made to be guiltless by divine fiat. There are four reasons why

Christ will not condemn us: (1) He died for us; (2) He will not condemn the body over which he is head— and there is no other power in the universe which can do so; (3) Instead of condemning us, Christ pleads our case in heaven. The question raised in verse 35 is not, Who shall separate the love of Christ from us? but, Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? To be more than conquerors (v. 37) is to be invincible, or unconquerable. The apostle then enumerates (verses 38, 39) a list of things which acted as real enemies in the minds of the superstitious Romans and Greeks of his day. But he confidently affirms that none of these can overthrow the purpose of the living God.

My Only Creed

[Essay]

Refers to the historical accounts of cannibalism by the members of Sir John Franklin's expedition to the Arctic Region and to that of the Greek fable of Erisichthon. Suggests cannibalism as an apt metaphor for the current state of the restoration movement which has sought to protect, perpetuate and propagate itself through self-destruction. It has severed its own members, gouged out its own eyes, cut out its own tongue and fragmented itself in many communities. It has done this under the guise of upholding the truth. Indicates that the remedy for our state is to go back beyond every unwritten creed, to a creed of such importance that the very issue of eternal life is suspended upon its acceptance. There is only one creed endorsed by heaven as the basis of union and communion for the saints of God, and it is not a precept, but a person. God has proposed to unite all who believe in Jesus upon the basis of one great universal fact. Jesus is the personal embodiment of truth— not some truths or certain truths. Faith has to do with facts, not with abstract truths. One who accepts him who is the truth thereby commits himself to the acceptance of all truths as they become known to him. Our relationship to Jesus stems from faith, not from knowledge or personal experience. Our problem in this age is that we have lost Christ in the Bible, we have lost the Bible in the church, and we have lost the church in the world. Christianity is not Jesus pointing us to a book, but a book pointing us to Jesus.

The Reasonable Worship

[Essay]

An analysis of Romans 12:1, 2. Takes note of the fact that the person who is holy, who has been sanctified, is (1) separated from the unregenerate world and does not share a common life (fellowship) with the unbelieving mass of mankind, and (2) this separation makes a difference that lies in the fact that one belongs to God. Holiness is about having transcendent value; it is not an attitude toward things. Our “reasonable service” (logikos latreuo) actually consists of the surrender of self to God — giving the members of one’s body to God, in a voluntary act of commitment which entails the devotion of bodily desires, feelings, passions, and sensations to God. Thus everything one does in the body, with an eye singled to the glory of God, is worship. For the Christian there are no “acts of worship” since there are no acts which are not worship. Concludes with Trench that the “world” is that territory pre-empted by base desires and ruled over by Satan. Paul admonishes that to engage in true worship one must be radically transformed. There must be an alteration of one’s very nature, in which the mind is no longer set on earthly things.

Seeking Guidance

[Essay]

Responds to the question “How may one seek the guidance of the Spirit and ascertain the will of God for his own life?” Prefaces his answer with the observation that his response— his personal approach— may not be valid for another individual, since no two people have the same intellectual, temperamental, or spiritual caliber, plus the fact that the Holy Spirit must not be boxed in by one individual’s experience. On a personal note, states that for several years he has been trying to live a more surrendered life, which has resulted in inner tranquility. Believes that nothing occurs in his life outside God’s purpose for him. His personal approach to seeking the Spirit’s guidance involves (1) seeking to immerse himself in the total revelation of God, (2) persisting in prayer for guidance in specific and immediate problems until an answer is forthcoming, (3) seeking the advice of other saints, (4) seeking to live in the shadow of God’s umbrella of grace all of the time, abiding in the tent of the Spirit, and (5) relating his entire being to the dynamic of love, injecting it into every life situation.

The Differing Gifts

[Essay]

A dissertation on Romans 12:3-8. Summarizes by noting that (1) each one of us is to make a sober estimate of his ability based upon an assessment of the gift of God as bestowed by grace; (2) we are bound together as functioning members of an organism (not of an organization) which has Jesus as its center of life and activity; (3) there are no useless members of the body of Christ; (4) the unity we enjoy is a creation of the Spirit, not an achievement by men; (5) we are interrelated and made into a cohesive unity by the indwelling Spirit; (6) any aptitude or endowment which enables us to perform any function in the body is a gift of grace (provides a detailed analysis of each of the gifts mentioned by Paul). Concludes that we must employ the gifts we possess for the good of the whole body, and the body must provide an opportunity for us to grow and develop within the framework of fellowship. No one can say to another he has no need of him.

With Brotherly Love

[Essay]

An exposition of Romans 12:9, 10. Observes that unless the Spirit transforms our hearts until we can love one another, all else is vain; that we will be judged not by our orthodoxy but by how we treated the least of the brethren. States that the word “dissimulation” in verse 9 is a transliteration of hypokrites, to speak under or behind a mask, as did the Greek dramatists. Its opposite is sincerity, which in Greek comes from the idea of examining merchandise in the sunlight to better ascertain its true quality. That which passed the test was said to be “sincere.” Evil is any destructive force. While all sin is evil, not all evil is sin. Evil is to be hated with such intensity that we neither embrace nor condone it. Just as there is no dynamic to compare with brotherly love, so there is no hatred so bitter and intense as that which is shown when brethren turn against one another (numerous examples included). Notes that one of the most difficult things to do is to prefer one another in honor. Yet Paul clearly indicates that we should be willing to allow others to take the credit due ourselves.

The Pleasure of God

[Essay]

Spanning the chasm between God and man caused by sin, and transcending all racial, social, and national barriers, Jesus came to reconcile us unto God and, thereby, unto one another. In Ephesians 1:7-10, Paul states that the hidden purpose of God concealed through the ages, is now disclosed: that the universe might be brought to unity— in Christ! The approach to this ideal is to call individuals from a life of sin, reconciling them to God, so they may share in the life of God. The demonic forces are united to thwart the accomplishment of God's purpose. One of the devices employed to that end has been to fragment those who acknowledge Jesus to be the Son of God into warring sects whose hostility toward other believers has been more intense than it has been toward evil. Yet the purpose of God will triumph. We must actively participate in helping to bring the divine pleasure to fruition (1) by grasping afresh the basis of koinonia, or fellowship, and (2) by understanding the real nature of the ekklesia. We must find the center upon which the acceptance of God into his fellowship is conditioned— the divinely revealed and fundamental ground upon which God proposes to gather all those who trust in Jesus.

The Death of a Dream

[Essay]

Recounts the circumstances out of which Thomas Campbell wrote his Declaration and Address, regarded by the author as “one of the greatest uninspired documents written by human hand.” Lists five of the more salient points raised in the document, then comments on its radical and revolutionary nature, calling special attention to the safeguard it erected around the right of private interpretation of scripture— a hallowed watchword of the Reformation led by Luther. Points out that the Declaration and Address further provided that doctrinal interpretations were not to be made tests of fellowship. Notes how doctrinal differences among the early pioneers of the movement were not causes of division. Refers to Aylett Raines and John Smith as cases in point. Makes observations concerning the fall of that vision for unity from its high estate, noting that our only approach to differences since that time has been division. Concludes with an appeal for the resurrection of the glorious ideal laid aside by predecessors. Urges that we direct the dynamic of the love of God against the walls which have been opaque, and see them become transparent; that we learn to love those who differ with us, and find that peace that passes understanding.

The Sectarian Game

[Essay]

The first step in the program of God to bring the universe into a unity in Christ is for all who trust in Jesus to be one. Our divisions postpone the acceptance of the gospel by the masses of mankind. So long as we think of sectarianism as a kind of harmless game which we can play without consequences we will not be led to abandon it. The currently divided state of believers resulted when they moved the center of their faith from its original object and position to various points on the spiritual map, and as groups were formed around these diverse centers, sects resulted. To recover the unity that once prevailed, we must again locate the center around which all may revolve and prove with such clarity that it is the divinely-given rallying-point, that all will be persuaded to join hands about it and restore the unity of all the disciples of Jesus. However, that task is made difficult by the fact that every sect thinks that its present center is the divinely-given one and that the emphasis it makes is indispensable to a closer walk with God. Sectarianism does not necessarily result from the espousal of error. Sometimes it is a truth held to the exclusion of other truths. Truths are not all equally important. One should never relinquish truth, but neither should a secondary truth be made a condition of acceptance or fellowship. Whatever is required to believe in order to have life is more important than what one must learn in order to grow and develop. It will not be easy to give up our centers of polarization because we are emotionally attached to them. We have been conditioned by history to think of ourselves as the guardians of orthodoxy. All sectarianism originates in human egotism and is perpetuated by human pride. Every sect seeks to maintain and polish its own image regardless of cost. Sectarianism is a sign of carnality and immaturity. This whole attitude must be renounced. No man can please God while maintaining a schismatic stance. We must overcome the sectarian spirit or we will perish in this sin.

The Recovery of Reason

[Essay]

One of three Roy B. Shaw Memorial Lectures delivered from October 20-22, 1971, at the Green Valley Church of Christ in San Jose, California. We are beset by tradition and frightened to face up to the only eventuality which can rescue a splintered restoration movement rendered imbecilic by its own quarrels and incapable of securing unity because of its own division. The route back to sanity is simple— merely taking the medicine we prescribed for others. If there is any validity in the restoration plea, our only hope is to return to the principles upon which we began, the very thing our brethren fear to do. Each party wants to freeze unity at its own level but this would require a moratorium on thought and reason. The formal division over instrumental music was the gravest mistake of our fathers, and if we continue stubbornly to perpetuate the error, we will answer for our obduracy at the throne of God. We must face up to instrumental music because it is the cultural and historical problem which confronts us. If we can realistically solve this problem, we will have discovered the principle upon which every other issue that divides us will be placed in a proper perspective. The following questions are raised and answered in the remainder of the speech: (1) Does this mean we repudiate all that for which our fathers fought, and the gains they made in restoring the ancient order? (2) Is it not a fact that instrumental music is condemned by the scriptures? (3) Does not the authority of silence forbid the use of instrumental music? (4) How can unity come about while some use the instrument and other cannot?

About Theology

[Essay]

Introduces an exposition on John's vision in Revelation with remarks about the nature of theology. States that his "theology" is a person—the Theos-Logos, the divine Theology of whom John gives one of the most thrilling descriptions. Identifies much of the symbolism in John's vision of the unfolding of the great drama of the universe involving the Lamb and the Lion of Judah. This occasion, when a transfer of power was taking place, was the single most important event ever to transpire in the celestial courts as related to the earthly creatures made in the image of the Creator. There was only one person in the entire universe to whom the Creator could surrender the destiny of the cosmos. The Lamb, who had willingly laid down his life, won the right to rule by a blood-bought purchase of such transcendent significance that the world can hardly comprehend it even yet. The Lamb is identified as the Lion of Judah and as the Root of David, the man on the white horse. Never was there a more solemn moment in time than when the Lamb stepped forward and received the scroll of destiny from the right hand of the One who sat upon the throne. Jesus is the center and circumference of the whole realm of saving grace. He took the scroll of destiny and when the final seal is opened, he will be King of kings and Lord of lords, and the whole creation will know it.

A Faith for the Future

[Essay]

One of three Roy B. Shaw Memorial Lectures delivered from October 20-22, 1971, at the Green Valley Church of Christ in San Jose, California. Expresses optimism for the future exhibition of brotherhood among the followers of Christ upon the grounds that (1) there is a growing realization that unity in Christ is not something to be achieved but simply something to be received; (2) there is a growing recognition that harmony is not a prerequisite to fellowship, but that fellowship creates the atmosphere in which to labor toward harmony; (3) we have reared a new generation, better educated, spiritually oriented, and dedicated to the Lord of life as opposed to the cult of conformity. We must examine anew the admonition of Romans 15:5-7 to accept one another as Christ accepted us.

What Is Christendom?

[Essay]

Expounds upon the nature and development of “Christendom.” States that while “the faith” was the creation of God’s revelation, Christendom was the result of evolution in human thought and action. Provides a detailed overview of the events of early church history that eventually produced the Nicene Creed which would eventually shatter the religious world to fragments. Posits that Christendom is the machinery of the clergy, the new mediator between God and man, the kingdom presided over by popes, cardinals, primates, etc., the realm of ecclesiastical jargon. It is the imposer of creeds and forms, binding the intellect out of reverence for tradition. What men call Christendom will never be united. We must go back beyond the written creeds of others and the unwritten codes of our own if we are ever to recapture the spirit of vital relationship with God which the Incarnation was intended to make possible. The right of the individual to go humbly to the divine revelation for himself must be recovered. There must be no Supreme Court except the individual conscience, no compulsion except that of the eager heart yearning to be like Jesus.

Two Sons of God

[Essay]

After an historical overview of events leading up to the triumph of Octavian over the combined forces of Antony and Cleopatra, in 29 B.C., tells how there came to be two “Sons of God” on earth with identical goals— universal peace, which each believed would come through the acknowledgement of his sovereignty. The forces and strategies of these two kingdoms are analyzed and compared. Recounts events leading to their inevitable confrontation. Lists the characteristics of every political, social, economic, and religious revolution of the past: (1) a sense of destiny; (2) recognition that the forces of revolution are always the aggressor; (3) acceptance of the idea that the cause is more valuable than any person engaged in its prosecution; (4) unquestioning trust in the Intelligence Department to direct the forces in the field; (5) a flexibility in strategy which will allow for adaptability of weaponry to changing conditions and circumstances; (6) the ultimate goal must be envisioned in its completed state. Takes note of the way in which the early Christians dynamically met every one of the above requirements and composed a tremendous fighting force. Asserts that the conquest of the Way cannot be explained when divorced from the terminology of war in which it is described. Concludes with an urgent call to all who are in Him to get on with the battle, risking it all and trusting the Lord for the outcome.

The Secular Influence

[Essay]

Asserts that the Christian profession has become secularized. Yet secularization is not all evil. It is used by God to accomplish his purposes, specifically in our day to undermine rigid and authoritarian structures that have enslaved the minds of men. Secularization is now enabling men to exercise their personal freedom. Although Jesus came to put an end to the distinction between secular and sacred and introduce love as the motivating principle for every action, the lust for power moved in to alter this and created an institution which arrogated to itself the right to dispense grace or deny it. Whether the unholy synthesis of Judaism, paganism, and Christianity as found in Romanism, or the modern-day eldership, the same reasoning is behind the issuing of official interpretations— which are equated with the will of God— and the requirement that such be accepted or be cut off from the people of God. The principle of legalism must be abrogated. The means of renunciation of the human establishment which has usurped the place of the temple of God. It means the recapture of the apostolic proclamation, purpose, and power. Secularization's de-emphasis upon partisan forms may play a decisive role by showing religious rivalry in its true light— as a struggle to maintain the pride of the party. But it is not necessary in order to relieve ourselves of the despotism of men that we also renounce the Lordship of Jesus. If Jesus is Lord, and if his will has been communicated in word, we are not free to disregard it.

Our Real Task

[Essay]

The process of being born again does not destroy our natural abilities. Rather, they are sanctified and enhanced by the Holy Spirit until we have been recreated and made into vessels fit for the Master's use. Factions have attempted to pummel God's children into their own moulds, rearing parrots and not children. Most find it difficult to make the ministry of all the saints more than an ideal to which they pay lip-service. Furthermore, we are hooked on the idea of a professional clergy. The big problem is that we ceased to be the family of God and made the church "big business." We quit being brothers and sisters and became "members" and stockholders. There are signs that the glorious thought that we are on earth to share in the agony of mankind is being recaptured by men and women everywhere. It is when one ministers to the least of those who are suffering that heaven touches earth.

The Majestic Experience

[Essay]

States that one of the most difficult experiences in life is that of trying to be non-sectarian in a sectarian world. Being non-sectarian is a matter of attitude; a firm conviction that while one belongs to Christ he is not one's captive. The non-sectarian has only one creed— Jesus. He never allows himself to become upset with those who differ with him about the issues that create party exclusiveness. He refuses to be hostile toward the children of his Father, esteeming the blood of Jesus as of greater value than his personal opinions. Being non-sectarian does not mean the absence of strong conviction. It simply means refusal to make anything a test of fellowship which God has not made a condition for salvation. Being non-sectarian allows one to embrace every truth within any sect without endorsing an error pertaining to the sectarian economy. Our only hope of embracing all truth is to be free of all sectarian allegiance and be joined only to Jesus. Perhaps the most difficult choice is not to merely swap sects but to come to terms with God where you are. Being non-sectarian is like the kingdom of heaven— it is within you.

The Awesome Patience

[Essay]

Relates the story of the conflict between Elijah and Ahab, followed by God's call to Elijah in the still small voice at the top of Mt. Sinai to leave his retreat and to return to the center of political action. Suggests that the ultimate purpose of God which will change the world will probably be wrought by those who wait and listen for the still, small voice. The transcendent purpose of God is to restore unity to a world fragmented by sin. Our task is to contribute to the fulfillment of this eternal vision, however minute our contribution may be. We are not required to know how this purpose will be accomplished but we are required to believe that it will be. Not all are optimistic. Most want to see majestic revolution in earthquakes and conflagration, forgetting that this is not the divine approach. God's ways are not the ways of man. God's way always seems painfully slow to those who pace back and forth, who want to cut through the red-tape and get things done now. We are not called upon to achieve God's purpose, not for the world but in our lives. We must begin the unifying process where we are— within the family circle. Next there should be a sincere attempt to become a real force for peace among local saints, accepting in love of those one cannot like. Peace must be waged. The thought of unity must become a real passion for all— a living hope.

Some day the sheep of God will all be gathered from the sectarian hills. The sectarian spirit will be purged from the hearts of all who know the Lord. This will be accomplished through the dynamic of love, the weapon of the Spirit. This love is the essence of God's nature, unconquerable and imperishable — the only transforming, energizing power which can ever restore true order to a chaotic universe. It can only come from the Holy Spirit, poured out into a heart stripped of the pride of human accomplishment.

Spiritual Argonauts

[Essay]

After introducing the story of Jason and his journey with the Argonauts in search of the golden fleece. Posits that the golden fleece for which the argonauts of the spirit must diligently search is the truth which will transform us and free us from enslavement, adding that nothing is a greater safeguard for people than to seek the truth. Explores the nature of truth, which he defines as essentially conformity to reality. Notes that God never intended to reveal all truth to man— not even all moral truth— and that man must be free to probe for truth in the whole universe. Attempts to face up directly to some of the problems related to truth, such as the idea that all truth is relative. Argues that truth in its origin and its ultimate is not propositional, but personal. Asserts that what makes truth absolute is that truth originated with God. Jesus was truth in its origin. Examines the implications of Jesus' statement that "the truth shall make you free." Concludes that the truth which frees is the Son of God— not the accumulation of facts about him, but the experience of an intimate relationship with him that brings freedom. While Jesus is the truth who sets men free, his word is intended to bring us to this experiential relationship. Consequently, it is essential that we distinguish between the truth which saves and truths related to our salvation. Lack of knowledge is not a sin unless it is deliberate. Concludes with observations related to the universal nature of truth.

The Hope That Cheers

[Essay]

Relates the frustrations of a young couple over the legalism in which their local Church of Christ had been caught up. Notes that what happened was inevitable and is not limited to the Church of Christ. It is characteristic of most religious denominations who have known little of the grace of God and whose members regard themselves as “keepers of orthodoxy.” Observes that our fathers made a grave mistake when they came to regard a movement with the church of God in scripture and themselves as the kingdom of God to the exclusion of all others who did not join them. Concludes that with the current intellectual explosion every authoritarian structure is in danger and no religious party can escape the challenge. Every dogmatic institution feels the threat of unprejudiced thought and seeks ways to inhibit and prohibit it. We are passing through a period of re-examination, and this is good.

Argument from Silence

[Essay]

Response to an editorial by Reuel Lemmons published in the Firm Foundation of June 20, titled “The Music Question,” preceded by the complete text of the editorial. In response, asserts that the real symptom of the problem that obstructs unity within the restoration movement is not the instrument but articles such as the one under review which betokens a mistaken view of what constitutes worship and a childish approach to fellowship. Denies that our current problem is rooted in two attitudes toward authority, since those who use the instrument respect the authority of scripture. What Lemmons calls attitudes toward authority are actually presuppositions arrived at through human deductions, used as a frame of reference in which to approach the scriptures, mental spectacles donned before the reading begins. Lemmon's thesis is that unless you agree with his presuppositions (regarding the silence of the scriptures) you do not respect the authority of the scriptures. Examines Lemmons' reference to the "inconsistent application" of the "silence of scripture" among "non-instrumental people," namely, the creation of "other institutions to do the work of the church." Charges that Lemmons equates his philosophic approach to scripture with scripture itself, leaving little difference between his approach and that of the Roman Catholic Church. Whereas the latter has an infallible interpreter, the former has an infallible interpretation. Maintains that it is not the authority of God which divides us, it is the authority Lemmons and other preachers seek to exercise where God has not spoken.

About Movements

[Essay]

Honest attempts to offset division seem always to end up fragmenting further those whom they seek to unite, due to the fact that men equate their movements with the church for which Christ died. Those who think they have arrived have actually departed. While there is nothing wrong with writing a personal creed, it is a sin to cease writing— to bind oneself to defend the immature faith of yesterday. A movement which ceases to move becomes a monument to the glories of the past. The canonizing of heroes always involves the crystallizing of their views. Only an open-ended movement holds forth any hope of uniting the saints. The moment we shut the gate to hold what we have gained, we forfeit our freedom and forsake our ideal. When a movement becomes a “church,” by whatever title it may be designated, it automatically casts itself in the role of a sect. Let us not embalm truth in an attempt to preserve it.

The Body of Christ

[Essay]

Comments on incidental lessons to be learned from 1 Corinthians 12: (1) The unity of the body is a unity in diversity. (2) There are no useless members or superfluous parts. (3) The unity of the body is the natural result of adherence to Christ. (4) Every member of the body comes into the relationship in identical fashion. (5) In this new relationship we are all sustained by divine provision. (6) The body of Christ is not a human organization, but a divine organism. (7) Membership in the body is not contingent upon being able to perform the same function as any other member of the body. (8) Membership in the body is not dependent upon recognition of one’s relationship or value by another member. (9) Division in the body is avoided through recognition that those who seem to be more frail and unseemly are actually indispensable, and by exertion of special effort to give honor to those who might be regarded as humble parts.

An Old Remedy

[Essay]

An exposition of Psalm 37:1-7. Observes that those who jealously spend their time planning evil and revenge will be lopped off like weeds, while those who simply plant their roots in the soil of faith are assured of being sustained. If we really tune our hearts in on the divine wave length and are happy in the Lord, we can receive the desires of our hearts without reservation. Our accomplishments are in the hands of God. Only one who is truly convinced his cause is right can sit quietly and wait for God to vindicate his cause. The secret of the fulfilling life is found in trusting in the Lord, delighting in the Lord, committing one's way unto the Lord, and resting in the Lord.

What Is Your Life?

[Essay]

The text of an address to a youth conference. Posits that life is but a sequence of separations— from the womb, from parental supervision, from home, from the mother and father image to be joined to a spouse, and finally from the body upon death. But the greatest separation of all is the death to self and a resurrection to the unselfish life— a crucifixion of material ambition, and a resurrection of spiritual responsibility. Notes that Elton Trueblood lists four marks of the new reformation in our time: commitment, ministry, fellowship, and voluntary discipline. As regards commitment, points out that before one may give anything effectively he must first give himself away. Notes that the world needs committed men and women in every vocation who sanctify any occupation they touch. The truly committed soul is a witness for the Christ that is in him. Makes further suggestions as to how to make the committed life serve the practical purpose which God intended. Commends the lives of Dr. Thomas Dooley and Dr. Albert Schweitzer as examples of those who concluded that the best way to serve God was to serve neglected humanity. Closes with a challenge to put Jesus first in every endeavor of life.

The Way of Holiness

Begs to disagree with a commonly accepted view of Isaiah 35:8, which is generally understood to teach that God's entire revelation is so clear that even a traveling man who is not too bright can grasp it perfectly. Maintains that the Bible does not say that at all. Calls attention to Peter's statement that there are some things in the scriptures that are so obscure that unlearned men are liable to warp and wrest. Suggests that the word "highway" in Isaiah's statement is probably better translated by the word "causeway," as it appears in the New English Bible. The causeway leading through the watered plain which once was desert will be designated the Way of Holiness and will be reserved for use by a holy people. The unclean will not be able to use it for immoral practices and fools will be barred from traversing it to propagate their error. This example serves to bolster the principle of interpretation that any interpretation which relies for its validity upon one version to the exclusion of all others, is probably a faulty one.

Faith and Baptism

Sets forth personal views regarding the nature and design of baptism and its relationship to faith. Defines baptism as the immersion in water of a believing penitent, as a response to the Good News proclaimed concerning Jesus of Nazareth as the Messiah, Lord, and Son of God. Regards baptism to be essential as a validation of one's faith and to entrance into the kingdom, the rule of heaven, under the dominion of God's Son. Immersion in water is an initiatory act which transfers from a state of alienation into a state of citizenship. Notes the frequency with which the Spirit spoke of baptism and the absence of any unimmersed person among the primitive saints. Jesus himself was baptized, as a visible demonstration of subjection to God's will. While one can acknowledge belief in the proposition that Jesus is the Son of God by verbal testimony, he cannot acknowledge lordship by this method. That Jesus is Lord of one's life is a matter of personal demonstration based upon obedience of the will. Obedience is the validation of belief, and our acceptance of the Lordship of Jesus is tested at the very outset. "He that believeth and is baptized." These are the words of Jesus and no amount of equivocation will alter or abrogate them. Paul asserts in Romans 5:1 that we are justified by faith. In Romans 6:2 he affirms that all were baptized into Jesus Christ. There is no conflict between the two. Unless baptism is a demonstration of faith it is useless; unless faith is operative in obedience it is dead. Faith at work is not faith plus something else in justifying us. Rather, it is faith manifesting, demonstrating and validating itself in the only manner that is possible. There can be no example of faith until faith becomes exemplary.

Our Tragic Traditions

[Essay]

Presents a lengthy excerpt from correspondence from a youth minister in a Church of Christ who was accused of advocating "Ketcherside doctrine" and threatened by an elder with the loss of employment and reputation if he persisted. Quotes from The Calling of Dan Matthews, written by Harold Bell Write, a Restoration movement preacher who makes numerous observations about serving the institution rather than serving God. Notes that we have made the "eldership" into a dictatorship. The word of God does not teach the absolute power of any group of men over the family of the Father. There is no government without the consent of the governed. The word of God does not teach that I must contribute financially every Sunday or suffer the pangs of eternal damnation.

The Scale of Values

[Essay]

Alexander Solzhenitsyn wrote that through international broadcasting and printing, the world has unwittingly become one through its instantaneous awareness of what transpires in every place. Yet it lacks a sense of uniform values with which to interpret the events of which it shares an awareness. He suggests that art and literature can create for mankind one system of interpretation for good and evil deeds, showing us how to embrace the first and avoid the latter. While recognizing the power and influence of both art and literature, the author does not share Solzhenitsyn's optimism. Rather he reminds that both can be prostituted and become mere propaganda tools. Posits that neither can ever become the yardstick for human behavior because they are expressions of sinful men. Concludes that Jesus alone can unite the world in life. Without Him it can only be united in death.

Facing the Future

[Essay]

Announces plans to cease publication of Mission Messenger at the end of 1975. Recaps the history of the paper, how it was financed, published, and distributed. States that the current subscription list is almost 7500, with readers in many countries, in all fifty states, and in every province in Canada. Recounts how he began to write on fellowship in 1957 and that the title of his last bound volume (1975) will be "Fellowship." Announces his intention to destroy the files of private exchanges of a controversial nature, that most have already been burned, and that the address stencil will be destroyed. Resolves never to retire but to continue research and writing which constitute his greatest joy.

About the Word

[Essay]

First in a series of articles in which the author responds to questions posed to him over the years. Prefaces his responses by stating that he is offering his own opinion as to what he conceives of God's word as teaching, with no thought of being dogmatic or authoritarian. Maintains that his thinking is binding upon no one further than his own knowledge and conscience lead him to accept it as valid and true. Responds to the following: (1) Do you regard the entire Bible as being given by the revelation of God? (2) Do you make a difference between revelation and interpretation and if you do, what is it? (3) Why do we need to interpret God's word at all— why can we not just take it for what it says? (4) Do you take the position that the Bible is the word of God, or that the word of God is contained in the Bible? (5) How do we know that the men who were responsible for compiling the NT canon accepted and rejected the proper writings? (6) Were the documents which compose the canon sacred at the time of their writings or did they become sacred later on because they were gathered and compiled?

Gospel and Doctrine

[Essay]

Responds to questions posed by various individuals either in public forums or by private mail. Desires to avoid any semblance of pretense in reference to the matters discussed. Admits to limited knowledge and a restricted scope of understanding. Expresses an eagerness to share his understanding, agreeing with Lord Bacon that “the real use of all knowledge is, that we should dedicate that reason which was given us by God to the use of and advantage of man.” Pledges that nothing he writes will be dogmatic in tenor, as it does not become a servant to try and impose his will upon the other servants. The questions to which extensive responses are given are: (1) On what grounds do you make a distinction between the gospel of Christ and the apostolic doctrine? (2) Do you not make too big a deal out of this— is it really that important? (3) The objection has been made to your thinking that you believe one must be right about the gospel but after that you do not care what he thinks about the rest of the Bible— isn’t that a dangerous position to take? (4) I was born and reared in Kentucky, where we were taught to have nothing to do with premillennial congregations— are you implying that we were wrong in thus drawing a line?

About the Church

[Essay]

Responds to questions coming from an interview with a young brother doing a paper on the theme of the author’s writings concerning the nature of the church: (1) Do you regard the kingdom of God as identical with the church for which Jesus died? (2) In your previous writings you have expressed the thought that the word “church” should not be in the Bible. I do not understand what you mean. Can you explain it to me? (3) What false impressions can result from use of the word “church”? Granted you are right about it, what difference will it make? (4) Are you saying, then, that you do not believe that Jesus founded a church? (5) Do you have any real hope of brethren adopting the views you have enunciated, or do you think yours is a hopeless cause?

The Right Name

[Essay]

Responses to queries which arose during an open forum session in Illinois. The discussion turned to “the name of the church,” to which the questions in this article pertain: (1) I understand that you take the position that the church has no scriptural name. Is that correct? (2) But did not Jesus say “Upon this rock I will build my church,” and is it not his church? (3) How do you propose that we be distinguished from the denominations? (4) If the church is the bride of Christ should she not wear the name of her husband? (5) What do you do about the statement of Paul in Ephesians 3:14, 15? (6) Are you familiar with the argument used to get the name “Church of Christ” into Acts 20:2? (7) Are you saying that our usage of the name Church of Christ in our advertising is sectarian?

Baptism and Brethren

[Essay]

Responses to questions raised in a taped interview with several young preachers who had asked to meet with the author to explore his position: (1) You claim to be working for the unity of all the brethren, but I would like to know who you regard as your brethren. (2) You are aware, are you not, that a number of brethren are saying that you claim to be in fellowship with anyone who is a believer in Christ, regardless of whether such a person as been baptized or not? (3) What about this “brother in prospect” view that you are alleged to hold? Can you tell us what you mean by that expression? (4) Does the word of God make the distinction you make, or does it not use the same term for the whole birth process that you use for begetting? (5) Suppose that one who has sincerely believed dies before he is baptized what will happen to him? (6) But are you not saying that God may possibly overlook rebellion against his will? (7) If God does as you say, and takes the intent for the deed, why will not the man who is sprinkled be saved on his sprinkling?

The Cherished Freedom

[Essay]

No other right of citizens of the kingdom of light should be more cherished than that of liberty of opinion. The right to read scripture and meditate personally entails the corollary privilege of forming conclusions and making deductions for oneself. Abrogation of the right of private interpretation makes a farce of the right of personal investigation. Fellowship in the one body is not based upon acquiescence in the opinions of one another. Within “our own situation” this means receiving those with whom we differ first as brothers, then discussing together as equals in the Lord our differing views on matters such as instrumental music. Elders do not have a right to forbid opinions. They are forbidden to lord it over those assigned to their care. In the kingdom of heaven the shepherds are also sheep— they are not infallible. There is a difference between divine directives and dogmatic dictatorship.

More About Baptism

[Essay]

Continues to respond to questions related to baptism after noting that the current restoration movement has forsaken the ideals of its fathers and today would exclude even Alexander Campbell from its communion: (1) Would you receive a man into your fellowship on his “Baptist baptism”? (2) But is not a remission of sins the design of baptism, and if so, can one be saved who is baptized because he believes his sins have been remitted? (3) Can a person be baptized into Christ upon the basis of a wrong doctrine? (4) You said there were nine designs of baptism mentioned in the scriptures. Will you list them for us?

The Plan of Salvation

[Essay]

Answers to queries fielded from a good-natured group whose members were not all in agreement with the author’s views: (1) Is it true that you hold that there is no plan of salvation? (2) Did Walter Scott originate the idea that there were five steps? (3) Will you dare to name specifically one of the items in “the plan” which has been added without warrant? (4) Did not Philip require the eunuch to make the confession before he would baptize him according to Acts 8:37? (5) Would you make a comment about our practice of singing invitation hymns at the close of a service?

A Growing Army

[Essay]

Acknowledges recent correspondence with a number of young preaching brethren who are having difficulty remaining where they have been chafing at the sectarian restraints placed upon them. States that he has encouraged them to remain where they are and to continue sharing with the brethren with whom they have labored. Observes that it is tragic that brethren get their opinions mixed up with God's revelation, and those who can tell the difference are always in a predicament when they must work among those who value tradition above truth. Believes the best thing about the current dissatisfaction with the status quo is that it is not limited to one party but is directed against the whole divided and divisive philosophy which fragments God's children into hostile tribes. Predicts that more and more men will choose to be free in Christ and elect to exhibit their liberty by crossing back and forth over the silly barriers erected by debates over trivia.

Questions About Baptism

[Essay]

Responds to a letter regarding baptism from a correspondent and subscribes to Mission Messenger whom the author identifies as a writer of renown, a professor of theology in a seminary known throughout the world. Reproduces the letter in its entirety. The question is raised as to whether those who practice water baptism using a form other than immersion are in the same category as those who do not practice water baptism (e.g., Friends), and whether such persons may be regarded as brethren in any real sense. Examines the view of baptism held by members of the Society of friends and asserts that they are sadly misled by their assumption that baptism and the Lord Supper are mere ceremonials having no efficacy in conveying the blessings of God. Concludes that Quakers are not in the fellowship of the called-out ones. Posits that one is accountable (1) for what he knows and will not do; (2) for what he could know and refused to learn; (3) for what he professes to know and will not practice. Observes that one cannot be expected to obey a command which he has never learned. God will be the judge of whether one could have learned or not. With regard to sprinkling and pouring asserts that these do not constitute baptism in the context of scripture. States that when we speak of baptism we must mean what Jesus and the apostles meant. If we use a word they used but mean something else than they mean, we are either deceived or deceivers. Baptism is the very act appointed by God in which and by which one appropriates the forgiveness through grace by personal identification with Christ. Regarding the unimmersed sincere conscientious believer, states that he will regard them all as begotten of the Father and quickened by faith in the womb of grace. Pledges to treat them all as believers and not as pagans or heathen. But to regard those who are unimmersed as having been brought into the family relationship upon the same basis as those who have been immersed would make an empty farce of immersion and the testimony of the scriptures on the matter both useless and meaningless. This, states the author, "I cannot do and answer to my God with a clear conscience."

Thinking Out Loud

[Essay]

Serves up a potpourri of questions which have accumulated from various forums and seminars: (1) What do you think about "Situation Ethics" as advocated by Joseph Fletcher? (2) Don't you think it is dangerous to teach that the only law under which we operate and serve is love? (3) Do you suggest that we repeal all laws in the world and allow love to be the only consideration? (4) What you say about this really troubles me because we are plainly told that we are not without law to God, but are under law to Christ. How do you reconcile this with your views? (5) What about the commandments of Christ which we are obligated to keep? Are these not a law, and if they are not, why not? (6) Isn't it dangerous to teach people in the church that they are not under law? (7) Will your view ever come to be accepted and dominate the thinking of our brethren generally?

Strained Arguments

[Essay]

Takes issue with material in a pamphlet which uses Psalms 2:7 and Hebrews 1:5 to prove that since God used (and thus approves of) the “law of exclusion,” it should legitimately be used to exclude the use of instrumental music in public praise. Observes that if God ordained a “law of exclusion” which is that specific, it would appear that all of the brethren who respect the Lordship of Jesus could interpret it alike and exclude the same things. Rather than purify our religion, as the pamphlet proposes, it has fragmented our brethren into about two dozen exclusivistic parties. Suggests it might better be called the “law of exclusivism.” Denies that the author of Hebrews was making an argument based on the law of exclusion.

About Opinions

[Essay]

Takes note of the praiseworthy effort of those who undertook to restore the pristine unity of all believers in Christ. They captured the concept of oneness predicated upon belief in the reliance upon historical facts directly related to the person of Jesus and, at the same time, distinguished between those facts and any opinion formed concerning them. Considers it tragic that most of the heirs of the restoration movement have lost all consciousness of their great patrimony. Responds to questions related to the introduction: (1) What do you think was the greatest mistake in our history as a people? (2) Is there any practical solution to the problem we inherited? (3) Will it not be more effective to move more slowly and divest ourselves of our problems gradually? (4) You have been under scathing attack for your position on fellowship in a number of brotherhood papers lately. How do you react to this inwardly? (5) How would you react if they should “withdraw fellowship” from you? (6) Will your position not weaken discipline in the local congregation?

Reading History

[Essay]

Regards history as an account of the footprints of God in the passing centuries of human behavior. Points out that while in our day we are called upon to face up to modernistic philosophies, each one has its counterpart in the Greek schools of thought. States that the faith faces no new foe in this generation. Expresses concern for the weakness of the saints, not from the power of the enemy. Considers it impossible for a secondhand faith to gain the victory over “hollow and delusive speculations” because the one who holds it cannot defend it. Believes it will help us, when we are assailed by clever advocates of philosophy, to remember that we are battling against a foe which is not invincible and which has been put to flight upon numerous occasions. We are fighting upon familiar ground under the leadership of one who never lost a battle.

Visions of Love

[Essay]

Reflecting on Jesus’ new commandment, the author envisions the world of two millennia past. Among the images of an unfolding panorama, he sees John on the isle of Patmos. It occurred to him that love may mean loneliness, banishment waiting for the angels to come. And there was Paul in a prison in shackles, suggesting that the way of love, which never counts the cost, may be the road to prison. Finally, he observes a skull-like hill with three crosses. Over the center one the word love was arched in technicolor. He knew that here was the love center of the universe, and all human love was simply a beam or ray flashing from it.

Forced Conformity

[Essay]

Introduces a series of questions by observations related to religious intolerance, including quotations from John Milton, Erasmus of Rotterdam, Sebastian Castellio, John Locke, and Alexander Campbell. Takes note of a frantic wave of exclusion currently sweeping through Churches of Christ in which some congregations appear to have been victimized by power-hungry dictatorships which reserve unto themselves the power to save or condemn. Responds to the following: (1) But are not elders charged with regulating opinions of members? (2) If elders cannot draw a line on the opinions held by brethren, who can? (3) Why should one not divest himself of his opinions if it creates problems for others?

Applied Dogmatism

[Essay]

Pursues further the serious problem created when dogmatism leads to despotism. Deals primarily with abuses of the eldership; cites numerous examples in which elders denied redress of grievances, prohibited the distribution of written materials with which they were in disagreement, threatened members with having their names removed from the church roster for being absent, without prior permission, for three consecutive Sundays, imposed a ban on association with anyone who happened to associate with anyone who was dismissed for his views on the millennium, withdrew from a couple for failure to deny they had experienced the presence of the Holy Spirit in a miraculous way. Observes that such occurrences run counter to the very spirit which Jesus came to inculcate. Points out that such actions freeze ignorance at the present level, place a premium upon spiritual illiteracy, and enshrine the status quo as the ultimate of heaven's plan. While admiring shepherds who look with love upon the flock of God, deplores those who become drunken upon the wine of their self-importance and who play God with the lives of others.

Statement of Conviction

[Essay]

A Summary of the author's views related to fellowship, which he refers to as the fellowship of the Spirit and defines as the sharing of eternal life, the life of God. Asserts that no man has the power to extend to us a share in eternal life. Consequently, no man has the power to withdraw it. Considers it downright silly to talk about "withdrawing fellowship" from other brethren. Regards fellowship as having the everlasting arms around us, riding on eagle's wings, basking in the sunlight of a love so great that it soars above human understanding. Acknowledges having once mistaken a life of stale conformity for the glorious communion of the Spirit. Observes that sincere men who love God will never see everything alike, and to demand that they do so as a basis for fellowship is but to kindle the flames of schism. Such a course will only make bigger hypocrites. Suggests that brethren who differ ought minimally to be able to work together up to the point of division. Would like to know on what ground the plain teaching of the scriptures on loving and receiving the brethren is ignored. Asks whether the silence of God is to be interpreted so as to countermand the revelation of God. Concludes with a statement of personal conviction regarding fellowship.

Letters to the Editor

[Essay]

Responses to questions contained in letters to the editor:

(1) How can you justify the fact that you seem to preach for the Christian Church as much as you do for the Church of Christ? (2) How can you help people see the light if you fellowship them in things that are wrong? (3) Isn't all this talk about unity in diversity a real come-off? Is that unity at all? (4) What can I do to encourage the unity of the believers of which you speak? (5) I am a Junior in high school and I wanted to start a rap session one night per week, but the elders will not allow us to have it at the church. What should I do? (6) I live in an apartment complex and I am alone every day until my husband returns from his office in the evening. Is there anything I might do to help with the work of Christ? (7) Are the efforts being made to encourage recognition of fellowship making any real progress that you can see? (8) To what factor in your own approach do you attribute the growth of interest in fellowship and unity?

Return to Sanity

[Essay]

Tells about an unexpected visit from a student from a “loyal school” in Florida who had been warned about the “liberalism” of Ketcherside but after reading one of the bound volumes of Mission Messenger became a regular reader of the journal. He had come to apologize for the way he had regarded the author and for the things he had said about him. The author contends that we are starting to burst out of our shells and breathe the air of freedom. States that he constantly receives letters from every state in the nation in which brethren confess they are changing their position. Urges that we must abandon our unsavory attitudes and discard our unwholesome trappings and with unbroken courage for the future begin anew the trek toward sanity and renewal.

Two More Years

[Essay]

Rationale and observations concerning the editor’s plan to cease publishing Mission Messenger at the end of 1975.

Defining My Purpose

[Essay]

Defines his purpose for essays in the current year. Is chiefly concerned with our use and abuse of words selected by the Holy Spirit to convey the thoughts of the divine mind. Points out that Alexander Campbell gave top priority to recapturing “the vocabulary of the Holy Spirit” as requisite to producing a reformation. From this idea came the slogan “we speak where the Bible speaks, and remain silent where the Bible is silent.” Yet it wasn’t long before it was being quoted to exclude those who could not conscientiously conform. Believes that a disorderly and indiscriminate form of speech contributes to a deranged and perplexed body of believers. We can never restore peace and harmony in the Spirit if we do not know what the Spirit revealed, and we can never know what the Spirit revealed if we use the terms he employed in a sense which he never intended. Suggests two ways by which the truth can be obscured and made to appear indecisive: (1) taking terms which have a specific application in God's word and giving them a general scope (e.g., the use of the word "church"); (2) taking general terms and restricting them to certain specific things (e.g., the use of the word "ministry").

Who Is Sectarian

[Essay]

A response to a letter from a brother in Arkansas reacting to the author's intimation that the segment of the restoration movement with which the correspondent is affiliated is a sect. The author recalls the day when he too shared the same sectarian outlook, as well as the shock he experienced from suddenly realizing that he had been defending a sectarian image couched in a non-sectarian plea— opposing God's purpose by his own bigotry and intolerant attitude. Insists that those who make tests of fellowship out of things God has not made conditions of salvation are not Christians only. Notes that by creating a special segment of "antis" the brother from Arkansas automatically puts himself in a special segment of "pros" and becomes as sectarian as those whom he wants to separate and segregate. Acknowledges being in the one body with every member of the Church of Christ or Christian Church who is in Christ, along with a lot of folk who are not in either one. Confesses that he was able to escape partisan antagonism the day he was able to admit publicly that he had been wrong about fellowship all his life. Not only did he recognize that he was mistaken, but that he was actually defeating God's eternal purpose when he thought he was advancing it.

The Scotch Influence

[Essay]

Comments on statements from Alexander Campbell in which he notes that in the confession of Peter that Jesus was the Messiah, the Son of the living God, we find all that is peculiar to Christianity, adding "A clear perception, and a cordial belief of these two facts will make a man a Christian." All that follows in one's life thereafter, in terms of growth in the image of God, "is but the mere result of a proper apprehension of, and conformity to this confession." These statements by Campbell are characterized by the author as the "first shaft of light from the rising sun" which enabled him to eventually recognize that every party among us sprung from another creed— another belief bound as being essential to fellowship. Notes that "in our zeal to make better Christians we were un-Christianizing them In other words, whatever it is to which one must subscribe to be received into fellowship by any community is the creed of that community, and that community is built upon a different rock than that upon which Jesus built his own. Every party is based upon a creedal foundation. Concludes with a quote from John Locke regarding conditions of Christian communion.

The Carnal Spirit

[Essay]

The party spirit causes one to regard those of his party as infallible in interpretation and wholly consecrated to God. Yet every party tolerates in its ranks those who are greedy, covetous, and envious while castigating others whose only crime is that of intellectual honesty. Recalls the days when he, as a factional leader, stood before an audience and accused brethren by name whom he had never met and whose writings he had never critically examined. Wishes he could excuse such an uncharitable attitude upon the basis of youth and immaturity, but recognizes that it was evil and vicious and contrary to the spirit and instruction of the Lord of life. Notes that Satan never did a better job for populating hell than when he convinced man that compassion is compromise, fellowship is failure, and walking in love is weakness in the Spirit.

The Clergy System

[Essay]

Discusses what he considers to be one of the gravest errors into which the religious world has ever fallen—the rise of the clergy system with its unwarranted and unscriptural distinction between “clergy” and “laity.” Never has there been a more serious imposition upon the kingdom of heaven, and never another more widely accepted. It is the one which will be virtually impossible to overcome. While there is nothing seriously wrong with the mere words clergy and laity, the creating of a distinction between them is fraught with danger. Describes the characteristics of the Levitical priesthood and its distinction between priests and the people they served. But points out that the cross of Christ forever wiped out all such distinctions. Every child of God is now a priest. But like the trembling multitude at the foot of Horeb, we did not want God speaking to us. We were afraid to be sons. So we wanted worship to be something done for us, carried out by trained actors. We have refused to believe that God does not dwell in temples made with hands, that we are the temple of God, that the only sanctuary God has on earth is a consecrated human heart. The praise of God is not intended to be a spectator sport. In Christ not one item of praise or spiritual performance is the exclusive right of a particular class. The purpose of special functionaries is to train God's people for works of service.

Not an Ambassador

[Essay]

Relates experiences with the “Jesus Folk,” many of whom are from homes where parents had no commitment to Christ. They do not question the origin of the scriptures or doubt the validity of what they teach. Some conclude they are the recipients of prophecies or direct messages from God. Notes that he is never confrontational but seeks out such and explains to them in private that our knowledge of God's will for our lives is by deeper insight into revealed truth and not by additional revelation. Points out that he has no ambassadorial power; there are no ambassadors for Christ alive today. Neither is he a prophet or revelator— the apostles and prophets to whom the revelation was made had no successors to office. Modern prophecies are generally the fruit of a meditative and contemplative heart suddenly rescued from despair and depression and brought back from the brink of death.

Error and Sin

[Essay]

While sin is the revolt against God— sometimes deliberate, sometimes through ignorance— of an accountable being, error, or simply being wrong or having faulty understanding, is not a sin. No one has yet apprehended all truth in its fullness; no generation exhausts the possibility of apprehension so that knowledge can be frozen at the level of that generation and all research cease. To attempt to freeze knowledge at a given level is actually to freeze ignorance. All sects demanding conformity are based upon the false premise that all honest men will reach the same conclusions when exposed to the same doctrinal revelation — any person that forms a divergent opinion is considered to be simply dishonest. Since none among us acknowledge that universality of opinion is attainable by thinking men, they elevate one issue and polarize around it, while exercising tolerance on many other matters. The issue or interpretation is made into a creed and becomes the foundation for a new sect. There are no error-free disciples of Jesus. There is room in Christ for those who are mistaken, else none of us could be in him. Being mistaken is not a sin unless it is deliberate and voluntary.

White or Black Shoes

[Essay]

After providing a brief background on the Dunkard Brethren and their efforts at restoration, notes that every restoration movement has two barrels at hand while studying the scriptures— one for what is binding and the other for what is not. The trouble arises because they cannot all agree on which things go in which barrel. Even after they get the party barrels filled to their satisfaction, someone always gets itchy fingers and lifts something out of one and throws it into the other. Then a fight breaks out and a new faction is spawned. Recently the Dunkard paper, Bible Monitor, published an article by a sister concerned with what she considered to be immodest dress— the wearing of white, pink, yellow, or blue shoes. She raises the question about the future of the Dunkard Brethren if this trend continues. The author notes that the Dunkard Brethren are right to urge modesty, but they are wrong in thinking it can be obtained by arbitrary selections bound upon others by human dogma. Observes that one can be pure in heart even if he has lapels on his coat as well as immoral without lapels.

Transforming Speech

[Essay]

Is convinced we are trapped into perpetuating a system which is not scriptural but which we feel we must hang on to. While all pay lip service to the priesthood of all believers, the thought that we should practice it has somehow escaped us. We've got a big team but nobody ever carries the ball but the coach—the rest stay in the huddle. Suggests four changes in our spiritual vocabulary which will help us to more nearly do what we timidly affirm we would like to do: (1) We need to quit talking about people “entering the ministry” when we mean taking up preaching as a profession. (2) We need to quit talking about people volunteering for “full time service” when referring to them accepting a special assignment. (3) We need to quit talking about people “leaving the ministry” when they take up other employment. (4) We need to quit making a big furor over those who propose to prepare for certain kinds of ministry to the exclusion of those who expect to pursue other avenues of service. We should not get rid of preachers. We can use more than we have, and we should support them and do so well. But we need to free them to take the good news to a perishing world. Why can we not learn to feed ourselves. Since we are all priests let's start acting like priests. Let's straighten up our vocabulary and straighten out our lives.

The Last Prophecy

[Essay]

When some of those present at the raising of Lazarus returned to Jerusalem to tell the Pharisees what Jesus had done, a meeting of the Sanhedrin was called. Caiaphas, the high priest, made the statement, “You do not realize that it is better for you that one man die for the people than that the whole nation perish.” John adds, “He did not say this on his own, but as high priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus would die for the Jewish nation, and not only for that nation but also for the scattered children of God, to bring them together and make them one.” God took the words of Caiaphas and used them as prophetic of the atonement of the unity of God’s scattered children. With his statement Jewish prophecy came to an end. So long as the children are not one, that long is the will of God not done on earth as it is in heaven. If he died to make us one, we should live to help realize that unity. God regards nothing as the body of Christ which contains fewer than all the saved of all the earth. We must receive one another where we are and as we are. We are called out of sin and called together in Christ that we may further the divine purpose of uniting the scattered flock.

Was That Thunder?

[Essay]

On one occasion Jesus cried out, “Father, glorify thy name.” Immediately a voice spoke from heaven. Some of those who heard the voice said that it was thunder. There are those today who cannot tell the difference between God speaking and thunder. A good example is the case of the feeding of the five thousand. It is suggested that the multitude all had a lunch stashed away but were selfish and didn’t want to share. It is alleged that Jesus’ act merely put the crowd to shame and caused them to take out their own food and eat. But no one living today can deny the miracles of Jesus. All he can do is question the veracity of the witnesses by showing either that they were not present or did not have adequate opportunity to know what transpired or that they were incompetent due to an ulterior motive or untrustworthy character. Matthew and John were present. They helped pass out the food. Mark records the disciples saying “they have nothing to eat.” Surely the writer would not have let this statement stand (they were writing long after the event) if it turned out to be untrue. Furthermore the very people Jesus fed wanted to make him king— an unlikely event if Jesus had done nothing more than inspire them to be unselfish.

The Changing Scene

[Essay]

Although the whole idea of a professional ministry is foreign to the very nature of the family of God, the practice has been around so long brethren do not want to re-consider it in the light of the word. They are victims of the amalgamation of the once-delivered faith with the influence of western civilization. At one time it was argued that we could not hold people without a good pulpit man. But then a revolution occurred in which “the establishment” came under fire. When directed at the religious establishment it focused on the clergyman, and his value hit a new low. The fault for this decline in the effectiveness of the paid professional clergy is not with preachers themselves, but with the system which we inherited. We’ve tried to make ourselves believe that it is of God. But it is not God’s doing. We have developed a machine which is not patterned after God’s design at all. We do not have the concept of ministry, fellowship, or service which was revealed by the apostles, and we are not about to return to the simplicity and unadorned worship of God which was a part of the freshness of the morning of the new creation. Then every congregation was a training center for every saint. We now “hold services” rather than render them, and this must be done by someone trained in the art because saints are no longer qualified to exhort and edify one another. Our task should be to determine the will of God and make it work rather than to devise and alternative.

Alice in Wonderland

[Essay]

Gives the background of Alice in Wonderland, then observes that like Alice, many people, the young in particular, are in search of their own identity. The world outside seems jumbled and mixed up. Often children can see what parents cannot due to their having insulated themselves from reality by the materialism in which they are wrapped up. Many, like Pablo Picasso, are alone within. States that one is never empty if his body is the temple of the Holy Spirit. There is a victory which overcomes the world and overcomes doubts. There is no problem of personal identity when Jesus is real within the soul—Jesus who said, I will never leave you nor forsake you.

What Happened?

[Essay]

How did the heirs of an effort to unity the Christian in all the sects become so hostile to one another? What happened to splinter it into two dozen factions? When the question was raised as to whether Aylett Raines should be admitted into the Mahoning Association, given his Universalist leanings, Thomas Campbell stated that he would put his right hand into the fire and have it burned off before he would raise it against him. When the followers of Alexander Campbell and those of Barton W. Stone met in Lexington, they received one another and embraced the unity of the Spirit. It was when a third generation arose that lesser men developed the fallacious notion that purity of doctrine could only be maintained by division of the body. In 1906 the formal division was recognized by the U. S. Census Bureau and men began to deal with issues by debate rather than by dialogue. Since that time we have divided ourselves out of influence with thinking people and rendered our plea for unity a joke. We need not remain in the trap. We must renounce the philosophy which severed us from one another; we must return to our first schism and undo it. If we fail to do so we will remain a fragmented people.

Into the Action

[Essay]

As a soldier enlisted to fight with the sword of the Spirit in allegiance to the King to recapture every province overrun by the implacable foe, he is particularly concerned with the abandoned field of higher education. The great university complexes represent the place where the action is. Considers it a personal obligation to capture this humanistic stronghold—capturing every thought and making it do obeisance to the King. Christian campus centers should be drill fields for training in the art and science of spiritual warfare. If they are used only as a place to associate with young Christians, a generation will pass and the revival of Greek philosophy and pantheism will pass unchallenged. We have not been called to hold the fort but to storm it. We are to guard the faith but also to share it. Jesus died for intellectuals as well as for the rest of the world. Proposes to stalk relentlessly every teacher of error, shadowing him until he finds the weakness in his reasoning, then moving in to capture his thinking for the Captain of our salvation. Points out that we have not been given a long-range rifle but a sword, which requires close infighting. The wisdom of this passing age can never overthrow the wisdom which is from above. But they were made to clash head-on. Our task is to bring the truth as it has been revealed into direct conflict. We must conquer or be conquered.

Pastoral Flypaper

[Essay]

Opines that like flies in flypaper, a lot of people are all bogged down in the semantics of the clergy system in the restoration movement. We were lured by the sectarian system and we have given up the struggle and are discouraged of ever achieving our goal. Our restoration fathers had much more to say about what they called “the one-man hired pastor system” than they ever did about any other problem that confronted them. Asserts that the system we now practice is without scriptural basis. By our actions we are denying the priesthood of all believers and the ministry of all the saints. Pastors in the primitive communities of the saints were not the preachers. They were bishops or overseers. They were not imported but selected from the flock. We, on the other hand, have adopted a new office and created a new officer to fill it. Our brethren were not converted to the task of serving, but of being served. So what can be done? (1) If you are employed to minister to a congregation, change your thinking. Remove the title from your letterhead. (2) Change the emphasis from delivering sermons to teaching the word. (3) Be a coach; educate people; train them by telling them how, showing them how, and by letting them do it! Work yourself out of a job! Concludes by calling for a radical revolution in the church, noting that there is a vast difference in the church as we have contrived it and the body of God’s dear son. Calls attention to the fact that the purpose of the fellowship of the saints is to give everyone the opportunity to develop to his fullest potential, to encourage and strengthen him for growth in grace as well as in knowledge of the truth.

The Art of Nitpicking

[Essay]

After giving the etymology of the word nitpicker, states that in the religious realm nitpickers are the people who major in minors, throw tantrums about trifles, and fragment saints over fly-specks. While the world around is grappling with prodigious problems, we tend to become unstrung and pursue gnats with a gun loaded for elephants— we think heaven is all agog about our issues. Nitpicking will destroy a home or a congregation. Nitpickers give the Lord one stalk of spearmint out of ten, but they don't have time to attend to such weightier matters as justice, mercy, and faith. The legalistic mind has a way of justifying the neglect of justice and mercy while making a great hullabaloo about things not nearly so important. It seems a shame that those who know “the power of Jesus’ name” should get so embroiled in fighting over insignificant matters.

The Common Error

[Essay]

Lord Salisbury said, “The commonest error in politics is sticking to the carcass of dead policies.” The author suggests that the idea of attempting to secure or maintain purity of doctrine and uniformity of opinion by division of the body of saints has been proven wholly unsuccessful. Our very first division ended the effectiveness of our appeal for unity, and directed most of our time, talent, and treasure toward fighting each other. As bad as things were in the seven congregations of Asia Minor, not once were the faithful few told to go out and start a loyal group. According to Paul the problem is simple—we haven't grown up and we are still carnal. It is time for those who have grown up to demonstrate it by healing the breaches. We live in a different age than the raw frontier culture which helped to spawn our divisions over opinions and interpretations which grew into traditions and made void the law of God against division among the saints. It is no honor to stick to the decaying carcass of dead policies. God did not wait until we all agreed with him before he reached down from heaven to take us in his arms. Nor can we wait until all see everything alike before we receive his other children.

Queen of Epistles

[Essay]

The first of a short series on Ephesians 4:1-16, dealing with God's secret for the edifying of the body. While this essay makes preliminary statements relative to the overall purpose and content of the epistle, it focuses on the first three verses which speak of a call, a walk, and an endeavor. Comments at length on the characteristics of lowliness, meekness, and long-suffering as they relate to the unity that is of the Spirit. Concludes that our real problem is in the love department. As human beings we are inclined to be selfish and childish—and we are that way. What we do not realize is that love is of God. It is poured out in our hearts by the Holy Spirit who has been given unto us. Our divisions did not come over “issues” at all. It is silly to wait until others see everything as you do before you love them. Just about the time you get things patched up, one of you will learn something new and upset the applecart again. Agape is unconquerable, indestructible benevolence which stops at nothing to achieve the good of the beloved. A lot of people will never see how love can conquer division while differences exist. Yet that's the only time it can conquer it. It is the Spirit dwelling within that binds us to God and to one another. The bond of peace is the tie that binds us in proper relationship to our brethren because we are in a proper relationship with God.

Simple Trusting Faith

[Essay]

Letters from many who read his book, Simple Trusting Faith (1969). Said the book was helpful but was very far from being simple. States he learned from this experience. While he is all for a rational approach in presenting a logical case for Christianity, we have to get faith down on the street level. It is doubtful that very many are led to the faith by erudite argument. While we will probably never be able to work out a systematic sequence of syllogistic proof which will overthrow skepticism, it is altogether possible that God never intended for us to try. Perhaps the faith has a built-in logic of its own. Faith has its difficulties, but the incredibilities of unbelief are so vast that their very existence constitutes an argument for the Christian faith.

One Body in Christ

[Essay]

Second in a series of essays on Ephesians 4:1-16. Observes that unity involves seven items which define and describe our calling and give it reality--each contributing strength to the whole and each deriving strength from the others. Asserts that the one body is not a sect nor a federation of sects, since all sects are post-apostolic. The one body is not a conglomeration of congregations. It is not composed of movements in history, although affected by them. The body never died and it did not have to be restored (the efforts of the Campbells, Stone, and Scott were designed to find a better way to please God than by splintering every time someone came up with a new theological insight). The one body is composed of individuals. It is composed of every child of God in the world, even though they may not recognize one another. It is not composed of those who have scored a passing grade on a theological comprehension test, but of those who know Jesus. Everlasting life is a personal relationship, not a memory feat. The one body is composed of every sincere immersed believer on earth.

The Ultimate Design

[Essay]

“What am I doing here” is the question of multiplied thousands in our world today. The modern world, nurtured on the idea that the supernatural is non-existent and that there is no message from above, has no answer. The scientist has no answer! The humanist has no answer! The hedonist has no answer! To dismiss God is not to straighten out your thinking, but to corkscrew your mind. The question should be what should I be doing here, and the answer is simple but sublime: The ultimate supreme purpose of man is to glorify God. He who glorifies God justifies his existence. But we have lifted the glory of God out of the world of reality and think of glorifying God as something we do in comfortable pews on Sunday. Yet none of this is part of God’s plan or purpose. Every deed is worship when done under the Lordship of Jesus! Jesus came to remove the barrier between the secular and the sacred. The litany of the lawnmower may be as sweet in the ears of God as singing in the choir, if it is accompanied by a thankful heart. We should strive to glorify God by the way we die as well as by the way we live. If one lives in the Lord he can die in the Lord. If we allow Him to live in us — which really means to allow Him to love all men through us, for that is what life is all about— we can magnify and glorify him by our death. One does not have to wait until after he dies to share the life of God. Glory can be experienced here and now.

One Spirit

[Essay]

Referring to his early days, recalls how the Spirit was confined to the pages of scripture. It was assumed that the more passages you could quote, the more of the Spirit you had (based on a misunderstanding of John 6:63). Confesses that it was a long time before he outgrew his error about the passage in which Jesus is contrasting the bread of life with manna. One reason for the skittishness about the Holy Spirit was that there were too many “holy rollers” who claimed to be guided directly by the Spirit. Acknowledges that it was his respect for the revelation of God which finally prevailed to lead him into a closer walk with Jesus through the Spirit. Admits that there are a lot of things about the Spirit that he does not know, but discovers more every time he studies the Word. Believes the Spirit helps in every phase of life to act more rationally. Best of all he enables us to love our enemies. The Holy Spirit dwells in us. Our bodies are his temple. He is a seal of ownership. He takes away any sense of loneliness. His is with us and in us! If all Jesus gave us was a book we are still orphans. An orphan needs someone, someone who understands and cares. The Spirit walks with us all the time. He is as interested in how we mow the lawn as in how we sing when the saints come together. It is through him that we have oneness.

One Hope

[Essay]

Third in a series of essays on Ephesians 4:1-16. Defines hope as joyous anticipation— desire and expectation compounded in exact proportions. The “one hope” is hope in the ultimate degree. It is victory over death at the very moment it looks like death is the victor. Hope is using death, which appears to be the key that locks you in, as the key that lets you out. Our hope rests upon the immutability of God’s promise and his oath. It is an anchor to the soul. Our hope is Jesus. He is not simply the answer to life. He is the life. Our hope is a living hope because of the resurrection without which there is absolutely no sense to the universe. Hope is the result of faith which is based upon the facts of history, facts which changed the course of the world when first announced by simple fishermen, slaves, and social outcasts. If we ever get over our intoxication with creeds and proclaim the resurrection, hope will return and darkness will once again flee away. There is one hope and it is unitive. It is the common hope of all who trust in Jesus. It is the golden thread woven into the unity of the Spirit on the loom of everlasting life. Hope will not be extinguished by the chill wind of death, because when a Christian dies he doesn’t leave home—he goes home!

One Lord

[Essay]

The fourth in a series of essays on Ephesians 4:1-16. While commenting on the majestic scenes of Revelation 19, notes that the leader was called Faithful and True. Asserts that absolute truth and absolute faith are found in a person— who is eternal life. These are identified with the living Word, which is not something said by God but the one who says it! He is the theos- (God) logos (Word) or theology of heaven. Theology is a person. Theology is Christ Jesus, not a course to be studied. His biography does not exhaust his being. Jesus is Lord! He is Lord of all men and of all things. He is Lord of the lawnmower. He is the Lord of light, life, and love. There is one Lord— the magnetic center toward which we are drawn. He defines the context or composition of the unity of the Spirit. Unity is not agreement upon interpretations, it is togetherness in Christ. Eternal life is not knowing all about the Bible, but knowing God and Jesus Christ whom he has sent.

One Faith

[Essay]

Fifth in a series of essays on Ephesians 4:1-16. Begins by pointing out what the one faith intended to secure the unity of the Spirit is not. It is not Catholicism, Lutheranism, or any other “ism”— not even Church of Christism (that bundle of views, explanations, and tradition which have been molded into a set of beliefs, to which all must subscribe in order to be received into and recognized as communicants in “The Church of Christ”). It is not composed of the twenty-seven books of what is mistakenly called the new testament (since the faith existed prior to their being written). The one faith is not and can never be conformity to a legalistic formula which gives kingdom status. The one faith is acceptance of the reality of the elemental trust that in death and by death Jesus opened up a new and living way through the curtain of his own flesh. The faith is pinpointed in history— there was a “before faith came” and an “after faith came” (Galatians 3:23, 25). The one faith is Jesus. He is the center of it and its circumference. He is the gospel personified. The faith for which we are to contend is the faith of the gospel. The gospel is the good news of what God has done for us in Jesus. Our faith is the response to that news in absolute surrender and unreserved trust. Ours is the visited planet. The one faith is acknowledgement of that supreme fact. It is the ground of hope.

One Baptism

[Essay]

Sixth in a series of essays on Ephesians 4:1-16. Quotes at length from Alexander Campbell regarding terms of admission into the community of faith: “The belief of one fact and submission to one institution . . . is all that is required.” The author reminds that there is one baptism, which regards as water baptism administered to penitent believers. Quotes William Barclay in support of his conclusion that immersion in water— not sprinkling— is the initiatory act into the fellowship, the means whereby the forgiveness of sins is personally appropriated. With this most scholars agree. This was the concept of the primitive saints. Does not believe the one baptism to be the baptism of the Holy Spirit (which he believes occurred only twice and was never again mentioned). Believes that every child of God receives the Spirit at the time he is born into the family. Affirms that there is no such thing as a child of God who does not have the Spirit of God.

One God

[Essay]

Seventh in a series of essays on Ephesians 4:1-16. Paul’s statement that there is one God does not refer to the existence of God. This is the capstone with which to crown his list of seven planks in the divine unity platform. Paul refers to the fact that God is the Father of all, which breathes a divine concern and speaks of tenderness and compassion. God is above all, which speaks of divine control. He is above all nature. God is above all history. He sees the end from the beginning. He is above all of his children. He is through all. This has to do with both communion and communication. The same God works through all of us— in proclamation, in preparation, in performance, and in production. God is in all, which speaks of companionship. The Spirit dwells in our bodies as temples— to strengthen our weakness, to supply our wants, and to share our worship.

Functioning Gifts

[Essay]

Eighth in a series of essays concerning Ephesians 4:1-16. Takes note of the seven things we hold in common, which create and make unity possible. Goes on to point out that each of us receives grace in a special way. From charis (grace) we have charisma (gift)— a gift which cannot be earned or secured by effort or practice. There is no such thing as a charismatic age since there has never been a non-charismatic age. The called-out community was created to enable every person to develop to the fullest potential in service to others. For this, training is required for which special functionaries were gifted: apostles and prophets (who laid the foundation of the reconciled community, who continue in their function without successors), evangelists (who were itinerate preachers of the gospel who taught and trained their converts and then moved on), and pastors (who are to be teachers). Discusses abuses of these functions.

Equipping the Saints

[Essay]

Ninth in a series of essays on Ephesians 4:1-16. The body is not one with ministers, but a body of ministers who must touch man physically, morally, mentally, and spiritually. It can never be wrong for the body to minister as did the head while he was in a body on earth. Every gift must be exercised in love— love for the unlovable, for the unlikable. Love is the only dynamic which will change the world. It was not Jesus' purpose in giving gifts to create a special caste to be trained and put up for hire. (1) Every gift is designed to be used for the good of all for the edification of the body. (2) The community of saints was created for the purpose of enabling every disciple to develop to the fullest degree in whatever area he is endowed by God. (3) Any system which operates so as to inhibit the use or development of any gift of God is detrimental to the cause of Christ. (4) The training and development of a special caste to minister, to the exclusion of the development of every member as ministers, is foreign to God's purpose and plan. The practice of hiring a man as the minister of a congregation of saints is without scriptural warrant. The purpose of the gifts (apostles, prophets, evangelists, and instructional shepherds) was to prepare God's people for works for service whereby the body builds itself up—God's method is to equip all the saints to function for the highest degree in the exercise of their gifts. The System has betrayed us into hiring someone as "our minister." Brethren are always seeking a minister instead of seeking to minister. The primitive saints did not gather to hear a sermon. They could all speak one by one, that all might be built up. The first thing we must do is to forget the concept of "church" and recover the concept of a family—in whom the Lord dwells. To have every member reach the stature of the fullness of Christ is the reason for all the training. We, however, have developed false standards of measurement. The result of proper training will be to protect members from becoming the victims of deception. Only when we substitute truth for deception can we help our brethren grow, but the truth must be spoken out of love. Unity plus togetherness plus work plus increase equals edification—the divine formula for body growth.

Time to Change

[Essay]

If it is hard for an individual to alter his course, it is even more difficult for an institution to do so. The same is true for every faction in the restoration movement. The non-instrument Churches of Christ are dominated by powerful leaders, governed by editorcracy. Although there are exceptions, they mostly remain underground. But reformation must continue because there are always persons in each party who love the truth more than party shibboleths and who will catch the vision and continue. All growth involves change. If we in “the restoration movement” expect to survive and have any impact upon this intellectual age, we must make some real changes: (1) We must change our vocabulary and speak not only where but as the Bible speaks, distinguishing gospel from doctrine, the new covenant and the new covenant scriptures; (2) We must change our view as to the utility of so-called church buildings and turn them into drill-grounds, filling-stations, and mess-halls for the army of God; (3) We must revise our thinking about ministry—to regard one man as “the minister” is to discourage every other man from thinking of himself as a minister; (4) We need to change our thinking on fellowship— stop equating it with endorsement and recognize that it is a condition created by the Holy Spirit in which we share, not something to be extended or withdrawn;; (5) we must change our emphasis on the motto we have proclaimed— love will not allow me to impose my concept of faith upon another’s realm of opinion. “The Church of Christ” in its present organizational sense cannot survive.

A Personal Visit

[Essay]

On the eve of the 37th and final year of the publication of Mission Messenger, the editor responds to multiple inquiries from subscribers as to why he is bringing the publication to an end. His list of reasons provides insight into his views on the purpose of the paper and his function as editor.

Another Gospel

[Essay]

During an open forum three men showed up and attempted to create a little havoc by accusing everyone present of teaching “another gospel.” On another occasion a brother stated that those who use individual containers in conjunction with the Lord’s Supper were advocating “another gospel.” Another correspondent indicated that the Sunday School is “another gospel.” All of these brethren are ignorant of the nature and content of the gospel, the situation in Galatia to which Paul addressed himself, and they are ignorant of what Paul meant by the term “another gospel.” The truth of the gospel of which Paul speaks to the Galatians is justification by faith. The gospel is the good news of what God has done in Jesus to bring man into a relationship with himself. The Galatian letter was not a part of the gospel message. One can be mistaken about a lot of things without perverting the gospel. To accuse one of advocating another gospel because he disagrees with your position upon some point of doctrine speaks more forcibly about your ignorance than about his. The one who is in danger of projecting another gospel is the one who make fellowship dependent not upon our relationship to God through the Spirit but upon agreement with his faction upon some point of theological deduction.

The Longest Prayer

[Essay]

Examines the longest recorded prayer in the new testament scriptures, as an introduction to a series of articles on the theme “one in Christ.” Observes that the glory which God gave Christ he gave to the disciples so that they could become perfectly one; explains the relationship between glory and oneness, pointing out that the glory of God signifies his presence. Notes that Jesus defines eternal life as knowing God. This is not mere recognition. Eternal life is experiencing God, sharing in the life of God, which is the essence of fellowship. Asserts that there is a great gulf fixed between the world and those who belong to Jesus. Jesus’ prayer is focused on the latter. To keep the disciples in the name of the Father was to hold them to his person as if the very reputation of Deity was at stake. There is no real joy obtainable except through Jesus. Knowing him is knowing joy. Our transformation from the state of abnormality created by sin to the reality of righteousness in Christ Jesus is predicated upon faith, and that faith is the natural result of an honest heart receiving the words of God. Jesus is the “Great Divide.” The world hates those who are not of it. The way we are preserved from the evil one is by sanctification. A sanctified person belongs to God; he is consecrated, and thus different. The “word” by which we are sanctified is that of the gospel— the truth about himself— not the apostolic doctrine. Belief in the Son of God is the dividing line across which men must come to be a part of this prayer. Oneness must be viewed from two different aspects: visible and invisible. The first is unity impressed upon us by the Spirit; the second is expressed by us through the Spirit. The unity for which Jesus prayed was that visible unity which can be seen by the world— which will lead the world to believe that God sent Jesus. We have allowed our views of things to become more important than belief in the Son. The world has seen this and found a very shallow view of the importance of faith. We will never see things alike. To be joined to each other as the Father and son are joined, we must have the divine nature. The only place we can ever be one is in Christ— sharing the common life of the Spirit, the love of the Divine Nature. The world will be won to believe in Christ, when those in the world who believe in Christ are one! It’s just that simple!

The Common Life (1975)

[Essay]

Recalling years of personal experience as a party leader within Churches of Christ, describes at length and in detail the outlook and behavior of those who are driven by the party spirit, pointing out the influence of the party leaders and their tactics for maintaining the status quo. Examines the historical North-South divide among these churches and comments on the racism by which they were characterized. Tells of his experience as he awoke to the reality of the sectarianism of which he had been a part. Proposes to share some things he has learned about fellowship. Provides an analysis of the word koinonia and the various words used to translate it into English. Notes that fellowship is created by a response to the call of the gospel. Fellowship is not and cannot be created or maintained by doctrinal conformity. It is a creation of the Holy Spirit. Fellowship does not imply endorsement as is clearly seen in the fellowship between Paul and the saints at Corinth, and more clearly in the fact that we are in the fellowship of the Father who obviously does not endorse our ignorance and inaccuracies. Uniformity of knowledge can never be the basis of fellowship because (1) all human knowledge is relative; (2) knowledge is not universal; and (3) all knowledge is affected by our past association and attainment. All sectarianism is born of fear and pride. Love is the answer to all our problems.

The Sharing of Life

[Essay]

An analysis and explanation of the first chapter of 1 John, which seeks to emphasize the nature of the fellowship of which we are partakers and lift it out of the pitiable state to which it has been subjected. First presents an explanation of first century Gnosticism which denied the incarnation upon which the whole Christian faith rested. Then examines the meaning of “this doctrine (2 John 9, 10) which has been used to justify all types of division within the Christian community, especially within Churches of Christ. Observes that the common life we share is eternal life, the life of God; that this sharing of the divine life is the fellowship into which we have been called by God. Since God does not condition his fellowship with us upon equality of understanding, then it cannot be a criteria for our relationship with each other. Argues that walking in the light as God is in the light (1:7) is loving as God loves; that sinlessness is not a condition of fellowship. Concludes that John wrote his epistle to enable the saints to stand against the wandering Gnostic teachers, observing that nothing is more important where the life of the body is being threatened than for the brethren to love one another.

The Legal Tangle

[Essay]

An exposé of legalism. Defines a legalist as one who seeks to attain and sustain righteousness by living up to the law. The legalist believes Jesus nailed one law to the cross only to hand down another one. Maintains that while justification is by divine declaration upon the basis of faith, if we were still under a written code and seeking to be justified by it we would be under condemnation. Every written code is weak for the same reason. God did not send another law. He sent his Son. Anyone who seeks to convert the new covenant scriptures into a written code by which a man must be justified makes them simply another law of sin and death. The apostolic letters were never intended to be a compilation of legal statutes as even a cursory reading of the letters will reveal. Yet the legalist must get it down on paper. Laying down the law is easier to do than living up to love. Responds to several questions often asked of him in open forums: (1) If the new testament scriptures are not the new covenant, why do you quote from them to validate your position and refer to them as authority for what you say? (2) If we are obligated to obey the commands of Christ what difference does it make whether we regard them as a written code of laws or not? (3) If the apostolic letters are not intended to be a written code, why were they written at all? (4) If we are not under law, why does Paul speak of the law of faith? (5) But did not Paul say he was under the law of Christ? Makes four suggestions that may help restore sanity to the restoration movement: (1) Begin to regard “the church” as a family, as the entire collection of the redeemed— not limited to those who have a correct understanding of certain doctrinal points. (2) Put the new covenant scriptures back into proper perspective— not as a compilation of laws under grace but as love letters, a recipe book for life, a roadmap to show how to follow the Way, as white lines on the edges of the highway. (3) Do not confuse the restoration movement with the “Lord’s church.” (4) Begin to enjoy the freedom with which Christ has set you free without engaging in oratory or flag-waving; start by visiting other groups and looking for things you can commend. In closing shares a personal strategy (ART) of associating with all who regard Jesus as the Messiah of God’s Son, recognizing as brothers all who have been born of the water and of the Spirit, and teaming up with others to relieve human suffering.

The Art of Peacemaking

[Essay]

Defines peace as a state or condition in which a proper relationship is maintained so that tranquility prevails. States that he is writing about peace because he thinks our sectarian squabbles are a disgrace to the faith which we profess. All we have done for the past one hundred years is to prove to the world that we cannot get along with one another in Christ. Through our missionaries our divisions affect the whole world. Lists five essentials to a strategy of peace: (1) We must have an understanding of the nature of peace; (2) All peacemakers must begin with themselves— achieve a well-integrated personality, which only Jesus can do for us; (3) Peacemakers must see division for what it is— a sin against the authority of God; (4) Peacemakers must carry on their effort with undaunted faith— confidence, trust, or assurance— that unity is the will of God; (5) Peacemakers must be persons of prayer. Within the restoration movement we have developed certain presuppositions which serve as a screen through which is filtered all that we say. This stifles original thinking and freezes ignorance at the current level.

The Spiritual Eclipse

[Essay]

While Paul wrote to the Ephesians about the complex wisdom of God's plan being worked out through the church in accordance with his timeless purpose centered in Christ, there are few today who think of the church in such categories. It seems that the church has come between herself and Christ, eclipsing the sun of righteousness. In many places God's purpose is no longer conceived as centered in Christ but in the organization we have contrived and passed off as the church for which Jesus died. In many places the church exists chiefly to keep itself in existence— as the perpetuator of tradition of which we have become victims. We confuse our traditions with God's will and stubbornly resist change. It is possible that we are concerned with defending our distinctiveness and proclaiming our peculiarities, until we have not time for, and little interest in sharing the grace of God.

What Lack We Yet?

[Essay]

Comments on a book compiled by J. D. Thomas consisting of forty-seven contributions from representatives of non-instrumental Churches of Christ having a variety of views. Commends the editor for his fairness. Notes that every contributor, without exception, would be branded as a “brother in error” by someone else in the book (and adds that they would all be right!). Observes that it is obvious that unity in diversity is the “in thing” at last among a people who have always practiced it as ardently as they have denied doing so. Asks, If we are a people who “speak where the Bible speaks,” how does it happen that we lack so much? Concludes that if we still lack a book full of things, we probably should be a little more charitable to other honest folk who also lack a few items (a sentiment echoed in part by Roy Osborne’s article in the book).

Discerning the Body

[Essay]

Observes that the two places where Paul puts extra stress on the fact that there is one body are Romans 12:4, 5, and 1 Corinthians 12:12-27, where the subject is introduced in a direct context of spiritual gifts. While most of our brethren use the apostolic expression relative to the unit of the body to draw a line of demarcation between their own religious community and what they refer to as “the denominations,” these passages were not written in such a context. Paul was asserting that there is one body to encourage all who were in it to function in harmony as a unit by each complimenting the other through the exercise of divergent gifts. There is no more apt illustration of an organism functioning as a unit than the human body (a grand demonstration of unity in diversity). The phrase “member of the church” never occurs in scripture. The term (melos) means a limb or organ. While all members have not the same function, all have some function. Paul introduces the Roman passage dealing with the one body by urging all of us to think with sober judgment— out of a desire to act wisely with prudence. We have divergent functions (Paul mentions seven). We are not all the same. It is the purpose and responsibility of the congregation to provide a framework and atmosphere in which every member could use his gifts and develop to his fullest potential. Any congregation which sublimates any gift of God is acting in opposition to God’s purpose. Paul’s thesis is that since there is but one body, and all are members of it, they should function together and in harmony.

No Discord

[Essay]

Examines Paul’s exposition in 1 Corinthians 12 of the illustration that the unity we have in Christ is that of the body. Takes note of the fact that the Spirit manifests himself in different ways to different persons, bestowing gifts on those who can use them— not selfishly, but for the benefit of the body. We are interrelated and there must be a correlation of our efforts. The design of the body is to provide for the functioning of the gifts; the purpose of the gifts is to provide for the functioning of the body. God only created one body. When we see the body we see Jesus. When the body is at work, Jesus is at work. It is important, therefore, that we discern the body. All who are joined to Jesus are one, regardless of racial and ethnic problems that indicate division. It is impossible to have a body with a single organ--not one of the senses is expendable. The fact that Paul says that God arranged the organs in the body as he chose affirms (contrary to theories of evolution) design, order, and arrangement. Paul mentions three kinds of body parts for special concern— weaker, less honorable, and unrepresentable. The secret to avoiding discord in the body is to give greater honor to the inferior parts (gives several illustrations from personal experience). God's ideal is for the members to have the same care one for another. We show our concern for Christ by our care for one another. We best serve the divine purpose when we serve in harmony and strive to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. If we truly love Jesus we will not become dissidents or drop-outs from the spiritual body.

A Startling Proposal

[Essay]

Proposes that “Churches of Christ” supply the incentive to answer the prayer of Jesus for the oneness of all believers with new and daring approaches which will capture the attention and imagination of our day and focus them once more upon Jesus as the Lord of the whole of life. Gives reasons why he thinks the brethren may have a greater hope of success than any other group on the contemporary scene: (1) We began as “a project to unite the Christians in all of the sects.” (2) We have historic ties with many of the sects still in existence. (3) We do not need to secure permission from a central hierarchy. (4) Historically, our brethren already have to their credit the actual union of two groups into one. (5) We have recaptured many values which are basic to any step toward uniting the Christians among the sects. (6) A sincere attempt to understand all believers and to promote a real thrust for unity may better come from us than from most others. (7) In a few places the brethren have already demonstrated that it is possible to create a favorable atmosphere for further discussion with the entire religious community. Lists probable objections to this proposal: (1) We should first settle our differences. (2) Other believers will be suspicious of our motives and tactics. (3) It will result in compromise. Concludes by stating that he is personally convinced that the “Churches of Christ” in many localities could spark the greatest renewal of interest in the kingdom of heaven that has been since the days of Martin Luther.

The Apostolic Commission

[Essay]

Expands upon the meaning, implications, and scope of the so-called “great commission” as recorded in Matthew. Maintains that the expression is unscriptural (although not anti-scriptural) in that no inspired writer ever referred to it as such. Notes that while it is almost universally assumed that the commission was given to the church, and that we still operate under its terms, a little calm reasoning will show that this assumption is without warrant. Denies that the church could carry it out even if it had been given the responsibility. Supports his position by pointing out first that this was the second of two commissions given to the apostles (who were uniquely “ambassadors”) and that the church is no more under the second than it was under the first. Secondly, calls attention to the fact that in order to carry out the second commission one would need the ability to speak foreign languages which were new to them— which power Jesus assured the apostles they would have. Thirdly, the apostles had to fulfill the commission during their lifetime or they did not fulfill it at all. Fourthly, when Paul wrote to the Romans (10:18) he stated, with regard to the preaching necessary for faith, that “their voice has gone out to all the earth . . . to the ends of the world.” And to the Colossians he specifically said that the gospel had been preached to every creature under heaven (1:23). This, he concludes, represents the completion of the apostolic commission. Cites several commentators who agree that “the end” that was to come following the preaching of the gospel “throughout the world” (Mt. 24:14), refers to the destruction of Jerusalem.

The Delivered Faith

[Essay]

First of three essays expounding on the message of Jude. States that Jude needs to be studied because of the way he deals with a crisis situation. Takes note of the fact that Jude is self-effacing and willing to be known by his relationship to his more prominent brother, James. Makes numerous comments regarding Jude’s introduction to his epistle, examining and defining several words such as love, mercy, grace, and peace. Points out that although Jude states he was very eager to write concerning our common salvation, and had begun to do so, he then received information which caused him to alter his plans. His letter is an appeal (as the word parakaleo would indicate), an appeal to contend (epagonizesthai), which contains the word “agonize”) for the faith. The word “faith” does not refer to the entire new testament canon (since it hadn’t yet been written) but to our absolute trust in Jesus as God’s Son and Anointed. The scriptures constitute the testimony of that faith. The faith is not a philosophy, a compilation of laws or a compendium of ethical precepts. The faith came. It is historical. There was a time “before faith came” (Galatians 3:23) and a time designated as “after faith came” (Galatians 3:25). The faith is both a gift and a response to that gift, and both are personal. The faith was proclaimed fully on the first Pentecost after the resurrection of our Lord. Not a word was ever added to the faith. The reason Jude wrote this letter under such pressure was to warn of saboteurs (probably Gnostic teachers) who had wormed their way into the church and were perverting the grace of God into licentiousness.

Yesterday's Wisdom

[Essay]

An overview of the book of Proverbs based on the author's earlier book of radio sermons titled Proven Proverbs (1947). Suggests that with the onset of world trade, under Solomon's administration, the first nine chapters of the book may be viewed as a workbook prepared by the diplomatic corp for the orientation of young men applying for jobs in the Department of State. Chapters 10 and following represent the kind of encapsulated philosophy with which kings of the day sought to instruct their subjects. One of the interesting things about the "workbook" is its warning of dangers in the city to which an unsuspecting small-town youth would be exposed. It warns against street gangs, the red-light district, bored married women whose husbands are commercial travelers, excessive sleeping, staying calm under pressure, staying off the bottle, and co-signing a note for a bank loan. For those wanting to get their heads screwed on right suggests using the divine lug wrench provided in the book of Proverbs.

A Necessary Reminder

[Essay]

Second of a two-part analysis of Jude. Calls attention to the fact that Jude refers to God's judgment in connection with three historical events— the destruction of the Israelites in the wilderness, the casting down of the angels who sinned, and the visitation of wrath upon Sodom and Gomorrah and neighboring cities— as an illustration of what a serious crime it is in divine sight to reject the testimony related to the divinity of Jesus. Sees in Jude's reference to God having saved the Israelites out of Egypt only to destroy some afterward, a clear denial of the idea that a child of God cannot so sin as to be eternally lost. Opines that one who wills to accept Christ can will to reject him: God's children are willing, but not will-less. Believes that Jude's reference to the angels is to show that just as Michael and the angels were called to do battle to vindicate the right of God to rule, so the holy people are called upon to contend for the faith which asserts the right of Christ to rule. Regarding Jude's reference to Sodom and Gomorrah, states that there are times when the mass is so corrupting that salt cannot affect it and must be withdrawn for its own preservation. Takes the opportunity to point out the clear condemnation by scripture of homosexual and lesbian acts. To show the consummate folly of mere men reviling against higher beings Jude records that even Michael would not speak evil of the devil. In presenting this argument Jude does not quote from scripture but apparently from, The Assumption of Moses. Jude notes that these men (like Gnostic teachers) deride what they do not understand rather than admit their ignorance, and in those things they knew by instinct they destroyed themselves. Concludes asserting that no man denies the faith once delivered who sincerely believes that Jesus was raised up and made both Lord and Christ or by taking a position upon the issues which have divided us. Many of our problems stem from the fact that we confuse the faith with the letters addressed to those who are in it.

Letters I Receive

[Essay]

A sometimes humorous review of letters received by the author, most of which are critical of his writings. Suspects the best thing that ever happened to him was to learn that one does not have to agree with him to be received of God and recognized as his child. Recalls that it was while aboard an American Airlines plane that the thought first hit him that we are all brothers in error, just about different things. Is convinced that wherever men are free to think there will be differences. Believes our brethren have no real concept of being a “Christian only,” and must categorize everyone they meet— the result of trying to identify with God through an organization rather than through the indwelling Spirit. Is convinced that we can whip the problem of division. But we must quit making tests of fellowship out of the things that divide us. Asserts that God did not make conditions of salvation out of these things (instrumental music, Sunday Schools, individual cups, etc.), so we must quit making them into conditions of union and communion. Urges that we hold our opinions and not forge them into dogma; that we not violate conscience, but that we not measure others by it. If it is a sin to be divided, then we must give up our divisions and unite!

Wandering Stars

[Essay]

The last of a three-part study of Jude. Examines verses 12-25. Cites Barclay and Hase in explaining the Love Feast which Gnostic heretics used as occasions for attempted seduction of the women present. Those who deny the identity of Jesus are like the Upas tree which produces death to any bird or animal attracted to it. The Gnostic regarded those who trusted in revelation as ignorant of the greater mysteries of knowledge which came from inner light, and yet it was for those that the gloom of darkness was reserved. Observes that the statement regarding Enoch may be a quote from the Book of Enoch. Verse 16 contains five indictments of these disreputable characters.

Verses 17-19 calls to mind a quotation from the apostles (Paul and Peter) in which they warn of scoffers who set up divisions by their infiltration of the love feasts. In verse 20 we have the four ingredients essential to the successful spiritual life. Verse 21-A warns against letting one's love for God grow cold through exposure to evil. Verse 21-B encourages one to wait for the mercy of Jesus unto eternal life—the life of God. Verses 22 and 23 speak of those who are in doubt, those who must be dealt with abruptly, and those whose garments are so corrupted that one must hate the garment, but not the person. Verses 24 and 25 contain an ascription of praise of him who is able to keep us from slipping on the ski trails of life and to make us stand without blemish in the great presentation ceremony in the face of his glory.

Secular and Holy

[Essay]

The coming of Jesus in the flesh marked the end of the distinction between secular and holy. Jesus came not to bring us a new religion, but to make void “religion” as an approach to God. In Christ there are no holy days or places, as there are no unholy days or places. If God’s Spirit is dwelling in a person, wherever he goes is sanctified. Every act one does in Christ Jesus in reverence to him is an act of worship. Paul wrote to the Colossians “Whatever you do . . . do it all in the name of the Lord Jesus. . . .” We should regard that “whatever” to be as big as God made it.

What Is Justification?

[Essay]

A Sunday evening talk at Oak Hill Chapel on the meaning of the word justification as it was used by the writers of the new covenant scriptures. Sin destroys the relationship with God because the nature of the divine requires that he be clothed in absolute justice and impartiality. All are guilty before God and no one can undo a single act. Justification by faith is man's only option. To justify means to acquit or absolve from guilt. It does not mean that one is guiltless. Justification never means to make one worthy. But the grace of God has declared us worthy. Our faith is counted to us for justification. Jesus atoned for our sin. All we need to do is identify with him, absolutely and uncompromisingly. This identification is made by faith. The alternatives are "a righteousness of my own" or "the righteousness from God." The divine motivation for justification is grace; the blood of Jesus is the atoning basis; the name of Jesus is the authoritative domain; the enabling response is faith only. Although Voltaire saw a contradiction between Paul and James, Paul affirms the fact of justification by faith; while James describes the quality of faith which maintains the relationship with God. A faith without works is like a watch without works. Justification is directly related to justice, which sternly requires that for every sin there must be proper payment. Sin is an offence against the majesty of God; the elevation of the ego to the chair of the sovereign, the supreme worship of self.

Killed By Attitudes

[Essay]

Tells the story of an elderly couple that over the years killed the church under their leadership due to an attitude wielded as a club, while thinking they were doing God a service. They loved the church, but not the people. A lot of things get blamed when our human attitude is the real culprit. Tells two other stories, also from personal experience, of preachers who strangled themselves by their own attitude, always wondering what was wrong with everyone else but themselves. A bitterly critical attitude can change but there must first come a deep conviction of the sinfulness of one's present state. One can mouth the words of Jesus all of his life and never really allow them to filter down into his inner being and transform him. Perhaps nothing is quite so important in this age in which our lot has been cast as to identify with people in their sheer agony and to bring the dynamic of love into their shattered and tormented lives. The kind of selfishness which manifests itself in Pharisaic disdain and indifference has no place in the lives of those who are followers of Jesus.

The Party Spirit

[Essay]

When we read through Paul's list of works of the flesh it is easy to filter out the ones we do not want to see, as for instance the "party spirit" which has ripped to shreds the cloak of Christian union. The greatest tragedy of the party spirit is the influence it wields over the individual heart, breeding hostility and destroying intimate relationships. The party spirit makes cannibals of men. It is the exact opposite of love. (Compares at length the characteristics of love with those of the party spirit.) The party spirit will shrivel the soul and sear the emotions. It is the spirit of arm's length rather than of the encircling arms. It shakes fists rather than hands. It carries a chip on the shoulder rather than a concern in the soul. It confuses values and overthrows priorities. To overcome the party spirit we must come to recognize the magnitude of the divine provision for our salvation. The more one meditates upon it, the less he is inclined to estrangement and hostility. The party spirit can be conquered just as we can overcome any work of the flesh, but we must want to be free from it. We must recognize it for what it is, and we must apply ourselves by starting to undo our errors by starting to associate with those from whom we are separated. Peacemakers do not wait for others to come to them.

Hail and Farewell

[\[Essay\]](#)

The last essay by the author in the last issue of Mission Messenger. Reviews the history and purpose of the journal; expresses gratitude for those who were responsible for supporting it through the years, and reviews his mission and message as reflected in the pages of the journal. Makes several prognostications based on what he has seen in his extensive travel and work among the various branches of the Stone-Campbell restoration movement. Concludes as in most of his essays, with an appeal for maintaining the unity of the Spirit.

MISSION MESSENGER

Alphabetical Index of Essays

Main Menu

A • B • C • D • E • F • G • H • I • J • K • L • M • N • O • P • Q • R • S • T • U • V
• W • Y

A

A Brighter Day

A College Student

A Dangerous Reply

A Faith for the Future

A Good Question \(1960\)

A Good Question \(1967\)

A Great Abuse

A Growing Army

A Law of Life

A Letter from Texas

A Marked Copy

A Muddled Movement

A Necessary Reminder

A New Conservation Corps

A Non-Partisan Faith

A Pattern of Freedom

A Personal Decision

A Personal Visit

A Realistic Attitude

A Redemptive Society

A Sad Commentary

A Sectarian Name

A Sense of Values

A Serious Charge

A Sincere Offer

A Sound Mind (1)

A Sound Mind (2)

A Sound Mind (3)

A Sound Mind (4)

A Spiritual Adventure

A Startling Proposal

A Universe on Tiptoe

A Wine Party

About Authority

About Movements

About Opinions (1973)

About Our Buildings

About the Church

About the Word

About Theology

Absolute Proof

Abuse of Scripture

Acceptable Unto God

According to the Pattern

Acts of Worship

Address to Sincere Believers

Adventures in Religion (1)

Adventures in Religion (2)

Adventures in Religion (3)

Adventures in Religion (4)

Adventures in Religion (5)

Adventures in Religion (6)

Adventures in Religion (7)

Adventures in Religion (8)

Adventures in Religion (9)

Adventures in Religion (10)

Alice in Wonderland

An Old Remedy

An Open Proposition

Analysis of Apostasy

Analysis of Heresy

Analysis of Legalism

Another Gospel (1965)

Another Gospel (1974)

Answer to objections (No. 1)

Answer to objections (No. 2)

Answer to objections (No. 3)

Answering the Buzzer

Apples of Gold

Applied Dogmatism

Approach to Authority

Aprons and overalls

Are They Apostates?

Are We a Denomination?

Are You a Liberal?

Are You Loyal?

Argument from Silence

As Shaw Said It

At the Milepost

Authority of the Word

B

Background of Restoration

Baptism and Brethren

Basis of Authority

Belief and Unbelief

Beware of Gribbles

Big Preachers

Body and Spirit

Brethren in Slavery

Brother Thomas on Unity

Brothers at Law

C

Carnal Weapons

Cause for Concern

Causing Divisions

Christ and the Church

Christian Church Baptism

Christians in Babylon

Church Autonomy

Church of Christ Party

Church of the Firstborn

Churches of God

Class Controversy

Clergy and Laity

Combat Cooties

Commandoes for Christ

Commandos I Have Known

Conflict with Caesar

Conformity or Diversity

Confusion of Tongues

Consecrated Diversity

Contrary to the Doctrine

Crossing the Frontier

Crumbling Walls

D

Decline of Factionalism

Defining My Purpose

Developing Our Aim

Discerning the Body

Disciples of Yesterday

Divisive Party Loyalties

Doctrine and Doctrines

Drawing the Line

E

Ecumenical Encounter

Elders and Children

End of an Era

Equipping the Saints

Ernest Beam and Unity

Error and Sin

Example and Pioneer

Except They Be Agreed

Explaining My Position

F

Facing a Dilemma

Facing Death

Facing the Facts

Facing the Future (1959)

Facing the Future (1972)

Facing the Issues

Facing the Issues

Facing the New Year

Factional Flames

Faith and Baptism

False Teachers

False Tests

Family Culture

Fear and Suspicion

Fear of Love

Flesh and Faith

Flesh and Spirit

Forced Conformity

Fractured Fellowship

Freedom and Ethics

Freedom in Christ

Full Speed Ahead!

Functioning Gifts

G

Getting Untangled

Gleanings

God and Surveyor 3

God and Time

God Works for Good

God's Man Yes

God's Two Books

Gospel and Doctrine (1965)

Gospel and Doctrine (1973)

Grace and Faith

Grilling the Editor

H

Hail and Farewell

Harvard Experience

Harvest of Peace

Heralds of Hope

Heretics and Reform

Hippies and Missions

Holy Places and Days

How Far Is Too Far?

I

Incendiary Instruments

Indiana Trip

Inside the Circle

Instrumental Music (1)

Instrumental Music (2)

Instrumental Music (3)

Internal Power

Into the Action

Introduction to Worship

Irrelevant Antagonism

Is God Dead?

Is It New Doctrine?

Is the War Over?

J

Jealousy and Envy

Joint Participation

K

Keep the Door Open

Killed By Attitudes

L

Lapsing Into Latin

Law and Love

Law and Morals

Letters I Receive

Letters to the Editor

Liberty and Expediency

Life's Final Star

Light and Fellowship

Living in Fear

Living Letters

M

Making Allowances (1957)

Making Allowances (1958)

Meeting an Author

Members of One Body

Men and Morals

Ministry and Ministers

Miracle at the Pool

Modern Man and Belief

Moral Agency

Moral Philosophy

More About Baptism

More Questions

More Than Conquerors

Must Elders Be Married? \(1\)

Must Elders Be Married? \(2\)

My Defense

My Only Creed

N

No Creed But Christ

No Discord

No Human Invention

Not An Ambassador

Not Many Fathers

Not of Faith

O

Old John

On Being Naive

On the Rocks

One Baptism

One Body in Christ

One Day of Life

One Faith

One God

One Hope

One Lord

One Man's Faith

One Spirit

Only One Church

Opening Our Windows

Opinions and Unity

Orthodoxy and Reform

Our Abiding Heritage

Our Attitude

Our Drawing Power

Our History and Our Division

Our Personal Pattern

Our Plea

Our Position

Our Real Estate

Our Real Purpose

Our Real Task

Our Special Mission

Our Tragic Traditions

Out of This World (1967)

P

Paper Curtains

Pastoral Flypaper

Pattern for Disaster

Peace Must Be Waged

Peace or Sword?

Pentecost

Playing It Safe

Positive and Negative

Preaching Christ

Preaching the Word in Writing

Pride and Shame

Priests and Pontiffs

Problems in Attitude

Prophet and Priest

Q

Queen of Epistles

Quenching the Spirit (1967)

Quenching the Spirit (1971)

Queries to the Editor (No. 1)

Queries to the Editor (No. 2)

Queries to the Editor (1964)

Questions About Baptism

Questions to the Editor

R

Re-Baptism

Reading History

Receive Him Not Into Your House

Receive Him Not

Red Sky at Morning

Rejecting and Returning

Religion of Fact

Repairing Lines

Reply to Brother Lemmons (1963, No. 9)

Reply to brother Lemmons (1963, No. 10)

Reply to brother Lemmons (1963, No. 12)

Reply to brother Thomas

Reply to brother Zerr

Reply to the Foregoing (1963, No. 10)

Reply to the Foregoing (1963, No. 11)

Reply to the Foregoing (1963, No. 11)

Reply to the Foregoing (1963, No. 12)

Reply to the Foregoing (1963, No. 12)

Report of a Trip

Restoration Astray

Restoration

Restoring a Movement

Restoring Restoration

Return to Sanity

Reviving Hope

Right On!

Rivers of Living Water

S

Saying Nice Things

Schisms and Parties

Searching for the Answer

Sectarianism

Secular and Holy

Seeking Guidance

Simple Solutions

Simple Trusting Faith

Size and Importance

Smoking and Cancer

Sources of Our Patterns

Speaking Unto Edification

Spirit and Word

Spiritual Argonauts

Spiritual Insight

Spiritual Pioneers

Statement of Aims

Statement of Conviction

Statement of Fact

Stop, Look, Listen!

Strained Arguments

Strategy for Peace

Straws in the Wind

Student Attitudes

Student Revolution

Sunset in the West

T

Taking a Stand

Teacher and Disciple

Terms of Communion

That Glorious Generosity

That Inner Illumination

That Satisfying Bread

That They All May Be One (1)

That They All May Be One (2)

That They All May Be One (3)

That They All May Be One (4)

That They All May Be One (5)

That They All May Be One (6)

That They All May Be One (7)

That They All May Be One (8)

That They All May Be One (9)

The Apostolic Attitude

The Apostolic Commission

The Art of Nitpicking

The Art of Peacemaking

The Ascent of Faith

The Authority Totem

The Awesome Patience

The Backlash

The Baobab Tree

The Baptism of John

The Basis of Authority

The Basis of Faith

The Bed of Procrustes

The Bible and Reformation

The Big Mistake

The Body of Christ

The Butting Brethren

The Capture of Thought

The Carnal Spirit

The Changing Scene

The Cherished Freedom

The Church Christ Founded

The Church of God

The Church Speaks of Discovering and Unleashing Hidden Powers

The Claims of Rome

The Class Controversy

The Clergy and the Church

The Clergy of God

The Clergy System (1974)

The Common Error

The Common Life (1962)

The Common Life (1975)

The Community of God

The Complete Eclipse

The Concerned Ones

The Concerned Remnant

The Conflict of the Ages

The Conservative Party

The Covenant with Abraham

The Covenant with Noah

The Crisis of Change

The Cultural Challenge

The Death of a Dream

The Delivered Faith

The Denouement

The Devil and Factions

The Differing Gifts

The Divine Guarantee

The Divine Provisions

The Divine Revelation

The Dynamic of God

The Ebbing Tide

The Fading Fear

The Fellowship of the Unashamed

The Fiddlers

The First Testament

The Fulness of Godhood

The Greatest of These

The Growth of Division

The Hands of Folly

The Happiness Pattern

The Headless Horseman

The Helping Spirit

The Higher Path

The Hope That Cheers

The Horses of Glaucus

The Human Factor

The Ignorance of Wisdom

The Inaugural Address

The Indwelling Spirit (1960)

The Indwelling Spirit (1971)

The Last Prophecy

The Legal Tangle

The Life and the Joy

The Longest Prayer

The Magnificent Concern

The Majestic Experience

The Making of History

The Manifested Life

The Meaning of Grace

The Ministry of the Cross and the Growth of the Church

The Mission of Wholeness

The Moment of Truth

The Money Pattern

The Moral Being

The Name of the Bride

The Name Pattern

The Nature of Reform

The Need for Reform

The New Covenant

The New Humanity

The Old Lady

The One Faith

The One Foundation

The Optimistic View

The Party Spirit (1958)

The Party Spirit (1975)

The Peaceful Harvest

The Perfect Church

The Pervading Silence

The Place

The Plan of Salvation

The Planned Experience

The Plea for Unity

The Pleasure of God

The Power of Christ

The Power of Christianity

The Power of Hope

The Power of Prayer

The Priority Value

The Prodigal Father

The Progress of Reform

The Protestant Picture

The Question Box

The Real Jews

The Realm of Truth

The Reason Why

The Reasonable Worship

The Reconciling Community

The Recovery of Reason

The Relation of Baptism to Fellowship

The Restoration Principle

The Revolution

The Right Name

The Rim of the Wheel

The Road to Gaza

The Road to Ruin

The Running Sands

The Sacred Quest

The Sand Creek Address

The Satisfying Bread

The Scale of Values

The Scattered Flock

The Scotch Influence

The Secret Plan

The Sectarian Game

The Secular Influence

The Sharing of Life

The Sheep on the Hills

The Slave Mentality

The Solvent of Doubt

The Spirit and Liberty (1957)

The Spirit and Liberty (1968)

The Spirit and Unity

The Spirit at Work

The Spirit of Adoption

The Spirit of Life

The Spiritual Eclipse

The Spiritual Principle

The Spring of Action

The Stumblingblock

The Supper Pattern

The Supreme Court

The Supreme Dynamic

The Supreme Need

The Sword of Damocles

The Tether

The Thing That Counts

The Three Births

The Times of the Stork

The Title of the Church

The Touch of Life

The Two Great Foes

The Two Spirits

The Ultimate Conquest

The Ultimate Design

The Uncommon Faith

The Unequal Yoke (1962)

The Unequal Yoke (1963)

The Unmistakable Scent

The Unrecognized Unity

The Unsearchable Riches

The Use of Liberty

The Way of Holiness

The Works of Darkness

There's A Difference

These Tremendous Issues

Things to Come

Thinking Out Loud

This Is Life Eternal

Thoughts on Fellowship (1)

Thoughts on Fellowship (2)

Thoughts on Fellowship (3)

Thoughts on Fellowship (4)

Thoughts on Fellowship (5)

Thoughts on Fellowship (6)

Thoughts on Fellowship (7)

Thoughts on Fellowship (8)

Thoughts on Fellowship (9)

Thoughts on Fellowship (10)

Thoughts on Fellowship (11)

Thoughts on Fellowship (12)

Thoughts on Fellowship (13)

Thoughts on Repentance

Through the Dust

Throwing Down Error

Time for Change

To My Catholic Friends

To Think About

Transforming Speech

Transplanted Hearts

Turning on the Light

Twentieth Century Witness

Two Letters

Two Years More

Two Sons of God

Two Unity Movements

U

Unity and Identity

Unity in Christ

Unity in Diversity

V

Visions of Love

Vocabulary Problems

W

Walking in the Light

Walking Together

Wandering Stars

War Bulletins

War in Heaven

Was That Thunder?

What Divides Us?

What Happened?

What Is Christendom?

What Is Heresy? (1957)

What Is Heresy? (1963)

What Is Justification?

What Is Your Life?

What Lack We Yet?

Where Would Paul Attend?

White or Black Shoes

Who Is Sectarian?

Wild Grapes

Wishful Thinking

With Brotherly Love

With Simple Joy

Withdraw Yourself

Words of Lipscomb

Worship and Money

Y

Yesterday's Wisdom

MISSION MESSENGER

Index of Topics

Main Menu

Apologetics

Authority

Baptism

Catholicism

Christianity

Church Buildings

Church History

Church Of Christ

Church, Name Of

Church, Nature Of

Church, Organization

Clergy

Collection, see Offering

Commentary Ephesians

Commentary Jude

Commentary On Psalms

Commentary On Proverbs

Commentary On Romans

Conformity

Contemporary Issues

Congregational Autonomy

Covenants

Creeds

Death

Division

Ethics

Elders

Evangelist

Faith

Faith Vs Opinion

False Teacher

Fellowship

Freedom In Christ

Freedom To Disagree

Giving, see Offering

God, Existence Of

God, Nature Of

Gospel

Gospel Vs Doctrine

Grace

Great Commission

Heresy

Holy Spirit

Incarnation

Instrumental Music

Interpretation

Jesus, Nature Of

Justification

Knowledge Of God

Legalism

Love (Agape)

Man

Ministry

Miracles

Miscellaneous

Mission

Mission Messenger

Moral Agency

Morality

New Covenant

Non-Fermented Grape Juice

Obedience

Offering

One Cup

Orthodoxy

Outreach

Patternism

Peace

Personal

Power Of God

Purpose of God

Priesthood of Believers

Questions Answered

Racism

Reformation

Repentance

Restoration Movement

Revelation

Salvation

Scripture

Sectarianism

Secular vs. Sacred

Secularization

Silence of Scripture, see Authority

Space Exploration

Spiritual Development

Spiritual Outlook

Spiritual Warfare

Sunday School

Theology

Tobacco Use Of

Truth

Twisted Scriptures

Unity

Vocabulary of the Spirit

Western Civilization, Moral Decline Of

Worship

MISSION MESSENGER

Topical Index of Essays

Main Menu

APOLOGETICS

Modern Man and Belief (1966)

Absolute Proof (1968)

The Solvent of Doubt (1968)

Moral Philosophy (1968)

AUTHORITY

Approach to Authority

The Authority Totem

Authority of the Word

Facing the Issues

Argument from Silence

BAPTISM

Christian Church Baptism

The Road to Gaza

The New Covenant

The Relation of Baptism to Fellowship

Re-Baptism

Faith and Baptism

Baptism and Brethren

More About Baptism

Questions About Baptism

CATHOLICISM

To My Catholic Friends

CHRISTIANITY

The Power of Christianity

A Law of Life

This Is Life Eternal

The One Foundation

CHURCH BUILDINGS

About Our Buildings

CHURCH HISTORY

One Man's Faith

CHURCH OF CHRIST

Pride and Shame

A Good Question

Christians in Babylon

Are We a Denomination?

Where Would Paul Attend?

Prophet and Priest

The Moment of Truth

Twentieth Century Witness

Crumbling Walls

The Need for Reform

The Mission of Wholeness

A College Student

Two Letters

Student Attitudes

The Backlash

The Hope That Cheers

Our Tragic Traditions

What Lack We Yet?

A Startling Proposal

CHURCH, NAME OF

That They All May Be One (1)

That They All May Be One (2)

The Name of the Bride

Church of the Firstborn

The Right Name

CHURCH, NATURE OF

Positive and Negative

Church of Christ Party

Members of One Body

Unity and Identity

The Perfect Church

Only One Church

Christ and the Church

The Real Jews

A Redemptive Society

The Church of God

The Old Lady

The Fiddlers

The Baobab Tree

The Headless Horseman

Speaking Unto Edification

The Community of God

That Glorious Generosity

The Body of Christ

About the Church

The Spiritual Eclipse

Discerning the Body

No Discord

CHURCH, ORGANIZATION AND FUNCTION

That They All May Be One (1)

That They All May Be One (2)

That They All May Be One (3)

That They All May Be One (4)

That They All May Be One (5)

That They All May Be One (6)

That They All May Be One (7)

That They All May Be One (8)

That They All May Be One (9)

War Bulletins

CLERGY SYSTEM

The Clergy and the Church

A Sad Commentary

Big Preachers

The Road to Ruin

Clergy and Laity

The Clergy of God

The Clergy System

The Changing Scene

Pastoral Flypaper

COMMENTARY EPHESIANS

Queen of Epistles

One Body in Christ

One Spirit

One Hope

One Lord

One Faith

One Baptism

One God

Functioning Gifts

COMMENTARY JUDE

The Delivered Faith

A Necessary Reminder

Wandering Stars

COMMENTARY ON PSALMS

An Old Remedy

COMMENTARY PROVERBS

Yesterday's Wisdom

COMMENTARY ROMANS

The Ascent of Faith

Flesh and Spirit

The Spirit of Life

The Indwelling Spirit (1971)

The Spirit of Adoption

A Universe on Tiptoe

The Power of Hope

God Works for Good

More Than Conquerors

The Reasonable Worship

The Differing Gifts

With Brotherly Love

CONFORMITY

The Bed of Procrustes

Conformity or Diversity

The Crisis of Change

Forced Conformity

Applied Dogmatism

CONTEMPORARY ISSUES

Men and Morals

CONGREGATIONAL AUTONOMY

A Great Abuse

COVENANTS

A Spiritual Adventure

The Covenant with Noah

The Covenant with Abraham

Flesh and Faith

The First Testament

Analysis of Legalism

The New Covenant

The Title of the Church

The Helping Spirit

The Inaugural Address

CREEDS

No Creed But Christ

My Only Creed

What Happened?

DEATH

The Planned Experience

DIVISION

Authority of the Word

The Common Error

ETHICS

Meeting an Author

ELDERS

Must Elders Be Married? (1)

Must Elders Be Married? (2)

Elders and Children

EVANGELIST

Not Many Fathers

FAITH

The Indwelling Spirit (1960)

Modern Man and Belief

Belief and Unbelief

A Good Question

Absolute Proof

The Solvent of Doubt

Simple Trusting Faith

FAITH vs OPINION

Facing the Issues

FALSE TEACHER

False Teachers

FELLOWSHIP

Drawing the Line

Thoughts on Fellowship (1)

Religion of Fact

Thoughts on Fellowship (2)

Thoughts on Fellowship (3)

Thoughts on Fellowship (4)

Thoughts on Fellowship (5)

Thoughts on Fellowship (6)

Thoughts on Fellowship (7)

Thoughts on Fellowship (8)

Thoughts on Fellowship (9)

Thoughts on Fellowship (10)

Thoughts on Fellowship (11)

Thoughts on Fellowship (12)

Fractured Fellowship

Light and Fellowship

Thoughts on Fellowship (13)

Stop, Look, Listen!

Queries to the Editor (No. 1)

Joint Participation

The Plea for Unity

Explaining My Position

The Common Life (1962)

Confusion of Tongues

The Scattered Flock

Walking Together

The Concerned Ones

Terms of Communion

The Relation of Baptism to Fellowship

The Life and the Joy

The Realm of Truth

The Progress of Reform

Throwing Down Error

Statement of Conviction

The Common Life (1975)

The Sharing of Life

FREEDOM IN CHRIST

The Use of Liberty

The Slave Mentality

The Cherished Freedom

A Growing Army

FREEDOM TO DISAGREE

Freedom in Christ

The Spirit and Liberty

GOD, EXISTENCE OF

Transplanted Hearts

The Place

GOD, NATURE OF

God and Time

The Secret Plan

GOSPEL

No Human Invention

GOSPEL vs DOCTRINE

Another Gospel (1965)

Gospel and Doctrine (1973)

GRACE

The Meaning of Grace

The Magnificent Concern

GREAT COMMISSION

The Apostolic Commission

HERESY

What Is Heresy? (1957)

Analysis of Heresy

What Is Heresy? (1963)

Heretics and Reform

HOLY SPIRIT

The Divine Guarantee

The Two Spirits

The Spirit and Unity

Rivers of Living Water

Body and Spirit

The Spirit and Liberty (1968)

That Inner Illumination

Taking a Stand

Spirit and Word

Quenching the Spirit (1971)

The Spirit at Work

Seeking Guidance

INCARNATION

Size and Importance

The Uncommon Faith

INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC

Instrumental Music (1)

Instrumental Music (2)

Instrumental Music (3)

Incendiary Instruments

The Stumblingblock

The Question Box

More Questions

INTERPRETATION

Ernest Beam and Unity

The Supreme Court

The Way of Holiness

Strained Arguments

JESUS, NATURE

God's Man Yes

About Theology

JUSTIFICATION

What Is Heresy? (1963)

KNOWLEDGE OF GOD

The Fulness of Godhood

LEGALISM

The Two Great Foes

The Legal Tangle

LOVE (AGAPE)

Fear of Love

Making Allowances

The Higher Path

The Greatest of These

The Rim of the Wheel

The Dynamic of God

Moral Agency

Moral Philosophy

Meeting an Author

The Spring of Action

The Supreme Dynamic

Visions of Love

MAN

The Times of the Stork

MINISTRY

Ministry and Ministers

Consecrated Diversity

MIRACLES

Was That Thunder?

MISCELLANEOUS

Report of a Trip

Facing the New Year

Indiana Trip

There's A Difference

Pentecost

Is God Dead?

Family Culture

MISSION

Our Real Estate

Hippies and Missions

The Fellowship of the Unashamed

Priests and Pontiffs

The Ministry of the Cross and the Growth of the Church

Heralds of Hope

Commandoes for Christ

The Concerned Remnant

The Touch of Life

Spiritual Pioneers

The Cultural Challenge

Commandos I Have Known

The Capture of Thought

Our Real Task

The Apostolic Commission

MISSION MESSENGER

Statement of Fact

Apples of Gold

A Personal Decision

At the Milepost

Our Real Purpose

Things to Come

Facing the Future (1972)

MORAL AGENCY

The Moral Being

MORALITY

The Moral Being

Men and Morals

Freedom and Ethics

Law and Morals

The Supreme Dynamic

NEW COVENANT

The Big Mistake

The Complete Eclipse

Living Letters

NON-FERMENTED GRAPE JUICE

A Wine Party

OBEDIENCE

Acceptable Unto God

OFFERING (Collection; Giving)

Acts of Worship

Worship and Money

The Magnificent Concern

The Money Pattern

ONE CUP

The Thing That Counts

ORTHODOXY

Orthodoxy and Reform

OUTREACH

The Reconciling Community (1967)

Belief and Unbelief (1967)

A Good Question (1967)

Priests and Pontiffs (1968)

Commandos I Have Known (1969)

The Apostolic Commission (1975)

PATTERNISM

According to the Pattern

Our Personal Pattern

A Pattern of Freedom

The Supper Pattern

Sources of Our Patterns

The Money Pattern

The Name Pattern

A Sectarian Name

The Happiness Pattern

PEACE

The Human Factor (1961)

Peace or Sword? (1965)

The Dynamic of God (1967)

The Art of Peacemaking (1975)

PERSONAL

Our Plea

Our Attitude

Facing the Future (1959)

Our Position

Teacher and Disciple

A Sincere Offer

My Defense

The Making of History

Repairing Lines

Reply to Brother Lemmons

Reply to brother Lemmons

Reply to the foregoing

Reply to the foregoing

Reply to the foregoing

Reply to the foregoing

Reply to brother Lemmons

Reply to the foregoing

Are You a Liberal?

The Pervading Silence

Statement of Aims

The Nature of Reform

A Non-Partisan Faith

A Marked Copy

One Day of Life

An Open Proposition

Harvard Experience

Meeting an Author

Student Revolution

The Butting Brethren

Return to Sanity

The Scotch Influence

A Personal Visit

Letters I Receive

Hail and Farewell

POWER OF GOD

The Spirit and Liberty (1968)

Internal Power

PURPOSE OF GOD

The Nature of Reform (1967)

The Awesome Patience (1972)

The Ultimate Design (1974)

The Spiritual Eclipse (1975)

PRIESTHOOD OF BELIEVERS

Through the Dust

Quenching the Spirit (1967)

The Nature of Reform (1967)

Transforming Speech

QUESTIONS

Grilling the Editor

Queries to the Editor (No. 1)

Queries to the Editor (No. 2)

Queries to the Editor (1964)

Questions to the Editor

The Question Box

More Questions

Thinking Out Loud

Letters to the Editor

RACISM

Inside the Circle

REFORMATION

The Nature of Reform (1967)

The Bible and Reformation (1967)

Restoring a Movement (1967)

The Progress of Reform (1967)

The Ministry of the Cross and the Growth of the Church (1968)

Heralds of Hope (1968)

Conflict with Caesar (1968)

Commandoes for Christ (1969)

The Concerned Remnant (1969)

The Touch of Life (1969)

Opening Our Windows (1969)

Spiritual Pioneers (1969)

The Complete Eclipse (1969)

Right On! (1970)

A Faith for the Future (1972)

About Movements (1972)

A Startling Proposal (1975)

REPENTANCE

Thoughts on Repentance

RESTORATION

Disciples of Yesterday

Is It New Doctrine?

Restoration

What Divides Us?

The Revolution

Restoring Restoration

Background of Restoration

Restoration Astray

A Brighter Day

The Growth of Division

Rejecting and Returning

The Sand Creek Address

Brothers at Law

Factional Flames

Decline of Factionalism

The Hands of Folly

Facing a Dilemma

The Optimistic View

Our History and Our Division

Ecumenical Encounter

The Restoration Principle

Two Unity Movements

The Bible and Reformation

The Reconciling Community

Restoring a Movement

The Progress of Reform

The Stumblingblock

Opening Our Windows

The Fading Fear

Words of Lipscomb

The Death of a Dream

About Movements

About Opinions

Time for Change

REVELATION

Law and Love

God's Two Books

Basis of Authority

The Basis of Faith

The Ignorance of Wisdom

The Basis of Authority

Our Abiding Heritage

The Divine Revelation

The Unsearchable Riches

About the Word

SALVATION

Grace and Faith

The Three Births

The Divine Provisions

The Denouement

The Plan of Salvation

SCRIPTURE

The Apostolic Attitude

SECTARIANISM

The Sheep on the Hills

Wild Grapes

Peace Must Be Waged

A Serious Charge

Making Allowances

The Party Spirit (1958)

Reply to brother Zerr

Are You Loyal?

Straws in the Wind

Causing Divisions

What Divides Us?

A Dangerous Reply

Living in Fear

False Tests

A Muddled Movement

Cause for Concern

Old John

The Horses of Glaucus

Preaching Christ

Sectarianism

Divisive Party Loyalties

Paper Curtains

Lapsing Into Latin

The Tether

Beware of Gribbles

Simple Solutions

The Devil and Factions

A Letter from Texas

The Reason Why

About Authority

Right On!

Brother Thomas on Unity

Irrelevant Antagonism

The Sectarian Game

What Is Christendom?

Who Is Sectarian?

The Carnal Spirit

White or Black Shoes

The Art of Nitpicking

The Party Spirit (1975)

To Think About

SECULAR vs. SACRED

Holy Places and Days

Secular and Holy

SECULARIZATION

The Secular Influence

SPACE EXPLORATION

God and Surveyor 3

SPIRITUAL DEVELOPMENT

The Power of Prayer

A Sound Mind (1)

A Sound Mind (2)

A Sound Mind (3)

A Sound Mind (4)

A New Conservation Corps

Our Drawing Power

The New Humanity

Crossing the Frontier

The Sacred Quest

The Church Speaks of Discovering and Unleashing Hidden Powers

Full Speed Ahead!

Spiritual Insight

The Peaceful Harvest

Example and Pioneer

Jealousy and Envy

The Supreme Need

SPIRITUAL OUTLOOK

A Sense of Values

Adventures in Religion (1)

Adventures in Religion (2)

Adventures in Religion (3)

Adventures in Religion (4)

Adventures in Religion (5)

Adventures in Religion (6)

Adventures in Religion (7)

Adventures in Religion (8)

Adventures in Religion (9)

Adventures in Religion (10)

War in Heaven

Preaching the Word in Writing

Aprons and overalls

Facing Death

The Power of Christ

The Spiritual Principle

The Priority Value

Miracle at the Pool

That Satisfying Bread

What Is Your Life?

The Scale of Values

Reading History

Not An Ambassador

Error and Sin

Alice in Wonderland

The Ultimate Design

Killed By Attitudes

SPIRITUAL WARFARE

Is the War Over?

The Ultimate Conquest

The Conflict of the Ages

Carnal Weapons

Combat Cooties

Out of This World

Conflict with Caesar

The Unmistakable Scent

Vocabulary Problems

Internal Power

More Than Conquerors

Two Sons of God

Into the Action

SUNDAY SCHOOL

Class Controversy

The Class Controversy

THEOLOGY

About Theology

TOBACCO

Brethren in Slavery

Smoking and Cancer

Churches of God

TRUTH

The Sacred Quest

The Realm of Truth

Spiritual Argonauts

TWISTED SCRIPTURES

Abuse of Scripture

Are They Apostates?

The Unequal Yoke (1962)

Walking Together

Receive Him Not Into Your House

The Unequal Yoke (1963)

The Manifested Life

Gospel and Doctrine (1965)

Peace or Sword?

Contrary to the Doctrine

Not of Faith

Analysis of Apostasy

Walking in the Light

Receive Him Not

The Baptism of John

Withdraw Yourselves

The One Faith

Except They Be Agreed

The Works of Darkness

Worship and Money

Another Gospel (1974)

UNITY

Peace Must Be Waged

Address to Sincere Believers

Facing the Facts

Our Special Mission

Opinions and Unity

Unity in Diversity

The Plea for Unity

The Human Factor

How Far Is Too Far?

Getting Untangled

Problems in Attitude

On Being Naive

Fear and Suspicion

Wishful Thinking

Reply to brother Thomas

A Realistic Attitude

Saying Nice Things

With Simple Joy

The Unrecognized Unity

Playing It Safe

Keep the Door Open

Unity in Christ

Strategy for Peace

Life's Final Star

Liberty and Expediency

On the Rocks

As Shaw Said It

The Question Box

More Questions

Authority of the Word

These Tremendous Issues

Answering the Buzzer

The Recovery of Reason

A Faith for the Future

The Majestic Experience

The Awesome Patience

The Last Prophecy

The Common Error

Equipping the Saints

The Longest Prayer

The Art of Peacemaking

VOCABULARY OF THE SPIRIT

False Teachers (1961)

Doctrine and Doctrines

Jealousy and Envy

Through the Dust

Vocabulary Problems

Defining My Purpose

Transforming Speech

Another Gospel (1974)

WESTERN CIVILIZATION (MORAL DECLINE)

Church Autonomy

The Ebbing Tide

The Running Sands

Sunset in the West

The Sword of Damocles

Red Sky at Morning

Pattern for Disaster

The Claims of Rome

The Protestant Picture

Turning on the Light

The Conservative Party

Schisms and Parties

Searching for the Answer

Developing Our Aim

WORSHIP

Introduction to Worship

Holy Places and Days

Acts of Worship

Worship and Money

Speaking Unto Edification

The Reasonable Worship
